So here, Mr. Speaker, is a situation in which the union has got the word of the hon. Minister of Labour. He calls off the strike and he waits for action. There was no settlement of the strike and if the hon. Minister of Labour was to fulfill his promise there should have been legislation brought before this House when we sat here on October 29, but nothing was done and believe me, the union negotiators were bitter. They had taken a promise—a promise in writing as well as orally—from this government that something would be done and now what happened? Well, either one of two things happened. The hon. Minister of Labour went out and deliberately tricked the union, which I do not think the hon. Minister would do; he is an honourable man. Or else—and I believe this is probably what has happened—that the Cabinet refused to back up what Mr. Rowntree, the hon. Minister of Labour, did. I say, Mr. Speaker, to you, that if the Cabinet has no faith in the decisions of the hon. Minister of Labour, how can labour unions have faith in him? When the hon. Minister of Labour gave a solemn pledge to these hospital workers, he should have seen to it that that promise was kept or he should have resigned and I still say that even today, he is in duty bound to resign, sir, as the Minister of Labour. How can you have negotiations being carried on in the province of Ontario, a largely industrial province, with the hon. Minister of Labour saying one thing and having the union go so far as to call off its strike and then have the government do completely the opposite?

Now, what is even more important in this matter, Mr. Speaker, is that this is one of a whole series of labour negotiations with hospitals that has been going on over a period of about two years and it is also a matter that largely concerns the government because the Ontario Hospital Services Commission is not only involved in the Trenton Memorial Hospital affair, but it is certainly involved with other hospitals. To give you an example of what the Ontario Hospital Services Commission did, they told the hospital at Trenton the following, and I am quoting from the submission of the board that manages the Trenton Hospital, to the Bennett commission, which was later set up:

The hospital, despite the strike and despite the allegations of the union, is still operating within its budget although it has received assurances that it may go beyond its budget should it be necessary to ensure the adequate patient care is maintained.

In other words, according to the hospital board, they were promised sufficient funds to break the strike. And it is known that the workers who stayed on during the strike—about one-third of them stayed on—received from $30 to $40 per month more than their normal pay. Here was a deliberate attempt by a semi-public body to use the Ontario Hospital Services Commission as a weapon to break a legitimate strike. A certified union, a union that had the majority support of the conciliation board, a union that agreed to accept the report of that conciliation board before it was even given, whether it was for or against it—it even said that when it went to the board, "Our custom is not to go on strike," and they were criticized for saying that. It certainly points out, Mr. Speaker, the danger of any union's offering to give up its right to strike, when you can see how they can be used, misused and abused. But what is even more serious is that it concerns the Hospital Services Commission of Ontario.

When the Ontario Federation of Labour heard that the Ontario Hospital Services

Commission had said that this certain hospital was going to get all the funds it needed, they were quite concerned and so they wrote a letter to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. Mr. Henry Weisback, the welfare director of the Ontario Federation of Labour, wrote to them—I have a photostat of the letter here—asking if a representative of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission would meet with a representative of the OFL to discuss the situation.

Well, that was in November, and December went by, practically all of January, then they got a letter dated January 28, which came in at the end of January, that said they had received their letter of November 25 but they were waiting for a report from the Bennett commission.

Here is a situation that was an important public matter. It was important to the union, it was certainly a controversial matter, and yet it would seem that the secretary of the hospital services commission deliberately avoided sending a reply. It does not speak very highly of this public body because it can be used as a weapon to break a legitimate labour strike.

Mr. Speaker, I do think that if the Ontario Hospital Services Commission is going to be used as an arm of government to crush strikes then it is time that the Legislature puts its foot down.

Just why the hon. Minister of Labour did not keep his word—we perhaps do not know what went on in that Cabinet meeting—but I am convinced, and the rumours are, that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) put his foot down and said that he wanted no interference with that hospital. I think, as a result of what went on within the Cabinet the carpet was pulled from under the hon. Minister of Labour; and I am assuming that when he gave his word he meant to keep it, so obviously the Cabinet pulled the carpet from under him. It has left both the government and the hospital services commission painted in a sordid and disgraceful picture.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Labour read in this House a telegram from Judge Bennett, saying that the three-man commission that was set up had finally reached a settlement. In that telegram that was read, Judge Bennett said this: "This union has been more than responsible."

In other words, he went out of his way to point out that the union helped to bring about a peaceful solution. And in this case I want to again emphasize, Mr. Speaker, what it did.

This union was certified. It agreed to be bound by arbitration decision. It was willing to meet with the Trenton board at all times. At government request it held up an application for consent for leave to prosecute for failing to bargain in good faith. It also held up hearings of two charges under section 65 of The Labour Relations Act, complaining of unfair treatment of employees.

These matters were held up in order to help create an atmosphere of good will at the request of the government. So it comes back to this, Mr. Speaker, labour unrest has been going on in a number of hospitals and these hospital employees have had a most difficult time.

Even this solution in Trenton for working, I believe it is, for 173 hours they will receive $175. That is the minimum pay; in other words, $1.01, and there are 70 employees. These are people who need their work, and a strike is a very difficult thing for them; they realize the responsibility of their work in hospitals and certainly they need the money. These are not people going out looking for strikes.

It costs the union $32,000 because of the strike—a strike that need not have taken place if the hospital board had co-operated.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trotter: And because this situation at Trenton is important I want to repeat this. There is labour unrest and labour difficulty in hospitals in Fort Erie, Port Colborne, the Sydenham Hospital at Wallaceburg, the Norfolk County Hospital in Simcoe, the Women's College Hospital, Toronto, the Glenstorden Hospital in Cornwall, although I think the latter is an old folks home. But the employees in these hospitals are not getting fair treatment; and they are not getting fair treatment because the government has not seen to it that proper collective bargaining is being honoured and recognized by hospitals in the province of Ontario.

It is surprising that it is not, because there was a special select committee on labour relations held in 1958, the report came out in 1958; and of the 11 members on that, five men eventually reached Cabinet rank. The hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) was on it and is still in the Cabinet; the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrobe); and, lo and behold, we see the hon. Minister of Labour was on that committee—and they made a recommendation—section 32—it is about hospital employees. This recommendation has never come into law and I suggest strongly to you that it must. And I read as follows:

The committee is of the opinion that any interruption of hospital services involving the care of sick people is undesirable. We therefore recommend that provision should be made in the Act that if the parties fail to reach an agreement by normal process of negotiation, the matters in dispute shall be referred to a board of conciliation, and that in order to ensure that there shall be no stoppage of work, the report of such board of conciliation shall be accepted as final and binding by both parties.

This union again did an amazing thing for a union; it was willing to give up its right to strike, it was willing to co-operate. It was the hospital that would not co-operate. And if we had had section 32 as law, the board of conciliation ruling and opinion would have been accepted; there would have been no interruption of service at the Trenton Memorial Hospital; there would have been no strike. And I say that it is long overdue that this section should be put into effect.

Again, I say that the performance of the government has been a shocking affair.

We often wonder why is it that these hospital boards have trouble with the unions; and just by way of closing this matter, Mr. Speaker, I might say that we may wonder why some of these individuals on that board behave the way they did. I thought the Ontario Federation of Labour, when it made its submission to the Bennett commission—the Bennett commission, I may say, was a group of three appointed by this government to try to bring about a solution of the Trenton Memorial Hospital dispute, which solution was brought in yesterday—but the Ontario Federation of Labour, going before that commission said—and these are not the exact words but, as I remember reading them—they said that some businessmen on boards vent their spleen on unions they deal with at hospital levels, because of disputes they have with unions in their own business. A businessman may be frustrated in his own place of business because strikes or labour unrest may cost him money. It costs him nothing to fight unions in hospitals.

Mind you, in this case the chairman of the hospital board had been in a six-month strike in his own business, and perhaps he was venting some of his spleen on the particular hospital workers who were attempting to organize and be recognized in the Trenton hospital. But governments, in particular the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, have a long way to go in order to bring about fair labour practices in hospitals, and their record in the treatment of the underpaid workers at Trenton hospital should shock public opinion here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, at the last session of the House I related at some length about a subject that is one of my pet beefs, and that is these door-to-door salesmen throughout Ontario selling magazines, vacuum cleaners and sewing machines. They probably operate within the law, but they prey upon the uninformed, the gullible, those who have newly arrived in Canada, and those, of course, who cannot speak and read English too well. I, as a lawyer, have had a number of people come to me and what can be done? In so many cases very little can be done. Sometimes we are lucky and we find a little technical mistake where the contract was not signed properly, but normally these conditional sales contracts are usually legal. As I said in the last House, I say again through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Attorney General, that we need teeth in the law of this province to stop people who use misleading advertising, who use methods that harm all business. It is unfortunate, I admit, that the individual does not learn to trust the merchant in his area or the reputable merchant who has carried on business over a number of years.

Last year I went after a particular publications service, and I am happy to say that in checking with the better business bureau that they have cleaned up some of their operation. Shortly after the particular company got all that publicity I understand that a horde of men came up from Chicago to try to clean it up, but it is still going on and not only the particular company I went after. To give you some idea, I think they exaggerated the extent of their operation: I made a speech in the Legislature and their lawyer phoned me up daring me to make the speech outside the Legislature, and saying that I was costing them millions of dollars in small towns throughout Ontario. Well, of course, I do not think they make millions of dollars, but I do think the public gets bilked for quite a bit throughout the province. I am usually polite to most people, I do not think I have ever slammed a telephone up on anybody in my life except the lawyer representing that particular publications firm, because I have seen too many cases where the average person has been misused and abused.

I am going to mention a few examples here. I am just going to touch briefly on these magazine subscription businesses that have been going on, and I am just taking a cross-section of the letters I have received, not from Toronto but across Ontario. In one or two cases I will use the actual names and facts that some of the people have sent in, I do not mind tabling these letters, but I do not want to use the names of private citizens. But I certainly will table these if anyone wishes to examine them. These are just examples.

This one happens to be from Ottawa. Considering how these people operate, I think they should be stopped:

This is my own experience recently.

this lady writes:

We are people who do quite a bit of reading but we were already taking more magazines than we had time to look at. Last September, I think it was, two of these salesmen came to the front door. When I asked them what they wanted they said they just wanted to speak to me for a minute and would not take up much of my time. They practically pushed me aside and came into my living room where they went into their sales spiel. They said for one thing that these wonderful magazines would only cost a few cents a month—

There she has in brackets:

—(a direct lie) which I would never miss, et cetera, ad nauseum. I told them that we already took more magazines than we had time to read and that was the last thing I needed or wanted. I also told them that I was ill and going to hospital shortly and just was not well enough to be bothered and asked them to leave. They stood over me, one on each side, with a pencil poised in their hands, urging me just to sign on the dotted line and they would run along. Finally in desperation just to get rid of them I did so, under the impression that a legal document was not legal unless signed in ink. I phoned them after and told them I felt I had been high-pressured into the thing and I definitely did not want their miserable magazines. I also wrote to them. They got one payment from me in cash at the time, then kept after me till I sent them one by mail. Then I told them I had already told them I didn't want the magazines, and would not pay another cent for them. To show you what a nervous state I was in at the time, two of the magazines they put down for me to take were Maclean's and Chatelaine, both of which we have been taking for years and which are paid up for several years ahead. The franchise dealer in Toronto is a Mr. Edward Wilson and their address is 2149 Yonge Street, Toronto.

Now, I cannot find that in the book; they may have changed since then or maybe they are moving around. Wilson is a common name and I cannot locate them. Then this lady went on to ask if I could do anything to help her. Then she says this: "They even hounded me with letters and phone calls in the hospital."

Again having to do with magazines, this is from Orillia:

Let me tell you about a high-pressure salesman from Keystone Readers Service, 90 Eglinton Avenue East, Suite 306, Toronto.

They are in the phone book, not at that address, and I do not know if it is the same people or not, but they are not at that address.

They called on the phone and asked me a question which I answered, so they said I could have two magazine subscriptions free for two years if I paid 35 cents a week for two more for two years.

Hon. members may find it amusing, but people are getting rooked right and left across this province.

As my husband was intending to spend the winter in our summer place where there was no library and nothing to read, I was easily persuaded to take this subscription out. He never let me read the rules and talked so nicely that, without using my head, I signed an agreement for two years for four magazines. After he left and I read the thing I found I have to pay $3 a month for 24 months. I have signed it and there is nothing I can do about it. I know you cannot help me but I did want to let you know what happened.

Now, there is another example, and I had one—I will not read it but it was from Kitchener—sending me all the details where this person could not read or write English. I know that in my own riding, where they have come to me personally, there have been cases where they have been taken advantage of because of their lack of English, especially as regards reading the small print in these contracts. I do feel—and this is the case I mention, Mr. Speaker, where the man who had signed the contract had died and they proceeded to hound the widow. As I say, these things are still going on, and in that case it was the company I went after before, Family Publications. Certainly I have these matters well documented, but in pointing out the magazine subscriptions—whether they operate within the law or not—they are on the verge of the law, so that today I think it is a government's duty to protect the unwary from unscrupulous people because the vast majority of people who are taken in are not the type that would pull a dirty deal themselves, and they just do not conceive that this can happen. The vast majority are those people who are earning a very small amount of money. Those that I have seen very seldom make more than $70 a week and that is the top. They are not the type that can be paying, in some cases, as high as $3 to $5 a week.

There is one matter that has been mentioned in the press concerning these door-to-door salesmen. Every once in a while someone tries to go after them and still they get in the suckers. This is why I think that, where we become so industrialized, unless the government assists these people, we are going to have an increasing number of cases. Now you often see the freezer advertisements in the Toronto newspapers. I know some papers, like the Toronto Daily Star, are very righteous about not carrying liquor ads. I suggest in the particular case of advertisements put in by the wholesale food markets, that they might be just as self-righteous about that type of advertisement as they are about the liquor ads.

I have one case I am going to use as an example. As I say I have seen a lot of them; I get them on the telephone and they come into the office, but sometimes a particular one is better documented than most. I just want to give an example of what goes on, and it is going on in a big way.

In the early part of November there was this advertisement "Free! $129 Value—your choice of sewing machine, vacuum cleaner, waterless cookware, floor polisher. The freezer food plan put out by the Wholesale Food Marts, 1801 Eglinton Avenue West, Suite 207."

They also have another outfit, called Atlas Sewing Centre, at the same address. If hon. members ever want to find out what the better business bureau thinks of them it is very interesting to hear, because it is most unsatisfactory. But their "lingo" and what happens, and I will recite what happens here, is within the law; and unless one finds some technicality, we are allowing unscrupulous people to take advantage and use the law against people who, in many ways, are unwary and cannot help themselves. If the law is going to be misused like this, those of us who are responsible for the law are all going to be held in disrepute. The law must be enforced for the good of all, not for the benefit of these unscrupulous dealers.

I am just going to recite the facts in this case. This is a wholesale food market, run by a man named R. D. Therman. This advertisement appeared in the Toronto Daily Star, and two people named Mr. and Mrs. Geczi saw it. It is always the unwary; they are new Canadians of Hungarian extraction; they are hospital workers.

Obviously these people do not make too much money. They work at a downtown hospital as hospital workers, not the type who can afford to be sucked in on these contracts. In answer to a newspaper advertisement the Geczis signed a conditional sales contract. I have that here. A friendly chap named Godfrey came up; and they said, at the time they signed it, they do not recall seeing the figures. They just signed it in blank—and you know how this happens. I as a lawyer have seen it happen so often; they sign the conditional sale in blank.

On November 7, this Mr. Godfrey called at their house to say he did not have one of the new freezers. It seems that the salesman told them the cost of the freezer included the cost of food as in the advertisement, and he stressed that they would not have to bother with any finance company. The people buying did not know what the price of the freezer was but they were told that the down payment was $25. Actually the conditional sales contract said $566.

They signed the contract, and they were going to buy this freezer, and they were going to buy some food along with it, and Mr. Godfrey called at their house two days later to say he did not have one of the new freezers that he promised them; they were not available but he said he had a bigger and better one which had been used at the CNE. He said it would cost a little more but was such a good buy he thought that they would want it.

He said that they could get it for $300 and that it would be paid off in one year of the food price, but they would have to make a down payment of $100. It was going to be a 21-cubic-foot freezer, and so they gave him an additional cheque of $75; in other words, first they give him $25 for a smaller freezer, but since the smaller freezer was not available and they were going to get something really good they gave him $75 extra.

The next day the freezer arrived and it was dirty and smelly, the finish chipped and marked. The trucker pointed this out to them and it was never taken off the truck; it was sent back. They called the salesman, Mr. Godfrey, and asked for their money back. He said he could not do that but he would send them a new freezer as per the original plan, a 17-cubic-foot one, and it came the next day.

For some reason he could now find the original freezer; and a food shipment for three months arrived. It seems, Mr. Speaker, you buy food along with this $566 deal as well as the freezer, and this food cost $157.80, including a carrying charge of $6.06.

This advertisement in the paper says that you get all this—they had $16.65 per week in the advertisement—and it includes the cost of food freezer plus unconditional guarantees on food, and free service and home delivery. The free service and home delivery cost them $6.06, and, of course, on this deal nothing materialized at $129. They have in the advertisement about four inches of type, details of all the food one was supposed to get on this deal.

Of course this does not materialize. What materialized is what I am telling you here. They were told that they had to pay $157 for the food, which was over and above what they were going to pay for the freezer. They made out three post-dated cheques for $66.60 and, finally, after the cheques had gone, they realized the deal was a bad one.

They found that items in the food list were expensive, more expensive than if they had bought them through the stores—coffee and flour, for example. They made a big noise about it down at the office of this company, The Wholesale Food Mart, and they went down and saw the manager. And the manager was incensed that they would object and he threatened to tape-record what Mrs. Geczi was saying. Then the manager went after her as to what her nationality might be.

What can these people do? I say to the hon. Attorney General, through the Speaker, that the operators prey upon their worries—their suspicions. Some people come over from Europe who have known what it is to be oppressed. They are suspicious of tape-recorders. They are quizzed as to what their nationality is; this is all part of the game and of the tricks. A lot of them are afraid of courts and of the law and of lawyers, simply because it is something they do not understand. I say to you that this is something that we as a government, and men in the Legislature, should be aware of.

Well, salesman Godfrey turned up at their house after they had complained to the manager and he said: "Forget the whole thing. Do not make any more complaints.

Maybe you have been charged too much. I will give you a cheque, my own cheque for $15." He wanted to keep them happy. Of course he would lose his commission. Mind you, I have his cheque here, it has never been cashed; so he said just forget about it—that is, the complaints. Maybe his conscience was bothering him, I do not know.

Well, he said. "Besides, I will send you some extra food. I will send you some sugar and free flour."

It never did come and then—this is now about November 20—they went to a lawyer. The lawyer looked at the contract and the lawyer said, "You are stuck. You cannot do a thing about it." Again then they started to get dunning letters from a lawyer, just like the letters people get on the magazine subscription business.

Well, there are some things wrong with the contract. To give you some idea how phoney they can be, for example, one has to have references on the conditional sales contract. The salesman wrote in two people that, as far as these people, the Geczis know, do not exist. They are just names; and also, of course, the date does not jibe. There are weaknesses in the contract. Possibly we might be lucky and break the contract.

But on the face of it, these people are stuck. Just to give some idea of how badly they are stuck, I will give you an idea. A price on this contract for this freezer is $566 and one seller we know of, here in Toronto, sells the same thing for $289. In Eaton's catalogue one can get the same thing for $239.95 and to go to Bad Boy's—I guess he must be misnamed—you can get it for $199, and yet these people are being rooked for $566.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Is that Honest Ed's price?

Mr. Trotter: I am sorry, I do not have Honest Ed's price. It is probably down there some place. The free cookware they were supposed to get—it is called free in the ad—was supposed to be worth $129. Well, it turned out that it is worth $45 in the local stores that we have been able to check into. So this is the situation. I know I went into this in some detail, but I did it for this reason, that this is happening in Toronto, I think, on hundreds of occasions. I know that when I have been out canvassing during the election people harked back to this type of thing. I know it is up to us to do something about it by writing columns in the newspapers. It can be done. I think a column has been written on this food market matter.

Bringing it out in the public this way can cause them to run for cover for a short time, like one company I went after a few months ago. But at the same time they are operating and they will crawl out of the woodwork as soon as the heat is taken off.

Again I say to the hon. Attorney General that, in his position, it is his responsibility to see that something is done about it. Now I am certain that this goes on, not only in Toronto, of course, but throughout the province of Ontario. I have two similar items. One is the Atlas Sewing Centre. It, again, is run by the Wholesale Food Marts and it is at 1801 Eglinton Ave. W. They have contests, and on this occasion I am quoting directly from a column that was written on this. This does not come directly from my own files. It comes from a column that was written by the Toronto Telegram special squad reports, on June 20, 1963. This is where the Atlas Sewing Machine Centre offers a contest; if you are a winner, you get a machine. It seems, though, that everybody is a winner because they get a free ticket taking $20 off the price of a sewing machine that they might want to buy—I am sorry, off a vacuum cleaner that they might want to buy. It is called a sewing centre, but what they put out are vacuum cleaners.

There again it is the old trick. This particular company would list in the papers its various prize winners and, fortunately for the public, this particular special squad started to check into these winners and ask what and when did they win, and they listed three grand prizes. They went to a Mrs. Fred Huron in Oshawa. She was contacted and she said she was very happy with the sewing machine which she received last year. In other words, they just repeat the same old winner. She said she had entered a contest in 1961 and won it then, but this prize list was being used in 1963. One other man said he had never even heard of it, but he was listed as a winner. This man who lived in Aldershot, Ontario, said, "We have never entered our name in any contest," and yet what happens is this: So-called winners are named, and if you have entered the contest and do not win you at least get a consolation prize; you get a certificate of $20 on a vacuum cleaner. It was good on a vacuum cleaner worth $32.95, one of four items advertised in a letter.

Now, I am reading this from the column, saying that a man had been selected for a consolation prize by the board of judges. The letter said, "Here is a vacuum that will do all your household cleaning at a minimum of time and effort." Now, this was completely wrong, but here they are advertising and carrying this type of thing on in the province of Ontario.

Finally, this fellow's turn came up, and a representative of Atlas Sewing Company called and then he informed him that the $20 certificate did not apply to the $32 machine, it applied to the $169 machine which the man had. Then it turned out that the same type of machine could be bought at Simpson-Sears for $69, $100 cheaper, and one not too far off at $79. But this company is carrying on business in Toronto today. It is legalized stealing from the public. They are using utterly false letters and advertising material and certainly I hope that I can do everything possible to see to it that they are given as little opportunity as possible to cheat the public.

Finally, on these examples—this is also a legitimate operation and this was brought in to me by a constituent who was going to be taken for a lot of money. This one had a happy ending. We found a mistake in the contract; the company did not sign in the proper place, they had put a stamp where the company was supposed to sign and the official signed on the witness line and they finally decided not to continue action against this fellow. I do not know if it was for that reason or that they got word that some nousey politician was checking into it. Suddenly they said they would come and pick up the vacuum cleaner and forget all about it.

Now, this outfit is admittedly legitimate and they have come out with a really fancy affair. They give you a Compact bond friendship. This is the contract you sign with these people. They are known as the Compact Agency of Toronto and they sell you the Compact vacuum cleaners. They have a very fancy certificate. This particular constituent of mine after he had signed—mind you, this fellow said, "I do not want to sign any conditional sale," and this was his saving grace, he would not sign the conditional sale and he would not give them any money. At least he did not think he had signed a conditional sale, but he would not sign a cheque; he knew what a cheque looked like and he had not signed a cheque. But he got this Compact bond of friendship, in the Canadian tradition of friendliness and free enterprise as it says on it.

You know, I think any man who is an honest businessman, would want to see this type of enterprise driven right to the wall and put out of business, because any man who is in business or believes in free enterprise is made to look like a crook because of people like this. And this is why we should clean them out of our province.

So they go on, and it is a $25 credit on the friendship bond but then you read a bit closer; it is really not $25. This is what the small print tells you. I will not go into all this. But then they have the explanation of the Compact bond of friendship on another document. It is also a fancy thing and if it were not for the fact that so many people, so many low wage-earners are taken in by all this, it would be funny. But people are worried and they are harassed once they sign these things that it really causes a lot of them nervous upset and certainly lots of hard-earned money. I, too, laugh when I read this stuff, but we, the public of Ontario, are being played for suckers and the government and we, in the Legislature, are allowing it to continue because we do nothing.

Now, on this so-called explanation of Compact bond of friendship you sign something and it really means you are undertaking to pay $12.50 per month for 18 months if you are signing the contract. In this respect you are stuck; you have the vacuum cleaner. Now, I admit these vacuum cleaners are good, they work, but you pay about $200 more for them than what they are worth. You also pay all these finances charges that one has to pay.

In other words, they are compounding an evil. In this case, the payments look small, around $12.50 per month. And the contract that they suggested this fellow sign, started at $169, but at the bottom ends up at $225. By the time they add on a registration fee—whatever the devil that could be on this conditional sale, because it is not registered—and then the amount it costs to finance it, these people are then stuck; except in this one case he was fortunate, they made a mistake.

How do they operate? By deceiving the public. Well, they get some private individual to recommend some of their friends, and in that way the sucker list starts.

I have here what the individual is supposed to do. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, through you, if the hon. Attorney General is interested in winning a Cadillac. Mind you, that is how all this is brought on—winning a Cadillac. This has nothing to do with a Cadillac or a coloured TV, it is strictly a vacuum cleaner, but this is the type of thing—this is just an idea of what the sales pitch is.

What you are supposed to say to your friends is: "Shirley, how would you and Adam like to win a 1963 Cadillac Coupe de Ville, or the latest RCA coloured TV, free? This is a terrific opportunity and you are under no obligation whatsoever to buy anything."

Of course, that is completely untrue. And then they go on: "This preview is by special invitation only, Shirley, so I will mail one out to you and Adam right away. The company will phone you and arrange a definite appointment. Make sure you and Adam are home so you will not miss out on this wonderful offer. It is only for a limited time."

So, of course, people start phoning their friends and then they realize they, too, have been taken. You see, if someone gets ten people to buy vacuum cleaners for $25 he gets his vacuum cleaner free. But he never meets up with ten people who will buy it so he is stuck, not just for the cost of the vacuum cleaner but also for the interest charged.

My argument is this: The people who carry on business like this—if it is legal, it is certainly on the fringe of illegality so that it is up to us to see that it is stopped. I do hope that the hon. Attorney General will see fit to put teeth in the law to give either the municipalities more right to license these people who go into the small towns. Because what happens on so many occasions is that they leave Toronto, they blitz a town, and then they have this contract signed, turned over to a finance company and then the individuals are stuck.

In the meantime the salesman is hidden in Toronto. Sometimes their address can be found in the phone book, sometimes it cannot. And this is a situation that is costing the people an awful lot of money.

I have one short item, Mr. Speaker, then I will conclude. I do this because when I first sat in this Legislature, I discussed and went into some detail on the problem of mental health in the province of Ontario. And I have done so consistently every time I have spoken on the Throne debate. I have said it on other occasions but I make it a point to always mention the need, in this province, for more vigorous leadership in coming to grips with the problem of mental health. It is the greatest single social problem in Canada and in the province of Ontario.

What I am saying now I have said here before, and I will say it again, and I will continue to say it until we get more vigorous action.

In a single day in Canada there are 70,000 people in mental hospitals; in other words, over half the hospital population in Canada are mental patients. And we have 23,000 beds in Ontario, and 32,000 patients are taken care of by the province of Ontario. People do not realize the seriousness of it until it is brought home to them.

And this just happened again, about three weeks ago, where a man who had hardening of the arteries was taken to what I consider "the Black Hole of Calcutta on Queen Street", and crammed in with about 1,600 people.

Of course, the family went down there and were horrified. When they go through the nice new administrative building that hides the actual institution itself, they then go through the barred door and walk down that long hall of horrors where you can see everything in one dreadful state.

It is a shocking thing that today we can build fancy hotels, and even we, as members, may have new offices—which I think we should have—but I do hope that those of us, when we get those new offices, will sit and think of the problem of mental illness in the province of Ontario because we are not doing enough.

I am not saying this government has not done anything, or does nothing; I am saying that it is not doing nearly what is required.

The Toronto Psychiatric Hospital is finally going up, Mr. Speaker. I have heard five speeches from the Throne in this House; in four of them they have announced there is going to be a psychiatric hospital for Toronto. They announced it again this time. They have had all these announcements; finally they are really going to build it; it looks that way. But milking announcements of the building of mental hospitals, I say it is a shame that the province of Ontario is carrying on in this way.

I just want to emphasize what the cost of mental illness is in Canada—Ontario being the largest province, it would have the greatest share. If we could wipe out mental illness, we would wipe out personal income taxes for every Canadian earning up to $5,000 a year. That is what it is costing us here in Canada as a whole. For example, there is a hospital for emotionally disturbed children at Thistletown. Again, I have said this two or three times in this House, that there is a fancy laboratory up there for research. We have had it since 1957 but each year goes by and we are unable to get a proper research man in that laboratory to do any research from 1957 on. I wish the hon. Minister of Health was here today. I wonder, when are they going to use the Thistletown Hospital, which is essentially a research hospital? When are they going to put in the properly trained personnel that is needed? One director of a mental institution here in Ontario who looks after 1,600 patients estimated that 1,000 of these 1,600 could still benefit from intensive treatment if the facilities were available. Well, the facilities are not available. A tremendous amount of knowledge has been obtained in research into mental illness since World War II, and we, in this province, are not putting this new knowledge to work. It is because the government will not give the leadership that is required.

Now, I know that select committees are often used by governments to hide things, to put something off, but I do say this: The one thing that a select committee on mental health would do, would be to give many people who are interested, an opportunity to present their briefs to the public through that select committee so that they could go into these facts and know what the cost is, what the need is, and what must be done.

With those few remarks on this subject, on which I will have more to say, I want to thank you for your kind attention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will proceed with this debate. It appears that we will be able to end the debate on Tuesday before the Budget comes down on Wednesday; then there are various bills and resolutions on the order paper which will be taken. I have looked particularly at Bill No. 22, An Act to amend The Fatal Accidents Act; Bill No. 29, An Act to amend The Statute Labour Act; Bill No. 28—these are just some of the bills put on the order paper by the hon. Opposition members, which I would hope to call. I mentioned Bill No. 7. I will try before the session ends, to work through these various bills and resolutions.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Friday, February 7, 1964

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Friday, February 7, 1964

Resumption of the debate on the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Ewen, Mr. Newman, Mr. Noden, Mr. Reilly	490
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Randall, agreed to	509
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Cass, agreed to	509

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1964

The House met at 10:30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the east gallery students from the George Harvey Secondary School, Toronto; and in the west gallery, students from the Forest Avenue Public School, Port Credit.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have something to tell the House that I believe will be well received and give the hon. members a happy weekend. I am sorry that the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Freeman) is not in his seat because I know he is intensely interested in this.

In the Toronto Daily Star the other day there was notice that $22.8 million for cars for the TTC was to be awarded to Hawker-Siddeley's Canadian Car branch in Fort William, and I believe that that contract is going to them. I would just like to say, Mr. Speaker, what this will mean in that area and in the whole of Ontario—the benefit to Ontario of building these subway cars in the Fort William plant of Hawker-Siddeley (Canada) Limited will be a great spur to our progress.

Based on the construction of these 248 subway cars, Mr. Speaker, the source from which material will come is in money value: from the United States, $514,600, 2.8 per cent; the United Kingdom, $632,400, or 3.5 per cent; Quebec, $400,000, 2.3 per cent; and Ontario $16.3 million, 91.4 per cent, a total in money coming into this province of $17,847,000.

The labour on this Ontario material is significant; it represents approximately 600 men for a two-year period. And the labour at the Fort William plant, the direct and indirect requirement including staff of Hawker-Siddeley (Canada) Limited, would be approximately 455 men for a two-year period. The total labour and staff for Ontario from this contract will be 1,200 for two years.

Prior equipment sales by Hawker-Siddeley (Canada) Limited to Toronto Transit Commission include: 1946 to 1956, buses, 210 units; trolley coaches from 1947 to 1953, 125 units; streetcars, 1946 to 1949, 225 units. The total buses in service in Ontario municipalities today, 688 units; and the total bus, coach and streetcar production of the Fort William plant to date, 4,358 units.

I am inordinately proud, Mr. Speaker, as I know hon. members of this House will be, that a Canadian plant can produce things of this kind and compete with other nations. There were tenders received from many other countries on this contract and the Fort William firm had the lowest tender.

In addition to this, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) tells me this firm produces from 400 to 500 tree farmers every year; 25 per cent of these are being shipped to the United States. Since last June they have produced $3 million to $4 million from their exports on this one item alone for Canada and Ontario.

They also manufacture trailers and, to the States last year, their sales amounted to $7 million. This is an outstanding achievement, I think, and one that I want to bring to the attention of the House. I want to pay credit to their president, Mr. Ted Emmert, and their local manager, Mr. Bob Henderson, and his staff at Fort William for the wonderful job they are doing. This is an example of the acumen, ingenuity, knowledge and drive of Canadians working with Canadian materials in a Canadian plant; and I would like to mention to the House, Mr. Speaker, that I believe that Canadians can compete with any other part of the world, and they are doing so.

This is an announcement that gives me a great pleasure and I know will be received in that way by this Legislature. I might mention too, in passing, that Mr. Emmert is a great personal friend of our hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts). Probably that is where Mr. Emmert gets his acumen, ingenuity, drive and knowledge.

I am glad to make this announcement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I want to ask but I rise on a point of order to begin with.

Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest for your consideration that the statement by the hon. Minister (Mr. Wardrope) today, and the one that he made two days ago, were out of order.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Did the hon. member not like to hear it?

Mr. MacDonald: I liked to hear it and, in fact, I did not rise because I knew the hon. Minister would indulge in the tactics of saying that I was unhappy about this. I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, for your consideration, this is not the function of the hon. Minister—to use his position before the orders of the day to get up and spread happiness. If this was valid, the hon. Minister should have risen a year ago, for example, when INCO laid off 2,500 men and said, "Here is a problem we have to face"; but he was silent. He rises only when there is political propaganda to make, not to face the problems. And once again he has done it today.

It is not, I submit, Mr. Speaker, a legitimate proposition for the hon. Minister to rise before the orders of the day on something that has nothing to do with his department. This is part of the Throne Speech, or any other time he wants to make the point.

I leave that for your consideration, Mr. Speaker.

My question is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). Has the Stinson report on the tobacco industry been completed and, if so, when will it be released?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the secretary of the committee advised earlier in the week that the report is not yet completed.

Mr. Speaker: I may say to the House, just before we proceed with the orders of the day, regarding the point of order raised by the member for York South this morning that the chair is not opposed to any member rising in his place to bring perhaps good news relating to his riding, as long as that particular news is not too lengthy. So I would advise the members that I will listen to a short statement of news regarding a member's riding or department as long as it is not too lengthy. I must also at the same time refer the members to the journals on page 63, 1960, whereby the former Speaker gave a ruling to this effect, and I quote in part:

As to the statements made before the orders of the day, by the custom of the House, Ministers of the Crown are not only permitted, but indeed are expected, to report to the House from time to time on matters within their purview, which they deem to be of particular interest and concern to the House. A reasonable number of questions and clarifications of such statements are customarily permitted.

Therefore, if statements before the orders of the day by Ministers pertain to their departments, it is expected that they bring it before the House because this is the place to bring it and not give it to the press first. But if it is some other bit of news regarding their riding, of particular significance to the members of the House, as long as it is not too long, the chair will entertain it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Speaker, it is within my purview because nickel, iron, copper and zinc, and all the other minerals will be used in this contract. I would like to tell the hon. leader of the NDP (Mr. MacDonald) that a market for their minerals is especially interesting to me and my mines department; that is why I made the announcement, and in the future I will abide by your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. Minister is obviously breaching the rule still more.

Mr. Speaker: The question is not being debated any longer.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Fifteenth order. Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. D. W. Ewen (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address the House, I would like to pay tribute to the guidance we have received from your experienced hands.

Sir, I understand that the members for Wentworth have, in the past, been noted time-consumers. I intend to be brief at all times, though acknowledging your tolerance and indulgence under any circumstances.

This is indeed remarkable when the hon. members for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) and York South (Mr. MacDonald) insist upon reading the Toronto Globe and Mail to this House, or when the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) resents emasculation—I prefer the term curtailment—of his submissions; but then what prima donna does not resent shortening of his favourite aria?

One other point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the record of the House is that the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young), in his maiden speech last October, got on about the paraphernalia in the hon. members' desks. I would just like to draw your attention to the scissors; the reason that they were not purchased in this country is the fact we have no manufacturer of scissors in Canada.

I must turn to a more serious matter.

The hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) is to be congratulated upon the splendid progress made with the new Highway 403, linking the Queen Elizabeth Way in the east and No. 2 Highway in the west. Having provided me with a speedy means of reaching Hamilton, I hope the hon. Minister will be equally successful in overcoming the local obstacles and enable my constituents and myself to get home. This highway is a great step forward in communication and transportation between our two major industrial cities.

I am sorry the hon. Minister of Highways is not here this morning, for I would like to say that in the interviews I have had with him and his secretary, Mr. Mills, and his deputy Minister, Mr. McNab, and Ian Campbell up here at Downsview, they have treated me very well. I would like to say that they are quite concerned with putting out the tenders for the continuation of completing Highway 403. There has been some controversy as to the location of the interchange in the township of Ancaster and I have found out the blame lies with the township. With the election that just passed in December, we have had two new councillors elected to the township council, and I would like to mention these gentlemen's names: Councillors Charles Bray and George Mills with Michael Moriarity, and also Deputy Reeve John Mills' help.

I have here with me this morning, the Hamilton Spectator, dated February 5:

ANCASTER COUNCIL PUTS VIEWS ON RECORD, WANTS MOHAWK INTERCHANGE

Ancaster council last night agreed that the proposed Highway 403 access in Ancaster township should be at the Mohawk

Road and that work on the interchange should begin at the earliest possible date.

A motion by Councillors Charles Bray and Michael Moriarity suggested that The Department of Highways should be informed of the township council's opinion on this matter, together with its desire to have a progress report on the proposed interchange.

"Now let us make sure that the copies of this motion are sent to The Department of Highways for immediate attention," suggested Councillor John Mills.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I thought the hon. member was opposed to reading papers.

Mr. Ewen: I would say to the hon. Minister, the problem is rectified, he has our okay, let us get on with the job.

In speaking of industrial development, may I say that the decision to build a multi-million-dollar technical education centre in the Mountain area of Hamilton reflects great wisdom and foresight in planning. Hamilton is a major industrial city ripe for development. As the home of the Canadian steel industry with modern facilities equal to any on the North American continent, Hamilton is the logical place to establish this secondary industry which is so vital to economy if it is to continue to expand. The technical programme will continue the work of vocational schools and produce the skilled technicians we require if we are to produce the quality and the quantity of goods we need to sell in world markets.

I congratulate the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) for his judgment in selecting this particular site. Its proximity to the present and future production areas will ensure a supply of skilled men and provide the people with jobs worthy of their skills. It will also provide further development of services in an area which has been almost wholly residential. It is necessary that heavy industry remain on the bay shore, but the logical place for educational, service, recreational and administrative establishments is surely in the Mountain area.

As McMaster University expands, I envisage a teachers' college for academic and vocational staffs added to this huge 70-acre campus to make it a complete and comprehensive educational centre of which Ontario can be proud. The people of Wentworth riding will make welcome all out-of-town students at this technical centre, designed primarily to cater to the 600,000 residents within a 40-mile radius of Hamilton. I know that we will attract students from a much wider area. The wide scope of courses offered—automotive, chemical, electrical and electronics, industrial, mechanical, textiles and marketing — indicates the extent and range of manufacturing operations which can be established in this area.

The hon. Minister for Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) has reported the initial success of the trade crusade, and the awareness of the vast markets of the world. This technical education project in this strategic locality is a vital ink in the chain of economic development. It will supply the skilled workers to produce the goods at a cost which will enable Ontario to compete in world markets.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on another branch of learning. I welcome the changes made in Grade 13 examinations and note that there is to be a review of upper school courses generally. It seems that there is a new philosophy, which we should commend — a movement from merely acquiring and storing facts, toward true education in the form of ability to reason. Without this approach we can never produce students capable of original work in the field of research.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Woodbine has assailed the new educational grants regulations. I fear that he has looked only at the effect and has disregarded both the causes and the aims of such complex regulations. There are too many anomalies to be rectified in this field. One which I personally would like to see given consideration is the retroactive approval for grant purposes of facilities which are now approved but were formerly regarded as frills. I refer specifically to gymnasium and auditorium facilities. The enlightened and progressive boards which provided these facilities prior to 1959 will continue to pay on debentures for many years from local taxation while the "Johnny come lately" boards will receive grants on similar facilities.

Sir, we cannot hope to eliminate all the inequities but this is one I feel requires adjustment. However, in reading the criticism of the hon. member for Woodbine, I feel that he has failed either to appreciate the problem or to suggest a knowledgeable and practical answer.

The Ontario Foundation Tax Plan is a milestone in the educational progress of this province. Those of us who served as school board trustees during the past decade will fully appreciate the value of the assistance now made available to the municipal organizations. The hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) is to be congratulated upon his efforts to achieve equality of educational opportunities throughout the province.

In a lighter vein, I am tempted to say that no better illustration of the need for special education exists than the bewildering complexity of the regulations issued to implement the grants. However, we must recognize that this multitude of formulae is a product of the unnecessary complexity and variety of the educational structure of Ontario, and hope that contemplated reorganization of units of administration will permit simplification of the grant system and regulations in the future.

The provision of a larger share of educational costs from the provincial funds is a greater step forward. Educational costs continue to rise more quickly than the total assessment but they are closely related to personal income and the gross national product. It is logical, therefore, to raise educational funds upon foundation principles if we require true equality in this field. I note that there is to be an increase in provincial control and this must be accepted. The degree of responsibility of this assembly to the taxpayer will be increased proportionately to the revenue to be raised and must therefore carry with it a similar increase in authority.

Positive action to reduce the number of boards in the province has become a vital necessity if efficient and economical administration is to be maintained. No other nation or province has such a high proportion of school boards in relation to the population. First and foremost we must consider the education of our children. Only in larger units can special services be given to provide not only for the retarded and the average student but for the gifted child. Too long have we had to accept mediocrity in the field of education. The war, with its subsequent high birth rate and immigration, produced a population explosion which caught us without staff and facilities to keep pace. Now that these problems are less acute, the time is opportune to support the progressive, encourage the hesitant and pressure the backward boards to improve standards. The department must also give a stronger lead in curriculum and tuition, and in teacher training and selection. The initiative of the teaching profession must never be stifled but we must protect the system from its recent trend which places greater value on prowess as a scholar than upon progress as a teacher.

From a financial and administrative point of view the advantages of a larger unit are obvious—economies in supplies; avoidance of duplication of services and personnel; the employment of full-time practical administrators; reduction of work at the department.

Perhaps some of the smaller boards fear a loss of autonomy. In this regard I do not feel that I am presumptuous in speaking for this House as a whole, in saying that none of us sought this honour to participate in any reduction of democratic principle or practice. The Acts provide for ward systems, which are geographical areas with equitable population and representation. We must welcome this principle of larger units of administration in the interests of economy and efficiency both in academic and business administration. The education of our children must suffer neither from the avarice of a few nor the apathy of the many.

The supplying of all textbooks to Grade 9 and 10 students is a relief to the individual families at a time when family cost is a burden. Even so it is hoped that the book prices will be subject to careful scrutiny with the publishers and that schools will be reminded frequently that books must not be subjected to any damage beyond fair wear and tear.

Finally, let me review the "new look" in education. The new grants are realistic in amount; they are to be raised and distributed with an equality hitherto unknown; protection is given against both spendthrift and miser; more efficient academic and business administration is to result from the formation of larger units. The path is clear, the means are available; how far and how fast we travel this path depends upon the intelligent interest in our children's education and the practical response to this enlightened guidance toward the ultimate goal—an educational system equal to any and second to none.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, through you to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) on behalf of the hon. Conservative members who have given their maiden speeches on the Throne Speech debate, I would like to say that we really appreciate the opportunity of having the privilege of choosing our own material and expressing the views of the constituents of our own particular riding.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on the Speech from the Throne may I add, to those of the many hon. members who preceded me, my congratulations to you on your election to this high office. Knowing of your pedagogical background, and your adeptness in the art of disciplining the unruly, we on this side of the House respect it and will co-operate wholeheartedly with you. However, you will only have to glance to your right to realize that your classroom skills once more will have to come into practice. It is customary for a teacher to place the unruly at his right hand side.

May I also add my thanks to you and your office for the many courtesies that have been extended to me in the short period of time that we have been here assembled.

My congratulations also go to the newly elected and the re-elected hon. members of the House. Even though the majority of the people in Ontario, who were interested enough in that priceless privilege of the secret ballot, voted against this government, nevertheless we accept the decision.

My congratulations to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). Ontario prospers best when the interests of all parts of Ontario are given due and proper consideration, and I hope that the hon. Prime Minister, in his deliberations and decisions, remembers that Essex county is still a part of Ontario.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): And a very good part. It is all Liberal.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay my respects to a very fine lady from my riding, one who has contributed much to the political life of the city of Windsor, one who is very capable, one who is highly regarded. Both of us presented the issues to the public as best we were able. There was no name-calling, no tearing down of one another's campaign posters, and so on—none of the hooliganism that one hears about quite often during election campaigns. Mrs. Cameron H. Montrose, with whom I served six years on city council, conducted herself just like the fine lady she is. She was a very dear friend before the election, and after the battle, much dearer. Thank you, Mrs. Montrose, for proving to the people that electioneering can be carried on on a very high plane.

Mr. Speaker, in my first address to this honourable House some four years ago, I gave hon. members a geography and a history lesson of the riding of Windsor-Walkerville. I have no intention of repeating that lesson as, in the days to come, not only Windsor but also Essex county will be heard of both often and loud. However, I would like to remind the few that the riding that I have the honour of representing in this House is the home of Hiram Walker & Sons Limited. Need I say more?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes on a topic that has been and still is of major concern in my area for much too long a period of time; that is, unemployment. There is no use in attempting to spell out the causes for this continuing cancer that has plagued and still plagues my area.

A little over one year ago—December 19, 1962, to be exact—in the Throne debate, I brought out the economic plight of the area. I brought out the fact that Windsor had and still has, even to today, a hard core of unemployed that needed attention. Sir, I showed that Windsor's employment index was the least desirable of any Canadian urban area. The hon. Prime Minister paid attention to the appeals from the Windsor area and appointed a committee to conduct a full-scale inquiry into the economic ills, with a view to formulating long-range policies to make maximum uses of the area's potential.

This committee submitted its final report to the government but, rather than accepting this report and acting upon it, the government sent it back for updating. Mr. Speaker, why updating? What practical purposes could updating serve? All updating could do is possibly change a few of the figures on the numbers unemployed, the number of industries that may have established themselves in the area, and so forth.

The basic symptoms for the economic ills and the essential prescription for a cure would remain the same on January 1, 1964, as it would on February 1, or any other day that you may wish to mention. To the best of my knowledge, this updated report has been resubmitted to the government.

The government has the report; I cannot too strongly urge it to act on it immediately. It is of most vital concern to us back home. The citizens—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would allow me just one comment? In fact, it was not the government which referred the report back, it was the people who produced it who asked if they could bring it back for updating. That is the only point I make.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I will accept that from the hon. Prime Minister. I am glad to have him explain that. However, in consultation with individuals back home, I understand it was the other way around.

It is of most vital concern to us back home that this report be acted upon. The citizens, the municipal governments, the unions, business, and industry, are most anxious to get on with the job. The time is now. Time is precious.

Each day the report is delayed, may mean one day more of unemployment to the 7,012 registered for employment and unplaced; one day more of welfare for the 3,666 on welfare in the city of Windsor; one day more of suffering to the many whose unemployment insurance has run out and who are too proud to accept social assistance.

Mr. Speaker, economic conditions have improved over the past 12 months. However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to present some figures to show that. Simply to state that there is substantial room for improvement is putting the case fairly mildly. As of January 31, 1964, just one short week ago, the total registered for employment and unplaced in Windsor was 7,012, a number surpassed by only two other cities in Ontario, namely, Toronto and Hamilton. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that this number is larger than the total number of unemployed in the province of Saskatchewan, as found on page 1156 of the December 31, 1963 issue of the Labour Gazette?

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): What is the difference in population?

Mr. Newman: Well, this only exaggerates the problem. It only makes the conditions in my own community that much more serious, and stresses that much more need for action on the part of you and the government over there.

Even Newfoundland had only 646 more unemployed than did the Windsor area. Just think how undesirable the figures were just one year ago, when the National Employment Service in Windsor listed 9,126 seeking the means of a livelihood. Some credit for the substantial improvement would have to be given to the Canadian Vocational Training Plan or programme No. 5; where once there were approximately 1,000 applicants for re-training and upgrading, today there are only 605 in nine different courses.

The general upswing of the economy has meant a substantial savings to the municipality and to the province, for as of January 31, 1964, only 3,666 unfortunates found themselves accepting welfare as against 4,859 one year ago.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, things are better in Windsor. They can be still better, they must be much better. The sooner the report of the committee is acted upon the better.

Using the 1949 employment index base as 100, the latest available statistics, September 1963, shows Windsor's index as 81.7, the lowest of any urban area in Canada; the lowest of any urban area. London, the home of the hon. Prime Minister, has an index of 145.6; Sault Ste. Marie, 153.9; Hamilton, 121.3; Toronto, 145.8; Ottawa, 141; and Oshawa, also an automotive centre, 206.5. The average for all of Ontario is 131.3, and for Canada, 130.1. Windsor's index was the lowest, or I should use the term "the least appealing", of any Canadian urban area. Mr. Speaker, may I repeat: the least appealing of any Canadian urban area.

One of the frightening aspects of the unemployment picture in my community is that Windsor, plus its suburbs, with a little less than three per cent of the population of Ontario, has 7.7 per cent of its work force unemployed. This is as of one week ago. It has 6.6 per cent of Ontario's total unemployed, a full three per cent more than the 3.6 per cent Ontario average. Surely, such startling statistics should merit special attention and action on the part of this government. Ontario is a province of opportunity—opportunity for some but not for all.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that in our type of society it is the responsibility of the government to take the lead in introducing action for a solution. If, on such bright, shiny, cloudless days as we are now pleased to experience and enjoy, we find shades of unemployment and we make little or no attempt to overcome and eliminate these shadows, just think how difficult, yes, maybe even impossible, will be our task when those dark, dismal cloudy days are upon us. The issue today, Mr. Speaker, is not that there are pockets of unemployment; the issue is how best to take care of the unemployed and how best to return them to work, so that the immediate needs of persons and families are satisfied and future employment is guaranteed.

A thousand dollars invested in salvaging an unemployed youth today can return $40,000 or more to the various governments in taxes during that youth's or that individual's lifetime. Here is an investment of 40 to 1.

I think that the government has an increasing and unavoidable obligation to lead, while labour and management have an ever-present responsibility to co-operate with one another and with government in working out that solution. The objective of their joint search and their united efforts must be full, permanent and gainful employment for the whole work force. There can be no other policy. There can be no other gain. There can be no satisfaction with anything less. The goal must be to provide jobs—not power in either management or labour—because with jobs we have stability. Stability in our work force, stability in our society, stability in our unions, stability in our companies and businesses and stability in our profits. Without jobs, there can be no business, no union, no wages, no profits, no management, no dividends.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No Department of Labour.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): That would cut off someone's job.

Mr. Newman: Right. The hon. member for Niagara Falls says that would cut off someone's job there; he is so right.

On this ground of finding jobs and providing steady income, all the efforts of government, management and labour can find room for action. The task is not to assign blame for present unemployment to management, to labour, to government, to foreign competition, to automation, to changing patterns of production. The task is to recognize the challenge and to stride forward for the credit of solving the problem.

In the case of my home town, Windsor, Mr. Speaker, I could mention various incentives that could be used, such as special tax concessions, or more favourable Hydro rates. They might have a marked effect in brightening up the situation, but I would rather refrain from any suggestions until the final report of the committee set up to study our plight is acted upon.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday's Globe and Mail has a news item that could be of substantial consequence to the Windsor area. And if the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) were to pay heed to it, and to encourage, or should I say to point out, the plight of the Windsor area to the officials of the Studebaker Corporation, some of the problems in Windsor could be alleviated. Mr. Speaker, allow me to read it. It is a very short ten-line article in the Globe and Mail of, I think it was, February 5. The dateline is Detroit, and it is an Associated Press release.

TWO MORE PLANTS WILL BE CLOSED BY STUDEBAKER

Studebaker Corporation will close its engine and stamping plants in South Bend before July, eliminating another 1,000 jobs, says Byers A. Burlingame, Studebaker president. Mr. Burlingame, in Detroit for the National Automobile Dealers Association convention, said Studebaker is seeking another source for engines and bodies.

Mr. Speaker, just as the transfer of certain divisions of the Ford Motor Company from Windsor to Oakville has had a very scarring effect on Windsor, so likewise the cessation of the manufacturing of Studebaker cars in South Bend, Indiana, has had similar effects on South Bend.

Maybe the hon. Minister could point this out to the management of Studebaker and in that way have them consider setting up either engine or stamping plants in the Windsor area. We have vacant factory space, we have willing, capable labour, and we have a new management-union climate. Studebaker will have to seek some new source for its engines and there is no finer place than the Windsor area. To prove this, all one has to do is to spend some time at the Detroit-Windsor bridge or tunnel entrances and see the large numbers of Chrysler-made engines that are now being exported to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt), brought the attention of this House to the need for an extra facility to accommodate a class of aged that to date has not received the attention due it. In the Windsor area, the problem is the more acute because we have twice the provincial average of aged in our community. If my memory serves me right, 13.7 per cent of our population falls into this category, as opposed to a little more than seven for the provincial average.

(Mr. Norris Whitney takes the chair.)

Mr. Speaker, to emphasize the type of accommodation or facility that is required, may I read from an editorial in the Windsor Daily Star on Wednesday, October 9. The editorial, and it is the lead editorial, is headed:

ANOTHER PROVISION REQUIRED TO CARE FOR AGED AND INFIRM

This community has been a leader in providing for the aged and infirm. It has the housing for senior citizens, Riverview Hospital, Huron Lodge and the Senior Citizens' Centre. All this has not cost the community too much. Senior governments have picked up a large part of the bill.

However, there is still one gap to be filled. This is shown by Riverview Hospital being overloaded and Huron Lodge with a waiting list. Meantime there are some in the main hospitals who need not be there if other accommodation could be found for them.

To effect a perfect solution, it is necessary to understand the problems. There are different categories of aged or infirm people requiring different types of accommodation, or treatment. These are, of course, the seriously ill, who need active treatment and intensive care. The place for these is in an ordinary hospital.

There are others who need some medical supervision and therapy but do not need intensive medical care. They may be chronic or convalescent patients. Riverview Hospital is designed for those and does an excellent job.

Then there are those who require some custodial care, being bedridden or semi-bedridden, but who normally do not need much, if any, medical care. Huron Lodge can handle these.

There are the senior citizens who are healthy and well able to look after themselves. The Senior Citizens' housing is ideal for these. There is another category—that of older persons who are unable to entirely fend for themselves, but who are able to get up and about. They can get to the table to eat, and otherwise attend to themselves personally. These are people who might be well accommodated in what was once known as an "old folks home"—which we believe a rather obsolete appellation today.

We believe that this is the missing link in the local set-up. An additional facility is needed. It could be for those infirm people who do not need the medical and therapy treatment available at Riverview. This would permit Huron Lodge to transfer many who are now in the lodge, leaving accommodations for persons who are up and about. Or, in reverse, it could be for an old folks home, for such people, letting Huron Lodge take care of the more infirm who are mostly bedridden.

At the present time, the lodge is trying to serve a dual purpose. There also should be more complete co-ordination in the various facilities. One individual may have a change of condition, making it advisable for him to be moved from one type of accommodation to another. That is difficult. It is impossible if each place is crowded or already has a waiting list.

There is nothing particularly new in this problem. It was discussed a decade ago.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a few remarks to the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass). I notice he is not here in the House at the time, but will be able to read my comments in Hansard.

The service station operators in this province are in dire need of help and protection.

Suppliers completely dominate the retailers. Lessees can be arbitrarily evicted, without stated reason in 24 hours, three days, ten days and sometimes as long as 30-day notices, by their oil company landlords.

Exclusive supply contracts prevent branded dealers from handling competitive products from their suppliers, even when the same products are offered at a cheaper price.

More and more dealers are going bankrupt. A few still remain, needing the protection of the office of the hon. Attorney General. A probe into the petroleum industry, Mr. Speaker, would reveal many startling, unusual business procedures.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), yesterday so ably presented to this House the situation where certain types of salesmen, using high-pressure tactics, legally deprive many of amounts of money, sometimes small, sometimes large. My area has likewise been plagued by such goings on. We have our share of magazine, aluminum siding, chimney repair and food freezer plan salesmen. Most have been honest and reputable but there is always a rotten apple in every barrel. Mr. Speaker, someone must protect the victims of the unscrupulous operators.

A Mrs. X in Windsor, on September 1, 1960, was taken in by a food freezer deal. She complained to everyone who would listen to her complaints. She wrote all the members in the Legislature. She wrote The Prime Minister's Office. Everyone was sympathetic, but this did not help Mrs. X.

Mrs. X, however, is a very persistent woman; one with less determination, and there are many, would have simply given up and paid the agreed amount. Mrs. X, rather than do that, tried to correct the situation; but try as she may, she could do nothing. She found herself the victim of a financing scheme, pure and simple, so as to get her note into the hands of a third party.

A $225 freezer, with a food plan, cost her $525. How many other Mrs. Xs are there throughout this province of opportunity? Yes, opportunity for some; for those some to take advantage of others. I think that the case of Mrs. X should be looked into once again.

All of this points up to some real consumer protection. Let us get rid of this extra two ounces, this eight cents off, this 35 cents off, these special deals which are simply sales gimmicks.

Mr. Speaker, I was most surprised to find that even an organization such as the Reader's Digest would degrade itself to the point where it used misleading advertising gimmicks to sell its fine products.

As a subscriber to its condensed book club, I found myself in the fortunate position of receiving a dividend certificate. This dividend certificate, Mr. Speaker, is from the Reader's Digest condensed book club. It is non-transferable, available to Reader's Digest book club members only. This valuable certificate entitles you to the Reader's Digest New Treasury for Young Readers for free examination. Since when can you not examine a book for nothing?

The back of this dividend certificate says, Mr. Speaker:

Please send me my reserved copy of the Reader's Digest New Treasury for Young Readers for a free examination. If I decide to keep it after having seen it, I may do so at the special, low, members' price of only $3.98 plus a few cents postage.

Get this, Mr. Speaker: the low, members' price of $3.98 plus a few cents postage.

In that same envelope is enclosed—now this was for a ten-day free examination—two postage business reply cards, on the face of which is imprinted, "Please rush" and—this now is an order card to a friend:

Please rush me a copy of Our Human Body for five days' free trial. If I wish to keep it after examination, I may do so at the special Friends of Digest price of only $3.99, postage included.

A big deal. One time it is $3.98 because I am a member, and plus a few cents postage; and when I am not a member, it is $3.99, postage included. And this is from an extremely reputable organization.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, we do not have to put up with such business tactics. How will we not have problems with our youth when those who are to set an example use every legal device to trick or to deceive? Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the hon. Prime Minister mention that a select committee of this Legislature would be formed to look into the problems of youth. It sure is about time.

Let me read just a few of the headlines in various newspapers within the past ten days. I looked for three days and then gave up. Here are six headlines: "Study shows teen-agers poorly fed"; "360,000 pupils boycott schools"; "Increased drinking by teen-agers"; "Number of juveniles charged tripled in five-year period"; "City asks laws to help police combat punks"; "Propose hiring 500 officers to curb crime in schools".

Where is this respect for law? Have we fallen down in the teaching of our pupils? Have our churches failed us or are we, as parents, evading our responsibilities? If the problem is so acute today, just think how serious it will be in 1970, in just a short six years from today, when one half of our population in Ontario will be 25 years of age or under.

Mr. Speaker, you cannot put blame on our youth for all of its behaviour patterns when our country allows the entrance into its boundaries of such people as Mrs. Fisher. I just wonder if some unknown European lady, whose morals were under question, would be allowed as easy access into our fair domain as this 20th-century Cleopatra. This is one type of Yankee that can go home.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Newman: Anyone else any comments now?

An hon. member: How about her boy friend?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Is there something the House should be made aware of?

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): This is being a bit facetious, but someone asked me the other day if I had moved out of the Royal York Hotel to go to the King Edward. I said, "Why?" I was then advised as to what some people thought why people should go to the King Edward Hotel.

Mr. Newman: That is all the hon. Minister knows about it?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: That is all I know about it, yes.

Mr. Newman: Well, we do not know if the King Edward would allow the hon. Minister in there now.

Mr. Speaker, the problems of agriculture and the preservation of the family farm has been given considerable attention by this Legislature for as long as I have been a member. Rightly so. We must bend all our efforts to preserve this bit of free enterprise but I would like to remind the hon. members of this House that there is another phase of free enterprise that has not received the recognition and attention that it deserves, namely, the small family business man. We must not let the small family business man fade out of the picture. He is just as much an integral part of our community as is the small farmer.

All business tends to bigness. The big "eat up", "buy out" or "starve out" the small. We must, by incentive, preserve the small man. He contributes immeasurably to the community; he is live, he is real. The big, or the super-business, on the other hand is cold and callous, and solely interested in how much profit it can make out of its operations. It takes all but gives nothing.

I would like to illustrate this indifferent attitude toward community life taken by Mr. Big, as opposed to Mr. Small. During the community drives, United Fund or Red Feather appeals, Mr. Small is always most active and contributes his fair share. Mr. Big has his employees contribute their fair share. But does this big corporation or business contribute its fair share? Not to my knowledge; for if it does it is the exception rather than the rule.

Mr. Speaker, to protect the small business men, the assessment and business taxes must be revised. I speak so because I know of a small business man whose sales tax collections for a year are less than $20, yet the portion of his property occupied by the store is about 50 per cent of the building volume, thus his business tax is considerable—a business tax of $68, when all the sales tax amounted to was less than $20.

When this was pointed out to the body that listened to the appeal concerning business taxes, this body said it could do nothing. The Assessment Act prevented it from lowering the tax. Surely a small merchant, who operates a small family store, should be given all types of concessions so that he will be able to stay in business and provide a living for his family, without having to fight local business tax problems? Surely some incentives can be given him to enable him to survive against today's odds?

If we do not do something now, just as there are three big auto manufacturers, there will be three or four big merchandisers, three or four big farms, three or four big bankers. Three or four giant corporations will run the whole economy.

Mr. Speaker, during last year's estimates of The Department of Highways, I brought up the case of the suburban road commission and its accompanying legislation. Once again I make the plea: surely it is time that either the government abandoned legislation requiring suburban road commissions, or amend such legislation so that it would be more in keeping with modern conditions, particularly with respect to the inequitable method of cost apportionment, which is based on the irrelevant factor of assessment.

Early in 1963 the city of Windsor budgeted for $108,000 as its contribution to the suburban roads commission. This amount of $108,000 was one-half mill of its 1962 assessment figures. In the meantime, after the completion of its reassessment programme, the city found itself billed for $152,000 by the suburban roads commission. This would be all right if all participating bodies did exactly the same as did the city of Windsor; that is, reassessed their properties.

Windsor equalized its assessment. The surrounding areas maintained their old assessment. This certainly is not a proper attitude.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read just a few comments that should be paid particular attention to by this government. These comments were made by a member who ran for this government in the last election, and surely, if he speaks, he must speak with some authority, with some knowledge on the subject and such that it should hit the ears of the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton). Mayor Gordon Stewart of Riverside described this legislation requiring the half mill appropriation as "silly and outdated". He said that Lorne Cummings, Q.C., deputy Minister of Municipal Affairs, has agreed there should be a change in the present legislation. Mr. Speaker, if the deputy Minister agrees, certainly it is time that this be acted upon.

Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), he can probably read this in Hansard—I would ask him to please review the case of that young lady would-be school teacher in my riding. He is, in my estimation, violating the human rights code by not acting fairly on it. I think to solve the problem he should call in the parents and the young lady for consultation and then explain the case.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one short comment on legislative salaries. Why cannot those of us who would prefer to receive our remuneration in 12 monthly payments receive them, rather than a Christmas advance and a lump payment on or about April 1? Surely it is not a complicated problem. The federal House in Ottawa follows such a procedure. Why not the Ontario House? Those of us who do not find themselves blessed with this world's goods are being penalized to the extent of six per cent of our salaries. We have to borrow money at six per cent.

There are so many different topics that one could bring up, and rather than commenting on them, I will do my best to list a few of them and discuss them in future estimates. I can see the need for government to decentralize some of its operations, so that other parts of the province of Ontario may be fortunate in having some type of permanent steady employment in their areas. For example, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission need not necessarily be located in Toronto. It could be in Cornwall. The sales tax department could be in Kingston, or other areas of the province. Or is this a case of the big getting bigger?

Ontario prospers most and best when all areas of this province are prosperous. Just as we have "have countries" and "have-not countries", we have "have provinces" and "have-not provinces". So also we have "have areas" in the province of Ontario and we have "have-not areas". Let us equalize all of this and eliminate these "have-not areas". In my own local area, I can see the need for a new western Ontario institute of technology—a new trade school, a provincial public building—facilities more needed in my area than in some of the areas in which these facilities are being contemplated, and, in some instances, under construction.

I can see the need for a provincial park in Lake St. Clair, Essex county area. I can see The Department of Travel and Publicity promoting a smelt festival in the Leamington and Point Pelee area. I can see the need for the completion of Highway 401. I can see the need for the application of a $1.25 minimum wage in my area.

(Mr. Speaker resumes the chair.)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I mention that it is quite imperative that the problem of annexation in the Windsor area be settled. It is most difficult for all parties concerned to be able to plan for a future when such an important problem remains undecided. Mr. Speaker, is there not something we can do for poor Mr. Cohen, walking in front of the Parliament buildings?

Mr. W. G. Noden (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on rising to say a few words in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, first I want to congratulate you upon your appointment as Speaker of this assembly. I am sure you will add prestige and dignity to the Parliament of Ontario. To those hon. members who have been elected for the first time to this Legislature, I wish them well in the days to come and to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) and his hon. colleagues, continued good government for the people of this grand old province.

I do not propose to deal with any of the all-over issues of today, but mainly northwestern Ontario, and especially the riding of the Rainy River district. Northwestern Ontario is blessed with a great wealth of natural resources, which, in terms of wealth, are beneficial to the general economy of Ontario. Let there be no mistake on this issue.

I have heard it said in this House that the mining industry is at a standstill. This is not so. In the Steep Rock iron-ore area, Caland Ore Company Limited has announced an expenditure of some $15 million to build a pelletizing plant. This is a large sum of money to be invested in an area where supposedly the mining industry has come to a standstill. The reason for spending money of this nature is to up the efficiency of mining as we think of it today. Pelletizing means a refining process to eliminate moisture, sulphur and other foreign materials in iron ore. That means a saving in freight charges and operation of the steel-making programme in a more efficient manner. And so, today, we have this kind of programme going on—this is the kind of money being spent.

Then I might say that Steep Rock Iron Ore Mines has a similar programme under review which will provide further employment of manpower. There are other mining developments coming into production and under consideration. By this I mean that in one area a considerable amount of money has been spent on exploration work and now it is only a matter of securing a market for the natural resource, and then it will move forward.

Then I would like to refer to the pulp and paper industry. The Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company at Fort Frances has, in the past year, continued to operate on a full-time basis, expanding its operations to take care of the future demands for newsprint and paper specialties. Here again, the natural resources of timber and water have an important bearing on the continuing healthy condition of the industry.

I would mention, in the last six months, a sawmill has been rebuilt in this area by a former member of this Legislature, Mr. J. A. Mathieu, who sat here in 1911. He is 95 years of age today and yet he has faced the challenge of the day to rebuild a sawmill. He operates it and looks after the management of it in every detail. I think it is a challenge to those of the younger group to have that kind of vision and to have that initiative to move forward with a programme of this magnitude. So today there are opportunities for all, whether in the youth bracket or in the aged bracket.

Another industry that is a producer of income to northwestern Ontario is the tourist industry. For the past three years, there has been a consistent increase, most of which originates south of the border in the United States of America, and affects all of north-western Ontario. This past summer practically all licensed tourist camps have been filled to capacity. This is a healthy sign and should continue as the highways are being improved; and the final link in Highway 11 will be completed this coming fall between Fort Frances, Atikokan and the Lakehead cities, which will provide one of the most scenic highways in Canada.

Northwestern Ontario is connected to the great river road system, originating at New Orleans on the Gulf of Mexico, and its terminus is the trans-Canada highway east of Kenora. There are approximately 30 million people within ten miles of this highway, up and down the north and south route of this highway in the centre of the North American continent. It also intercepts Highway 11 at Fort Frances, thus making connections with the two main highways across Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the hon. members that the income from the aforementioned three industries is in import dollars, which are so necessary to the healthy condition of Ontario's economy.

Another natural resource is water, which is so important to the life of every individual. The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario has developed, throughout northwestern Ontario, hydro-generating plants which are producing electric energy in excess of the present demand. This surplus of electric energy is available for the expansion of industry, and I am sure there are industries looking for locations, away from the high property values, where they can expand and at the same time be assured of the necessary hydro-electric power. These two items are available in the Rainy River district for industry seeking to expand; yes, in the centre of the North American continent.

Yesterday I listened with interest to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Freeman) and I take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate him upon his maiden speech in this assembly. I was not in agreement with certain statements, when he referred to house-boats, border-crossing privileges granted to our American friends, as well as the increasing aircraft traffic as it relates to the supposed abuses of the natural resources, fish and game. Might I inform the hon. members of this assembly that the border-crossing privilege was granted by the federal government, and the house-boat and aircraft traffic operates under international coastal laws.

The province of Ontario invites our American friends by the advertising in United States newspapers, magazines, radio, television and other means, to visit Ontario, to enjoy what we have to offer—resorts, parks, highways, waterways, fish and game and the scenic beauties of the countryside. It is our desire to treat them as citizens without discrimination when they are within our province.

The province of Ontario, through The Department of Lands and Forests, is providing protection to our natural resources from this supposed infraction of our provincial laws. This past summer extra conservation officers were employed to patrol the border waters at Rainy Lake and Lake-of-the-Woods, and on several occasions it has come to my attention they are doing a good job. The Department of Lands and Forests aircraft make patrols at random to check the airplanes which land on the waters of our lakes. I realize this is a broad field and to police it is just about impossible. And yet we are living in a day and age when aircraft are with us; they have their rights, and I am sure that 99.9 per cent of the people who own these airplanes want to obey our laws, although there is the exception to the rule.

The government of Ontario should not be criticized for any supposed abuses of our natural resources which are created by federal immigration and customs regulations and international coastal laws.

I bring this to the hon. members' attention because of the fact that the province of Ontario and the government of Ontario are asked to do more towards the maintaining of our law in regard to the preservation of our natural resources. I feel that The Department of Lands and Forests is doing a good job and will continue to do a similar job.

There is one other matter that I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. members of this assembly and that is the agriculture possibilities of the Rainy River district. This past summer we were privileged to have the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) and his officials visit the farm lands of the valley. The present deputy Minister, Mr. Biggs, in different capacities, has visited our area on five different occasions because of the future farming possibilities that are apparent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I turn to this subject that each year is growing in importance in the area which I have the honour to represent—agriculture.

I am convinced, and I am sure that there is wide appreciation of this fact, that the day is not too far distant when, as a result of our increasing population and the gradual encroachment of industry on our farm lands of southern Ontario, the agricultural potential of northern Ontario will have to be exploited to the full.

I am happy to note that this government is fully appreciative of this trend, and that The Department of Agriculture, through its programmes and policies, is endeavouring to assist the development of agriculture in the northern areas.

Contrary to the general belief of many, the Rainy River district is well suited to the needs of agriculture. We have been blessed with good top soil and have wide acreage to develop it. Our farm land is a continuation of the Agassiz Plain, a good clay-loam soil that extends over from the province of Manitoba. At present there are 77,209 acres of developed farm land under cultivation. Over 18,000 head of cattle and some 9,000 head of sheep roam our pasture lands. The value of our field crops is over $1,700,000. And our production of butter, cheese, feed grains, represents a sizeable contribution to the agricultural economy.

Mr. Speaker, here in this area I feel we have the potential to take care of the needs of the future, particularly if we take those steps necessary to ensure our agricultural development. For many years, farmers in the Rainy River district have been handicapped by a lack of adequate drainage facilities, a condition that has proved to be a limiting factor to the further improvement and diversification of crop production.

I realize that, in southwestern Ontario, the drainage that has taken place in the past maybe has had some bearing on the drought that existed in this past year. We, in northern Ontario, can take a leaf out of that observation of what has taken place and be careful with what we are about to do today.

In this connection, I was glad to see that the hon. Minister of Agriculture observed this lack of drainage in mind and sent an engineering specialist into the district to check on the situation. His report emphasized that the main deterrent to developing drainage programmes under The Drainage Act was the lack of qualified drainage engineers in the district and the lack of understanding on the part of municipal officials and farmers on procedures by which to obtain assistance under that legislation.

I am told that this lack of drainage engineers has resulted in engineering costs far out of proportion to the cost of construction, sometimes as high as 30 per cent of the cost of the work. The result has been that many farmers have tried to construct the ditches themselves, which are improperly designed to handle the drainage.

Several farm organizations have made representations to me suggesting that The Department of Agriculture prepare an overall drainage plan for the district. This I have been working on for some considerable time.

I realize that this would be a costly undertaking, and would therefore suggest that where a group of farmers wishes to improve its drainage under the provisions of the existing Drainage Act, that the department provide the services of a qualified engineer to survey and design the plan, allocate benefit, and supervise the construction. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that since this is a function that should be handled by engineers outside of the civil service, the engineer could be engaged by the initiating municipality from a list of engineers approved by the department, from the standpoint of qualifications.

It would seem to me that this would be an undertaking which would come well within the provisions of ARDA and that perhaps the hon. Minister would consider federal participation in connection with this drainage problem. I leave that to his good judgment. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, this drainage plan would have many advantages. It would provide for local initiative, as well as having the additional value of utilizing the existing legislation.

I feel sure that the farmers of Rainy River would consider me remiss if I did not express their appreciation of the steps taken by The Ontario Department of Agriculture to assist them in the development of the beef industry of the area. In keeping with the policy of helping the farmers to help themselves, the bank guarantee provided by the government for the purchase of suitable cattle has had a marked effect on livestock breeding in the area.

During the summer of 1962, the beef cattle producers of Rainy River held a meeting to discuss ways and means of increasing and improving the beef production. A survey indicated that beef herds on various farms were not large enough to produce a satisfactory income. Most farmers had surplus pasture and fodder. This is something we have—pasture lands—and we have hay, we have an excess amount of it at all times. It was found that at least ten additional cows could be maintained without a change in cropping methods. The problem was the purchasing of additional cattle by each individual.

It was decided to appoint a committee to purchase cattle for all the farmers in the district, in order that a large number of cows could be brought from the west at a minimum of cost. The government assisted by means of guaranteeing the bank loans made to farmers for this purpose. The farmer was to pay down ten per cent of the cost, with five years being allowed for repayment of the loan. In other words, the reproduction would eventually pay off the cost of the cattle.

It is interesting to note that this self-help programme, which I have referred to previously, with the assistance of the government has not only been proved to be practical, but has also had a more important effect of stimulating the beef cattle industry in this section of the province.

Cattle were purchased in 1962 and placed on approved farms by the committee, with 86 per cent of the cows raising healthy calves. The experiment was repeated in 1963 with equal success and several good bulls were purchased as well. All the farmers signed notes at the bank to make annual payments and all but one farmer have lived up to their obligation. This do-it-yourself programme is worthy of commendation and points up just another way in which this government seeks to assist the farmers of Ontario in all of their undertakings.

Mr. Speaker, another little-known programme of the government to assist farmers in the northern sections of the province is the assistance given by the livestock branch of The Department of Agriculture to farmers who were being harassed by predatory animals. Many farmers had just about given up hope as far as sheep-raising is concerned. The livestock branch of the department was called upon to assist in combating the problem. Grants to co-operating farmers were made and some ten farms, as a matter of fact, 11 farms, had pasture areas fenced to give maximum protection against predatory animals.

These fences have proved to be practical and worthwhile. During 1962, more than 1,000 sheep were enclosed, with only one loss being reported and that was from an unknown cause. In this experiment, a total of 545 acres was enclosed and there was no evidence that the one loss was due to wolves, although several were seen in the area.

That, I think, is but another indication of the co-operation existing between the farm people of the north and this government and its far-reaching agricultural programme. This programme was worked out over a three-year period. The experiment has proved to an extent that predatory control can be a success when proper fencing is built for sheep raising in any area of northern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, there is no question that the Robarts government is aware of the tremendous potential of north-western Ontario—especially the Rainy River district—by co-operating and assisting in a development programme of expansion that will be beneficial to the economy of all of Ontario in the years to come. Thank you.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, already a number of the hon. members of this House have indicated their satisfaction with the selection of you as Speaker. May I associate myself with the hon. members of this group, and Mr. Speaker, may I say to you that you have had an opportunity to be tested, even earlier this morning, and we have not found you wanting. To your deputy (Mr. Noden) who has just completed a report on some of the accomplishments in his area, may I say to you, sir, congratulations on your appointment as deputy Speaker.

We have a tendency, Mr. Speaker, so frequently in this House, to take for granted the services of the Sergeant-at-Arms. May I at this time tell him, sir, that I think that he lends considerable dignity to the performance in the House, in the way that he enters the room, the way he bows to you, sir, at the beginning and at the conclusion of our meetings.

It is always an honour to be chosen to move the Speech from the Throne like the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Butler) and to second it like the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard). I suppose the hon. member for Waterloo North was selected because he had been successful in replacing the former leader of the Opposition. It was quite obvious that the people of Ontario did not approve of the campaign of abuse and vilification and they preferred, of course, to elect the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the Progressive-Conservative government.

May I say that I spoke in Eglinton riding to a number of groups just previous to the September 25 election and suggested to them that this was a different leader of the Opposition than I had met in the Legislature. I explained that I had tremendous personal respect for Mr. Wintermeyer. When I met with him and talked with him he was most affable. He was a very hard-working member and most likable, and I wish him well in the work that he now pursues.

I was wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether the hon. member for Hamilton Centre was going to make history for one of the major parties, because in our by-election which took place two years ago I had a very formidable opponent who was also a female. At that time she came very close to winning the election for another major party—the Liberal Party. Mrs. Newman, of course, was the selection of the Liberal Party in our last election in Eglinton. The Liberal Party had built its hopes on Mrs. Newman, who did an excellent job for the people of Toronto. She was a very able representative, having served well as a trustee, as an alderman and as a senior controller, and I congratulate the Liberals on their appointee in Eglinton.

The NDP selection for Eglinton was a man by the name of Tom Stevens, who had served in East York Collegiate for some 34 years as a teacher, a very suitable and a high calibre candidate for Eglinton.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): How did the hon. member happen to get elected?

Mr. Reilly: Well, we had an excellent organization, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): And lots of money.

Mr. Reilly: Yes, I would say that money did enter into every campaign in all sections of Ontario, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sopha: And the hon. member had margarine, too.

Mr. Reilly: Yes, that was also helpful. I would say to the hon. member for Sudbury, that I do not think margarine did any harm.

And I would like to congratulate the people of Eglinton in the choice that they made.

Mr. Speaker, may I also welcome into this House the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop), who acquitted himself so well. We have made a number of firsts in the province of Ontario, and this certainly was one of them. Another first for the province of Ontario was the entrance of a Negro representative into this House. I sat here a day or two ago and listened to the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Braithwaite) telling us why he had selected the Liberal Party and its promising future. That brought back memories of two years ago when other Liberal members told us the same thing. Many of them, at the time of my by-election, when I came in along with the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Harris), said on this side of the House: "Tell us what happened in the by-elections. Tell us how victorious you were." And several times they reminded us of what had happened during by-elections.

Now they are not talking about any by-elections—

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): There are no vacancies.

Mr. Reilly: They are not asking about the results of the general election on September 25. Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Etobicoke suggested that his hon. leader (Mr. Oliver) would do everything that was possible to help, I want to assure him that he has been doing everything possible to help the Liberal Party for 37 years. And may I say to you, sir, that the hon. member who represents the Liberal Party as their leader brings to this House a great deal of dignity. I admire his composure. I think, that what we like most about the hon. member for Grey South is the fact that he deals with the principles, the projects, the policies of government and refuses to engage in personalities.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Do not carry this too far!

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Opposition has indicated to this House that we should give some thought to economy in government. This was when he was responding to the Speech from the Throne, saying that before adding taxes to the people of Ontario, that we should be thinking in terms of making sure that our own house is clean and clear.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Too late after you add them.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, what he says is true. I doubt if there is a business or an industry of any kind that could not improve upon its own methods and upon its own procedures. Certainly in a government like this, which has a series of Ministers and deputy Ministers, surely this is one of the things that we should think about. Perhaps every hon. Minister here should approach his deputy Minister, and every deputy Minister should approach senior officials in his department to see what could be done to improve the efficiency of our government. This is a natural thing in business and is, of course, necessary in government business.

But when the hon. leader of the Opposition was talking about 20 years in government, I detected, Mr. Speaker, that he spoke in a derogatory manner as if it was a liability to be in government for 20 years. May I suggest to him it is a decided asset to be in government and to operate as we have done here for the past 20 years. And one does not judge, necessarily, a government by the length of time it has been in service. I am sure the hon. leader of the Opposition would hardly like for it to be said that because he has been 37 years here it is detrimental to the job that he is doing for Grey South.

On the contrary, I think he is doing an excellent job, and one does not judge it merely because he has been here for the longest number of years of any hon. member in this House. As a matter of fact, I would be inclined to agree with the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), who suggested that some recognition should be given to the hon. leader of the Opposition on his 40th year of service to this province. If a motion is in order, I would be glad to second it.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): That is real co-operation.

Mr. Reilly: We never know what the future brings, Mr. Speaker, but it was quite obvious that the people of Ontario were not swayed by extravagant claims or extravagant charges last September. Not only did they vote for the Progressive-Conservative government—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): A minority of them did.

Mr. Reilly: Not only did they vote and show their satisfaction, they did so with enthusiasm.

Mr. Bryden: A minority of them.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I was never prouder of the hon. Prime Minister than I was on election night. You see, it would have been an opportunity, if he felt so inclined, perhaps to gloat; but he refused to do so. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the article that I read in the paper said: "I do not regard this as a personal victory, I do not regard this as a party victory, but I look upon this as an opportunity and a challenge to do even a better job for the citizens of Ontario and of Canada."

He was not, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): He made a poor start; nothing on the books yet.

Mr. Reilly: He was not, Mr. Speaker, speaking in terms of last year's accomplishments; but, as the Speech from the Throne has already indicated, there are forty things on the books in preparation for tomorrow's goals. The hon. leader of the Opposition somewhat euphemistically and optimistically enunciated one of the tenets of the optimist's creed when he said, "We shall forget the mistakes of the past. We shall press on to the greater victories of the future."

In doing so, we will think in terms of what the record actually is. What is our record, Mr. Speaker?

An hon. member: Pretty poor.

Mr. Reilly: Check any department and the record is there.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, you bet it is!

Mr. Reilly: You bet!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reilly: About 20 years ago, Mr. Speaker, I understand that we gave some $8 million in education grants.

Mr. Sopha: Well, are people better educated today because of the money?

Mr. Reilly: Twenty years later in 1963, Mr. Speaker, last year, we gave $233 million in grants.

Mr. Sopha: Does that make them better educated?

Mr. Reilly: Twenty years ago, Mr. Speaker, I understand we gave some $3 million to three universities, and last year something like about $70 million to 16 universities.

Mr. Sopha: Fallacy, fallacy!

Mr. Reilly: In The Department of Lands and Forests, where we had some eight parks in 1943; we had some 85 parks in 1963.

Mr. Sopha: And a new Minister.

Mr. Bryden: If the hon. member is going to prove they are not as bad as the Liberals, we will agree with him.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Walker) has indicated that in the field of health, 20 years ago some $12 million were spent. We in this government have spent some $150 million in 1963 including Ontario Hospital Services Commission. It is not only a question of spending money, it is a question of what has been done with the money that has been spent.

Mr. Sopha: Right.

Mr. Reilly: During recent years, in the field of transport, The Motor Vehicles Claims Act, the former Unsatisfied Judgments Act has been introduced. In the field of labour, this government brought in The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act, in 1944 and since 1944 it has been introducing a series of amendments and provisions for the betterment of the workers.

Mr. Bryden: Not for that Act.

Mr. Reilly: Well, sir, for a series of Acts. In 1960-61, The Human Rights Code was brought in for the betterment of the workers. I have a report here which indicates that we have spent something like five times the amount on welfare that was spent 20 years ago in 1943.

Mr. Sopha: Well, whose money is it? The hon. member keeps saying "we".

Mr. Reilly: This is part of our accomplishment. You are talking about our being in office for 20 years. Only one source of money is available and it is quite obvious that the money comes from the people.

An hon. member: Hear, hear! That is right.

Mr. Sopha: Including us.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reilly: This report, Mr. Speaker, from The Department of Public Welfare alone, indicates that in the past ten years there have been many notable advances in welfare legislation, both in progressive revision and updating of former measure.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, Leonard, you were better on margarine.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, in 1951, in co-operation with the federal government, Ontario passed the necessary enabling legislation and commenced to provide old age assistance to needy persons in the age range of 65 to 69 years of age inclusive. In 1952, the province of Ontario inaugurated a programme under its own auspices to provide allowances to disabled persons.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): That is when you said 401 was going to be completed.

Mr. Reilly: The first province in Canada to introduce such a measure, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reilly: And what about homes for the aged? Homes for the aged were practically unknown 20 to 30 years ago. Most of us kept our mothers and fathers in our own homes. Well, what is happening today? There has been a new and vigorous programme pressed forward in the construction of new homes and the modernizing of existing structures. Here is the record for a ten-year period: 26 new homes have been erected and 29 additions have been built.

Mr. Oliver: By whom?

Mr. Reilly: By your government. I am reading from the report of The Department—

Mr. Bryden: Everything is—

Mr. Reilly: — of Public Welfare, Mr. Speaker, and here it deals with rehabilitation services. In 1955 the Legislature gave approval to The Rehabilitation Services Act, the first province in Canada to have such legislation. The Children's Boarding Homes Act was introduced for the first time in 1957, to ensure safety of children boarded in private dwellings. The homemakers and nurses services, a programme that is unique in Canada, is now in effect in this province. It was brought into being in 1958 with the enactment of The Homemakers and Nurses Act.

Mr. Bryden: It is hardly a drop in the bucket in relation to the problem.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to you that there has been no complacency on the part of our government. Our government has made it a point to say that we are not prepared to rest on our laurels. Nor are we going to be arrogant. What we are going to do is continue to do the job that has been given to us as a responsible government.

Mr. J. M. Gould (Bracondale): Money spenders!

Mr. Reilly: This is one reason why I suppose we have to think in terms, Mr. Speaker, of some of the money that is going to be spent from the standpoint of the medical health service. In this House a few days ago, I sat and listened to the very able hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis), who told us some of the reasons why we should support the philosophy of the NDP as far as medical care is concerned. May I strongly suggest that I do not share the philosophy of the NDP on this, but I congratulate the hon. member on the presentation of his views. The hon. member for Scarborough West would lead us to believe that a government-controlled universal health scheme is widely accepted and that everybody is happy with the situation which exists in Britain today. Well, I received a letter from a friend of mine recently, a letter in which he sent me a clipping from the News of the World, November 24. In it, Kenneth Barrett, a director of the Hilton Bureau, answered some questions. It would appear by the tone of some of the questions and answers that everybody is not happy with—

Mr. Bryden: About 95 per cent of the people are, that is the point, there is always somebody—

Mr. Reilly: Granted that when people are sick they often become querulous, Mr. Speaker, and under the circumstances they send in questions. It is hard to satisfy them. No matter what kind of a government-sponsored scheme we have, we are still going to find that there are people who will find fault with it. Here is one question: "I called the doctor out late last night. When he left he told me he never wanted to see me again, and he was going to have our names struck off the list." He asked, "Can the doctor really insist?" And the answer is, if he tells you or the local executive council that he will not have your names on the list any longer, then they must remove them.

Mr. Sopha: Who was it calling him, Christine?

Mr. Bryden: Do you not want medical freedom?

Mr. Reilly: Another question reads: "I have been in hospital for some six weeks and cannot manage very well, from the standpoint of money. Now I am told that my benefit will shortly be reduced. Is this true?" Well, the answer is that it is assumed that it costs your wife less to keep while you are in the hospital, so the benefits are reduced.

Somebody else says, "I prefer to pay privately for medical treatment because I do not like being kept waiting and treated like a mere number." These are a series of questions and answers that would indicate to me, Mr. Speaker, that everybody is not happy with a universal health scheme as it is operated in Britain.

Mr. Sopha: I would say to the hon. member that I am due at Osgoode Hall, but this is so entertaining I cannot leave.

Mr. Reilly: May I say to the hon. member for Sudbury, Mr. Speaker, that I appreciate his indulgence.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reilly: But, Mr. Speaker, what was the situation as far as the health costs in Britain? They did not estimate the way the hon. leader of the NDP (Mr. MacDonald) did. It was not conjecture. It was actually decided that it was going to cost £170 million to operate this system. But what actually happened? Five years later, in 1960 to 1961, instead of £170 million, their cost was something like £809 million.

Mr. Gisborn: This is a real Tory argument.

Mr. Reilly: Five times as much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bryden: How could the Tory government—

Mr. Reilly: Well, I am not saying there is anything wrong. I am merely establishing what happened, Mr. Speaker, from the standpoint of costs. What it costs today may not be what it costs a year from today.

Mr. Bryden: There was a Tory government in then; what did they do about it?

Mr. Reilly: Our Tory government right here, Mr. Speaker, has experienced a somewhat similar situation with the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. Dr. Urquhart, the former director of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, told us that the operating costs were something like 255 per cent of the original estimate. He went on to predict that it is going to be 355 per cent increase by 1965.

On the other hand we have people, hon. members of this House, who are saying, "Let us have more medical services. Let us even include drugs. Let us do something from the standpoint of the dental costs." And we even have an hon. member, the hon. member for Parkdale, who suggests that we provide income protection. Yes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would be inclined to think this is ideal, this is excellent, as long as the people are willing to pay for it.

Mr. Bryden: They are. They are willing to pay for some things.

Mr. Reilly: Perhaps the last thought, from the standpoint of income protection, was the best thought. Instead of just paying a medical man and a dentist, let us be in a position to pay everybody, pay the landlord, pay for our rent, pay for our mortgage and pay for our food on our table. An income protection plan would enable us to pay everybody, in addition to the doctor and the dentist, but surely there is some responsibility for us as individuals to do it, and not let the government do it?

Mr. Bryden: When you are making $70 a week it is not quite so easy.

Mr. Reilly: In a recent issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail I saw where there were a couple of surveys backing Medicare. In one of these it pointed out that there were 210 provincial residents affected, Mr. Speaker. I could tell you of a better survey that was taken throughout Ontario; and, in Eglinton riding alone, there were some 30,000 people or better who cast their votes, and less than 10 per cent of them cast their votes in favour of the NDP candidate who supported the Medicare programme. So I can only conclude that the people of Eglinton who are intelligent voters, are satisfied with the programme that was submitted to them at election.

Mr. Sopha: There is not enough evidence of that.

Mr. Reilly: As a matter of fact, at that time, Mr. Speaker, I made it a point to let the people of Eglinton know exactly what were issues and what were not. I even suggested to them that the main issue was the Medicare programme suggested by NDP people.

Mr. Sopha: I trust the hon. member will forgive me, but I have to leave.

Mr. Reilly: Do not run away.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): It is very good over here.

Mr. Reilly: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is within ten minutes of the hour and my audience, which was few to begin with, is dwindling.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): The Opposition perhaps are leaving, that is all.

Mr. Reilly: So I will switch to a subject that the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) brought to the attention of this House. When he spoke here, Mr. Speaker, he suggested that some hon. members of the Opposition were smiling cynically during his presentation. He went on to talk about placing some kind of restrictions on pornographic literature, and stated that he was opposed to the salacious literature that appears on the newstands.

Well, I want to tell the hon. member for Nipissing that we on the government side are vitally and genuinely concerned about salacious literature as it appears on our stands. Everyone here knows how easy it is for youngsters to form impressions, particularly during the plastic years of their lives; and children should be protected from unwarranted publicity which has a tendency to blur their moral standards.

I know that censorship is not a very popular word, but when undesirable influences come into our homes, and into the homes where we have growing children, we have no alternative but to guard against them. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should urge our community leaders, our home and school directors, members of the clergy, and other interested officials, to stand up for stricter moral laws. It seems that loose sexual conduct no longer shocks or even disturbs us. In fact immoral citizens appear to receive extra publicity as if their actions were being condoned. No wonder our youngsters today have distorted values.

Within the last few days the local newspapers here carried headlines about visiting movie stars. Captions such as: "She's here!", "Look, dear, it's Rosie and Wally", "Time to hold hands and a drink", and other such headings were used to welcome an actor and an actress of doubtful moral standards.

Mr. Gisborn: They sure got the attention of the hon. member.

Mr. Reilly: And they should get the attention, Mr. Speaker, of every hon. member of this assembly. One would almost think, Mr. Speaker—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The chair likes a little bit of levity as well as all the members in the House, but I respectfully suggest to you that if we are going to keep decorum and dignity in the House—which is as it should be—then the members will have to allow the member speaking to finish his speech without any further crossfire or interjections.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): That is a provocative subject.

Mr. Reilly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When you read headings of this nature, you would almost think an arrangement was made for a welcome of the Royal family particularly on the basis of the amount of publicity that has been given by the press, and by radio, and by TV. And paradoxically enough, Mr. Speaker, these same media would be used to ostracize any hon. member in this assembly whose personal morals were not of the highest standard. It seems that family life is undergoing a strain these days, particularly when we read observations of a noted physician from San Francisco who says:

Many men not suitable for matrimony. For the normal husband to remain faithful to his wife is too much to expect, because monogamous marriage is a bizarre and unnatural state. Perhaps it is time, said Dr. Russell V. Lee during a symposium on family problems, to see if some other arrangement cannot be worked out.

Well, I should like, Mr. Speaker, to tell Dr. Lee that there are hundreds of thousands of men and women who still believe in the sanctity of the marriage vows. I should like to remind him what happens to a nation that ignores the fundamental laws of living.

I read recently that the divorce rate some years ago in the United States was one out of 33 marriages. In 1960, it was one out of every three marriages. Recently I read where 13 million out of the 45 million children do not live with both the parents in the United States.

The significance of sex morality was underlined by Dr. David Mace, in his book called, Does Sex Morality Matter?

He says that the relaxation of sexual restraints has always led to the downfall of civilization. Further, Mr. Speaker, Mahatma Gandhi is reported to have said, "The future belongs to the nations which are chaste". In last year's presidential address, the president of the British medical association spoke of the need for a more rigid examination of the moral character of those entering medical school. Also, Mr. Speaker, a senior professor at a medical dental school in Great Britain recently said:

If you use the yardstick of intellectual ability and technical skill, these students are the finest we ever had. If you use a moral yardstick, they are the worst we ever had.

Said Robert Moskin, an American writer, recently:

We are witnessing the death of the old morality. In our world of masses of people, jet age travel, nuclear power and fragmented families, conditions are changing so fast that the established moral guard lines have been yanked out from us.

I have talked about the achievements over the past 20 years, Mr. Speaker, and I have my eye on the clock so I will bear in mind the irrevocable law of the public speaker to make sure that he is finished on time, Mr. Speaker.

When we talk about what has been accomplished over the past 20 years, perhaps we should give some thought as to what are to be our moral standards of the next 20 years. If we want to do something about it, we had better do something about it soon.

Surely this is a current problem facing modern education? Perhaps the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), when he is studying revisions in curriculum for the secondary schools, might include some instruction about the importance of chastity previous to marriage and fidelity after marriage. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. Prime Minister, with his proposed select committee on the development of youth opportunity, could study this problem, Mr. Speaker, with a view to avoiding the deterioration of moral principles.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I would like to advise the hon. members that on Monday we will carry on from the order paper and that any item on the order paper should be available for discussion by the House.

Hon. Mr. Cass moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.00 o'clock, p.m.

—

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Monday, February 10, 1964

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Monday, February 10, 1964

Department of Agriculture Act, bill to amend, Mr. Stewart, first reading	513
Resumption of the debate on the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Randall, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Yakabuski, Mr. Belanger	516
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Wishart, agreed to	538
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	538

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, FEBRUARY, 10, 1964

The House met at 3.00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the east gallery students from Alexander Muir Senior School, Toronto, and in the west gallery students from the Rockway Mennonite School, Kitchener.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves, seconded by Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways), first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Department of Agriculture Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): I might say, Mr. Speaker, that this is the second time this year we have brought in an amendment to The Department of Agriculture Act. It just reached our attention within the last few days that certain municipalities in northern Ontario, which have been paying a grant—as The Department of Agriculture pays a grant—to subsidize veterinary service in northern Ontario, found that there was no real basis under which they could pay it under the statutes. It came to our attention just recently, and so we are amending the Act to make it permissible for municipalities to pay grants to veterinarians, where our department may also subsidize the veterinarians in northern Ontario areas.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis). When will the brief presented to the hon. Minister last December, sir, by the Ontario Council of University Faculty Associations be made available to the public and would the hon. Minister care to comment on the story by Hugh Munro in Saturday's Globe and Mail in respect to this brief?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the brief that was prepared for presentation to the government of Ontario by the Ontario Council of University Faculty Associations will be discussed by the council with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and myself on Wednesday, February 19. As the brief was prepared by the Ontario Council of University Faculty Associations, it may be released at any time subject to the discretion of the council.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) which I submitted on Friday, but due to his absence on Friday morning, I withheld until today. Are the lists of the inquests and the jurors who served thereon in the Metropolitan Toronto area a matter of public record and, if so, where can they be secured?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for withholding this until today, because on Friday I joined with the great majority of the members of my profession at the annual meeting of the Ontario section of the Bar Association and hence was not in my seat until noon.

The answer to the question as posed by the hon. member for York South is no. But I would say this, that there is no statutory provision that lists of inquests and the jurors who serve thereon are matters of public record. This information, however, is available at the office of the Crown attorney in proper circumstances.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Attorney General a supplementary question? What are proper circumstances?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, the proper circumstances undoubtedly and indubitably would be the circumstances surrounding each request. I would suggest that if there is someone who wishes to have this list that he make inquiry in the proper office and in the proper manner, and if the circumstances are proper, the lists will be available.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), in a speech in this House Thursday, February 6, 1964, stated that Trenton Memorial Hospital board was "promised sufficient funds by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission to break the strike." Since I report to you and to the House for this commission, I must emphatically, and with all vigour, deny this allegation.

The hon. member also referred to this hospital as a "semi-public institution which is closely connected with the Ontario Hospital Services Commission." Again, Mr. Speaker, he is in error. Trenton Memorial Hospital is chartered under the laws of Ontario as a public general hospital. The property is vested in a legally constituted board of governors, and they are responsible for the operation of the hospital. Since it is a public hospital, it is approved for the treatment of patients insured under the Ontario Hospital Care Plan. This is the connection the Ontario Hospital Services Commission has with this hospital, as with all other public hospitals in the province. OHSC does not "run" the hospital, or direct it, or formulate its policies. It approves a budget that will be acceptable to OHSC.

Sir, to return to the statement implying that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission provided the board with funds to enable the breaking of a strike:

1. When the strike at this hospital was imminent, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission made certain by contact with the hospital that it had a satisfactory plan designed to permit the hospital to operate at its usual capacity, and to ensure that the necessary supplies would be available.

2. It was emphasized to the chairman of the board of the hospital that, in the event of a strike, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission's primary concern was for the care of the patients in the hospital, and to assure that the care was adequate, an inspector from OHSC was appointed. He visited the hospital on several occasions during the strike and brought back reports—all of which indicated that he was satisfied that adequate care was being given to the patients.

3. At the time the hospital went on strike on October 31, 1963, a total of 38 employees left their jobs in the hospital.

4. At this time, the hospital engaged replacements on a gradual basis. All of the staff engaged to fill the positions vacated by those who had gone on strike were paid on an hourly rate. The rates that were paid were practically equivalent to the salary ranges available in the hospital for full-time employees.

For example: The salary range for nursing aides in effect in 1963 was $130 to $170 per month. The nursing aides who were engaged were paid $1 per hour. This would be the equivalent pay at the top of the range, but without any added perquisites. It was not possible to engage certified nursing assistants or the full complement of nursing aides, so that most of the nursing positions were filled by registered nurses, who were paid an hourly rate of $1.75. At the time the strike commenced, the hospital was paying a basic salary for general duty nurses, of $320 per month or $1.88 per hour.

5. In conversation with the hospital, there is no accurate or easily accessible information available about the costs which were entailed in hiring this additional staff. But it is the opinion of the administrator, with which I concur, that very little, if any, additional salaries and wages were paid to those who were engaged to work in the hospital, over the salaries and wages that would have been paid to the employees who went on strike.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. Minister is in order in line with the ruling you made, sir, the other day, when the hon. Minister of Economics (Mr. Randall) stood on the floor before the orders of the day in a manner similar to the hon. Minister of Health, first to contradict a statement made by another speaker in the Throne Speech debate, but subsequently to elaborate on that substantially and to argue the point. It would be my opinion that the hon. Minister of Health, perhaps for the first three or four sentences, was in order, but I think as he has elaborated on this statement, that his remarks would much more properly be in order in the Throne Speech debate or in his estimates. This approach, Mr. Speaker, as we mentioned the other day, should not be allowed because it gives to hon. Cabinet Ministers an absolutely unfair advantage over all the other members of the House. And I would request you, sir, as you did the other day, to rule these remarks out of order.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, could I just comment on this point of order? I do not think it is an unfair advantage and I would say that the Cabinet Ministers have a much larger responsibility to this House than have any other hon. members. If comments are made about the operation of various matters which are their responsibility and these comments are in error for whatever reason, then I think the hon. Cabinet Minister concerned owes it to this House and to the people of this province to make these statements.

I have watched this point of order building up since the Legislature opened, and of course all hon. members know that a member is restricted to one participation in the Throne Speech debate. To say that on this side of the House, sir, a Cabinet Minister is restricted to taking part in the Throne Speech debate to make his answers to questions such as this, is obviously ridiculous because the Throne Speech debate could have ended three days ago, and there really is no debate in which the answers could take place.

I would say the alternative, of course, would be if a Minister cannot produce the answers for the government in this House, which is a completely unthinkable thing, that the government of the province of Ontario is not permitted to answer allegations that are made about it in this House.

What would we do? Call a press conference an hour before the House opens and distribute the information in that fashion? Of course, we would not. We come here and we answer the allegations where we should answer them—in the House. And I think the public is certainly entitled to a great deal of detail in some of these matters.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add to this point of order. I want to show you, Mr. Speaker, just how complex this situation is. In the course of his remarks—and I just take one brief point to illustrate it—the hon. Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker, has stated that when the strike began the hospital management went out to get people to replace the strikers. The fact of the matter is that they had replaced them a week or two weeks before, in order to have a duplicate staff.

Mr. Speaker: The member will have to speak to the point of order and not get into the allegations or the reply by the Minister.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, all I am suggesting is that the hon. Minister was getting into an argument and he was presenting facts which I am now suggesting are in error; just as the hon. Minister rose to say that the facts of the hon. member for Park-dale were in error. So I am illustrating to you, Mr. Speaker, that if a member of the Cabinet is able to get up and in effect indulge in debate in disputing something that has been said on this side of the House, he has two opportunities to debate as compared with our one.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

It is my opinion that the Minister was quite in order in his remarks. He is responsible for the purview of his department, particularly with regard to allegations made regarding that department. The subject matter which he was giving to the House was in my opinion in that category and I have not found anything about his remarks as yet that would lead me to believe that he was making any kind of a political reply.

I am going to ask the House to allow the Minister to continue with his remarks and until he gets into a part that in my opinion becomes quite argumentative and political, then, and only at that time, shall I ask him to desist.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure, sir, with the association we have had over the last nine years you will never find me argumentative.

6. The strike was settled on February 5, 1964, and the hospital is now in the process of reinstating the former employees and discharging those who were engaged to take their places. This transition will take about a period of one week, so that all of the staff that was engaged at the time of the strike commenced will be out of the hospital by February 12 or 13.

7. In lieu of notice to those employees who were engaged at the time the strike commenced, the hospital has made them an accepted offer to pay to each, on the termination of their employment, severance pay equivalent to two weeks' salary plus two days' vacation pay for each month worked. This will work out to about seventeen days of pay for each employee.

This allowed for the immediate reinstatement of the former employees of the hospital.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, it can be seen that this in no way was promising or "giving funds to break a strike".

I repeat for emphasis, sir, that the sole concern of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission is the maintenance and continuance of adequate patient care.

Mr. MacDonald: That is in error as well as argumentative.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Fifteenth order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege of listening to many of the new hon. members make their maiden speeches in the House and also some of the veterans do likewise. They have all, sir, congratulated you on your appointment and on the quiet and competent discharge of your duties, and, sir, I join them in this compliment.

As a new member, I am sure if we follow your advice we can in time make a more worthy contribution to the Legislature and the work in the days ahead.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Noden), the Deputy Speaker, who I am sure will lighten your burdens in the future. We extend our congratulations to him and wish him all the best in his high office.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of newspaper controversy on various governments across Canada about the role of Opposition. I recall many years ago reading that the government was only as good as its Opposition, and I am quite sure that if Opposition is constructive that is exactly right.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am the elected representative of Don Mills and like some of my hon. colleagues I would like to say a few words about my constituency.

It is a new name, but it is an old name in the history of the city of Toronto. It was formerly the centre of the great riding of York East, and perhaps one of the most contentious points that I had to deal with during my election campaign was the change in the name. We found that most people certainly wanted to retain that great old name of York East. It is now the hub and the heart of East York and surrounded by the great ridings of Scarborough West, York Mills, Eglinton, York East and Woodbine.

The majority of our residents are home owners and it is also one of the fastest growing areas for high-rise apartments. Many of our residents are employed in manufacturing and the service industries, and a great many are employed right in Don Mills where we have a very high proportion of the industry of Metro Toronto.

It is also serviced by the great arterial highways, such as the new Don Parkway, Eglinton, Lawrence, Leslie, Don Mills, Victoria Park, so you can get out and get in, in a hurry. And we have a few points of interest such as the Edwards Gardens which is described as a paradise of landscaping.

We have perhaps one of the most profitable shopping centres in all Ontario, that is Don Mills. We have the beautifully laid out, planned Victoria Village. We have the new and expanding Flemingdon Park. We have that great institution, Sunnybrook Hospital, and we have the Canadian Institute for the Blind.

Mr. Speaker, we are also very fortunate in Don Mills to be serviced by two of the most efficient municipal governments in Metro. In East York we are serviced by East York Council, under the reeveship of Miss True Davidson; and in North York under that aggressive, very efficient, reeve, Norm Goodhead.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is true of any candidate after election, if he goes into office, that when his term is through the least they can say of him is that he served his riding well; and that is all I hope to accomplish in my term of office, sir.

During the debate of the Throne Speech, many speakers took various parts of the speech and discussed it in great lengths, but I would particularly like to dwell on the economic side that was mentioned and perhaps for the time we would like to talk for a moment or two about automation.

We are now in the age of automation, as some have already suggested, and there is fear and there is confidence in technological changes by many people. But I think that fear and that confidence come from different points of view.

In Don Mills we have probably one of the finest electronic plants in North America and I refer to IBM. We know that since 1946 the electronic industry has grown to a tremendous proportion. In fact, if we look at the stock exchanges in North America, there are perhaps 200 or 300 electronic companies listed that were never heard of prior to the end of World War II. Twelve or 15 of these are employing hundreds of thousands of people in this new industry.

These companies, Mr. Speaker, have made breakthroughs into new avenues of industry, either as individuals or as research corporations, and they have literally revolutionized world industry; as great an impact, perhaps a greater impact, than that of the invention of the motor car. They say that Henry Ford with the Model T put the family on the road and that television put them back in the living room. I think we can also say that Henry Ford obsoleted the horse and buggy and the buggy whip manufacturers went out of business; but I am sure if those buggy whip manufacturers are making car aerials, they would make more in a day than their former companies made in a year insofar as buggy whips are concerned.

Now also, Mr. Speaker, the Wright brothers have put the people up in the air, and, as we know, as we travel across this world, electronics keep them there.

Last week, while we were talking in this House, a new satellite was launched to the moon from Cape Kennedy. I do not think anybody paid too much attention, except that the television equipment in the space ship did not operate, so we did not get a look at the moon as perhaps we would have this week in our national magazines had it worked. Scientists all over the world were watching for the cloud of dust when this satellite landed in what they call the Sea of Dust, which is supposed to be 400 miles wide, on the moon.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is possible that in the lives of the people in this room we will see human beings catapulted on to the moon.

The race for space control may change and will change the living habits of many thousands and thousands of people. We must not assume that while we are spending these great sums of money for space control, space research, that there are not some breakthroughs coming on new products. Out of the space obsolescence will come opportunities for new business.

Just two weeks ago I had that brought home very closely. I was invited to open a new plant in Niagara Falls, a little company called Duomac Industries. They had purchased from a large steel company down in the United States, a 65-ton monster for grinding titanium sheets, a metal which is no longer used in the space industry. But this chap who bought the machine found that he could grind stainless steel sheets that were not being made in this country and he bought the machine for $80,000. He set it up and he is now replacing $250,000 worth of imports that were formerly coming across the border. He has started a whole new industry with a machine and with a process, Mr. Speaker, that was the result of obsolescence in the space industry.

In the past year or two a great number of our people have become alarmed by automation and many frightening statements have been made about its effect upon employment.

We might consider some of its benefits. I believe the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) would agree with me that the aim of employment is to provide us with as many comforts and as many of the good things in life as possible.

The Walter Reuther story as outlined by the hon. member for Scarborough West certainly indicated that perhaps both Mr. Reuther and the vice-president of the automobile company had missed the point entirely in the discussions about man against machines. It is obvious that one only has to try to purchase an automobile to find the wait for delivery is at least six weeks to two months, and we now have more two-car families in this country than one could have anticipated when Mr. Reuther, several years ago, visited this automated plant. Automation in this industry has certainly put the automobile within the reach of more pocketbooks than otherwise would have been possible.

Automation is providing our workers with assistance in production which we never dreamed of. We are not concerned that machines can now do many of the dreary tasks which formerly had to be performed by man. But, Mr. Speaker, we are vitally concerned with the channelling of the workers freed by these machines into useful occupations.

The late Albert Einstein, when being questioned on the contribution of men of science to the world as we know it today, was asked how come he got all these ideas. He said: Never lose that holy curiosity.

Mr. Speaker, shifting to automated processes is really a continuing change, brought on by curiosity, which has been underway since the industrial revolution. It provides a means of producing more goods with less effort and at less cost, enabling more people to possess them. It is only through such improvements that we can raise the living standards of ourselves and of those we consider our foreign customers and of the new emerging nations who are our new customers.

There is some difference in the speed of these changes now, as compared with the past, but it is the same change. We cannot hold back the introduction of automation in order to maintain employment, regardless of temporary dislocation of our workers. In fact, with our main competitors moving ahead and adopting more efficient production methods, we cannot afford to delay by putting the brains of our scientists, engineers and industrialists in cold storage.

We have to keep our methods as efficient as those of any other industrial nation in the world. We have to sell our products in order to build up the demand for mass-produced goods. In the modern industrial world, the problems of productivity have been largely solved. Our problem, Mr. Speaker, is the distribution of these goods. We have to sell our commodities and for many of our expanding manufacturers the Canadian market is too small for optimal production; so we have to find buyers for our goods abroad, particularly in the United States where we have a large imbalance of trade.

Expansion of overall demand is the main problem to be overcome in our adjustment to technological change. There are, however, many others which are of great importance to us because they affect the lives and work of many millions of people. The changes brought about by automation are certainly much less widespread in periods of rapid economic growth than they are when the economy is not growing rapidly enough to absorb most of those people who are being displaced. However, even at peak periods, there are problems of skill obsolescence and the need for training workers whose jobs and occupations have been eliminated.

We are, in many ways, in a better position from this point of view than is United States' industry because of the smaller size of most of our manufacturing industries. We are not becoming automated so rapidly, and growing demand, along with normal retirements and job shifts, is taking care of a great deal of this technological displacement.

In the United States where there are geographic concentrations of enormous production facilities for specific industries, the problem, I submit, Mr. Speaker, is very serious as sudden technological changes produce blighted local areas. The problem then is not merely the retraining of workers for different jobs and different industries, but is also one of superfluous community capital and services as people move from one area to the other.

The hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Farquhar) the other day pointed this out very clearly when he suggested that in Elliot Lake there had been a population of 30,000 most of whom had moved on to other jobs, but there are still 9,000 people who certainly pose a very serious problem. Even at peak growth periods there are problems of skill obsolescence, as we have pointed out.

The size of American industry invites rapid introduction of automatic techniques. In Canada, most of our industries have not reached a size which makes total automation economical. It is, for the most part, being introduced in limited areas of our total production.

Automation itself has not created any blighted economic localities in Ontario, but shifts in demand and other factors have certainly produced some slow-growth areas. These we have been assisting with aid to regional industrial commissions, location of government activities, etc. In Ontario, however, the problem is more one of displaced workers and employment of younger workers.

The present programme of expansion of our technical and vocational training schools testifies to our interest and continuing concern in this field. The past three years have seen an outstanding expansion in technical and vocational training in this province, both in variety of courses given, and the facilities provided.

Our present school enrolment figures show that our programme is meeting with success. We have encouraged young people to continue in school to give them the broadest possible educational background, in order that they will be more flexible, and can adapt to changing working conditions more rapidly than their fathers.

We are also providing re-training programmes for the unemployed in co-operation with The Department of Labour. I do not want to dwell on the educational aspects of this Ontario government programme, as this can certainly be more clearly stated by the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), but I felt that in discussing automation I could not let this pass unmentioned. Our new portable pensions legislation is an excellent means of making our labour force more flexible and able to move to new jobs more easily.

The problems of automation are brought into perspective at a time like the present, when the economic growth role is at a reasonable level. Unemployment, this past year in Ontario, has averaged only 3.8 per cent of the labour force, the lowest yearly average since 1957, when it was 3.4 per cent of the labour force. Last year brought a very substantial improvement in the employment situation in this province. Total employment increased by more than 60,000 and unemployment declined by about 10,000 on the average. This has taken place, Mr. Speaker, in the most highly industrialized automated province in Canada.

Regardless of criticism that comes from many quarters, I like to suggest that the Ontario trade crusade efforts have been directed toward this goal. My predecessor in this Ministry (Mr. Macaulay) launched a trade crusade, and I feel the results to date have been most rewarding, even beyond our fondest expectations. I am therefore, sir, determined to carry on this programme and I feel the province can continue to make inroads into overseas markets at an ever-increasing rate.

If we are to gain the greatest possible advantages from modern industrial methods, we must be more outward looking. We must develop new trading patterns. The USSR, China and southeast Asia have enormous populations and are beginning to look for trade, as we have recently found out. Much of this trading is done, I suggest, sir, through monopolies, cartels and state trading centres. If we are to succeed, we must be prepared to do as the Romans do, by keeping an open mind and acting in accordance, and within the framework of international trade. We have much to learn.

The emerging nations of Africa are trying to catch up with the industrial nations and will need vast quantities of industrial goods. We, in this province and this country, cannot sit back in fear of automation. Neither can we hold back the clock by trying to halt the introduction of automation into every sector of our industrial life. We must make sure, however, that we obtain the promised benefits of automation. The best way to achieve this is to broaden the markets for our goods, and in return, increase the variety and quantity of goods and services we get from abroad in exchange.

Mr. Speaker, this has been referred to as the automation age, and I think we could also refer to it as the jet age. To those of us who have travelled around the world recently, we know that jets are travelling at over 600 miles an hour, and when we celebrate Canada's 100th birthday, they tell us that we will be flying in supersonic jets across the Atlantic at 2,000 miles an hour, or more. Today, this brings the world to our very doorstep. We no longer can ignore these nations that at one time seemed to be in the remote part of the world. They are right here, right next door, and they are trying today to seize, either by force or by negotiation, what they call their just right, independence.

In the Congo today, we are reading stories of atrocities that I am sure will be soon settled. I talked to a friend of mine from Belgium not too long ago. He had a large business there, and at the bottom of his property was a ferry dock to which the ferry comes across a large lake about twice a month. The natives gathered there almost two weeks before the ferry arrived, and when he asked them what they were waiting for they said they were waiting for independence to arrive.

Mr. Speaker, these people need assistance and they can become users of the kind of goods that we produce. They may be ragged bands of warriors today but they can be civilized countries such as we already know in Ghana, Nigeria and many of those other African countries that we are doing business with. Times change very, very quickly for those of us who are interested in trade. Many of these nations have already called back British troops which we thought would be unheard of. They have asked them to come back and help with an orderly transfer of authority. This, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, is a good sign for this country and a good sign for this province.

The major problem that I see facing the western world today, is to capture the minds of men so that they can become customers of ours tomorrow. If we can not do this, some other ideology will. I was in Mexico in 1953 and 1954 and our American friends had huge posters all over the country selling democracy. The communist nations were in there handing out food and clothing to people who were starving, and I leave it to you to decide what kind of ideology they would accept. The United States is going to spend something like $100 million in the Latin and South American countries in what is called the Alliance for Progress. I do not know, and I do not think anybody else knows, whether we are a little too late or not but certainly there is a big job to be done in these areas alone.

Mr. Speaker, what do these changing times mean to the province of Ontario? We have estimated that an average of 60,000 young people will come into the labour force each year for the next 10 years. The average annual increase in employment in Ontario between 1957 and 1962 was only 30,000. On the basis of economic studies, it was concluded that the most logical place where the additional new jobs could be found, would be through the expansion of the secondary manufacturing industry.

Employment in the resource sectors of the economy such as agriculture and mining has been declining, and cannot be expected to provide any substantial increase in job opportunities in the very near future. Employment in government services has been one area of growing employment. But there are many reasons why we cannot look on government jobs as providing an answer to the employment situation.

A large proportion of the new jobs created in the last few years has been in personal and institutional services, such as trade and finance. The percentage of our labour force now employed in the service sector has almost reached that prevailing in the most mature industrial economies such as the United States. It is possible, therefore, that continued growth and employment opportunities in the services will not be as rapid as they have been in the immediate past.

Another problem of the service industries for new job opportunities is that most of our personal services are the low-wage and least productive sectors of the economy. We are not giving the economy much of a shot in the arm if a well-paid electrician is laid off and he takes up barbering.

If manufacturing is the area where government effort should be concentrated, then the question to be decided was, what means of encouraging increased output and employment could be implemented. It was felt that not too much could be done for our well-established, efficient, primary manufacturing industries such as pulp, paper, petroleum and metal refining. These industries are characterized by large international companies which have explored fully the research and export opportunities open to them.

I believe the real answer to our problems lies in our secondary manufacturing industries. Having been in the business of producing secondary manufactured goods most of my life, I know the opportunities existing in this field. One of the greatest requirements in Canada is that our secondary manufacturers become competitive internationally so that they can compete effectively in a world of lower tariff barriers, and derive economies in large-scale operations, which are denied to most industries in Canada producing only for the Canadian market.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it should be remembered that up until the late 1950s it was very difficult for secondary manufacturers to make any appreciable impact in export markets. Import and exchange controls overseas, the high premium on the Canadian dollar, which ran as high as eight per cent, and other post-war restrictions prevented the entry of Canadian manufactured goods into many foreign market places. But it did provide this province with tremendous opportunities for the sale of our raw materials, our primary products. History records that in this sector we were certainly alert to opportunity.

In the last three years conditions have changed remarkably. A great many Ontario manufacturers who had never before thought of exporting are now in a position to compete effectively, if they show initiative and drive. The Ontario government, through its trade crusade programme has been providing the necessary push. And I might say, Mr. Speaker, the federal government has done likewise.

So far results are most encouraging, and the exports of manufacturing products have increased each year for the last three years by an average annual increase of 22 per cent. Most of these goods were produced in the province of Ontario.

Recently some statistics were released covering just 18 items that we are now exporting in Canada. Of the 18, the increase in exports over the first 10 months of 1962 as against the first 10 months of 1963, was by a percentage rate from 26 per cent in some items to 294 on others. This increase in manufacturing activity has been the main factor behind our recent increases in employment. In 1963, the annual increase in employment reached 60,000 for the first time since the boom of 1955 and 1957. Many of the new jobs were created in manufacturing and a significant proportion of the remainder were jobs required to service manufacturing industries.

In December the seasonally adjusted employment rate was down to 3.3 per cent and employment was up by 80,000 over December, 1962. This is, I submit, Mr. Speaker, almost full employment. If we can keep the demand for our goods, both in Canada and abroad, at the high level it has reached in the last few months, we will be doing more to reduce unemployment in this country than through any other feasible measures I can think of. Perhaps we can even hope to offset Canada's imbalance of trade with the United States without threatening to take punitive measures against U.S. subsidiaries and discouraging further American investment capital in this country.

Mr. Speaker, we are the most highly industrialized province in Canada. We are a major source of raw materials. We are one of the largest suppliers of food. In other words, we are thrice blessed or thrice cursed, depending on what we do in the international card game on international trade. We in Ontario cannot close our eyes to these great external forces that are of vital concern to Canada and Ontario in particular. We are the mighty muscle of Canada. Forty-five per cent of the federal income comes from this province, 45 per cent of the labour force is employed here, and 50 per cent of all the manufacturing output takes place in this province. To this end, Mr. Speaker, this government must continue to keep the forward outlook as exemplified in the many programmes and projects of the last two years under the dynamic leadership of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts).

It was my privilege to be associated with this government, and in particular with the former Minister of my department, the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) as the first chairman of the Ontario Economic Council. And I say to you, as a man coming from industry, I realized the great opportunity there was in government service. Perhaps, sir, that is why I stand here today.

Much will be said before this session is over with regard to the merits of many government projects such as the Ontario Economic Council, the Conference of Women, the Automation Foundation, the Ontario Trade Crusade, trade missions, and the import replacement show. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I would be excused by the hon. members of the Opposition if I emphasized at this time the prime importance of the Ontario Trade Crusade and the role it has played and will play in this world of tomorrow. All political parties have gone on record as indicating, if elected, they would propose similar programmes to achieve the same desired results.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot continue to finance our economy by borrowing on the hopeful earnings of the future. We must spend and tax only for the absolute necessities and remember government income is derived from two sources—personal income if the individual has a job, and corporation profits if those companies prosper. There is no other source; there is no magic as to the source of government funds. It does not have a money tree or a money orchard anywhere. It comes only from a dynamic expanding economy, the kind that we have in Ontario and will continue to have if we do not neglect our opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, this or any other government cannot guarantee full employment by forming committees, making speeches, writing briefs or even finding the financial means to provide for the social and welfare benefits we now enjoy, or others this government is urged to embrace, unless we can consume in our domestic market all the products from our factories, use all our raw materials, consume all the food from our farms, and use the products from our research laboratories. If this is not possible to achieve in our domestic market, then it is obvious we have one or two courses open to us. We stop planting, we stop exploration, we stop manufacturing, we stop engineering, we stop researching and we stagnate. Or, Mr. Speaker, I suggest an alternative: we find new markets beyond our Canadian and provincial borders, and widen our sphere of influence in the unlimited markets of the world where millions of people are waiting to be told and sold. The things we take for granted today in this province of ours could be dire necessities of life in many other lands.

The latter is the course taken by this government not just a few days ago, not just before election time, but almost as soon as the present hon. Prime Minister took office. He gave to the province of Ontario the outward look to broaden this province's economy, to provide job opportunities, and to increase income for our people.

One of the vehicles used, and used successfully, is the Ontario Trade Crusade sales mission. We have had 18 to date and there are more and more to come. We do not claim it is the magic answer to Utopia. We do believe, however, it is the link to an expanding future for this province and its people. It is not so perfect that it cannot be improved, and as we gain international experience I am sure we will improve.

They say, Mr. Speaker, that selling is like shaving—if you do not do a little every day you soon become a bum. I would add to this, Mr. Speaker, by suggesting that if this province, through its sales efforts at home and abroad, is not successful, many, many people will be unemployed. Perhaps a good motto for all of us to adopt in this province would be: A sale a day means a job today. With almost full employment in this province, as I said—December unemployment at 3.3 per cent—this government is far from complacent. There are pockets of unemployment in every province and these must be attacked.

I have been in the U.K. and Europe on a number of occasions in the last four or five years, and I was never in any country where I was not almost offered the Crown jewels if I would build a factory. In these countries, where there was something like three or four jobs and only one person to take up the job, they wanted industry in there and we were offered all kinds of gimmicks to put plants in Wales or Scotland and many areas where they talk about full employment.

The importance of sales beyond our borders cannot be stressed too often. If we want industrial growth in this province, if we are to attract new entrepreneurs and provide new job opportunities, this is the thing that we must do; sell more of our product out of this province and out of this country.

What kind of competition do we face? Today we have a surplus in our balance of trade with most countries, with the exception of the United States of America. In the U.S.A. we have a deficit of $544 million; with the U.K. we have $487 million credit; and with West Germany, Japan, Belgium, and so forth, we have huge credit balances in most of these countries. The countries that we do not have credit balances with are countries that only have raw materials to sell, and in those cases we have a deficit with them. Countries that we would consider as emerging nations, which are lacking, in the main, industrial might, have sold Canada more than we have bought from them, with but few exceptions. I suggest countries like the West Indies, South America, Brazil, the Middle East, and so forth.

A few weeks ago, we read that the president of Venezuela was a little miffed about Canada selling something to Cuba. He said: If you do not stop, I will cut you off. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think you would get so mad at the cook that you stop eating; because we sold $33,900,000 worth of goods to Venezuela last year, and we bought $181,800,000. You cannot get too mad at a good customer. So I do not think we need to be worried about being cut off by Venezuela.

I want to point out to the hon. members that the winds have changed in the economic world and can have very grave consequences for this country, and particularly for this province, unless we establish ourselves as international traders par excellence. The United Kingdom, West Germany and Japan and Belgium are all highly industrialized. I just ask you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. members of this House, to remember that these people have nothing else to sell but manufactured goods. They are hungry for markets as competition at home stiffens and there are signs of unemployment appearing.

Just a few weeks ago, a friend of mine who imported several hundred thousand dollars worth of Japanese machinery said: You know, you only bought $92 million in Japan last year and they bought $212 million from us, we should buy more goods. I suggested to him that the only things that Japan had bought from us, and rightly so, was raw materials to keep their industries going and food to keep their people from going hungry. All they had to sell in return was manufactured goods. If we bought all the manufactured goods, as he suggested, there would be no need for him to bring in machinery to sell to manufacturers here, because we would not have to manufacture.

I suggest also, Mr. Speaker, in the U.K. and Belgium they cannot feed themselves and they have no raw materials, so they must sell manufactured goods. That is why again I say that if they buy from us, they must sell to us; and we must recognize that. If we in Ontario, sir, establish bridgeheads today, we gain a foothold for tomorrow in markets that can keep our factories, farms, forests and mines producing; or at least we have widened our scope. If competition forces us to retrench, better we do so from a large share of world market participation than from a small domestic market because we failed to visualize it could be affected by external forces.

What do we look for, Mr. Speaker, in the future? I say we look for countries with needers. In all my experience in business I have never sold a want a nickle's worth of anything. We have thousands of people who say, I want castles in Spain, I want a new car, I want to go here, I want to go there; but they usually never get around to doing anything about it. I have found in my sales experience that you waste your time with wanters, so you look for people who have a need.

Mr. Speaker, if we go down any skid row area in this North American continent we find those who have slipped down the ladder and they are looking for a handout. They usually try to sell you something that you have a need for—they know they will be successful—matches, hair pins, pipe cleaners, anything that you have a need for. As far down the ladder as these people have gone in our society, they know that you will buy a need.

Therefore I say that we must look for people with needs. Foreign markets have millions of needers, and I can speak from actual experience. We have to explore and exploit them.

This is no time to assume that we have the best mousetrap. It is often said that if you have a better mousetrap, people will beat a path to your door. I want to assure you they do not. You may find that these people who do not beat a path to your door, when you go looking for them, are not even bothered with mice, so why would they want a mousetrap?

A few nights ago I had the privilege of speaking to the Ontario Research Sales Club. There were three young men on the panel that I had never met before. They had been on one of our trade missions and had been back to Europe a number of times. One, Mr. Speaker, was selling a very simple product, a name plate that you put on a glass door so you do not walk through it and get your throat cut. It says "push" or "pull". He was now selling those name plates in 12 different countries with different languages.

The other fellow was selling what is called materials handling equipment, and he was selling it in the United States. If ever there was taking coals to Newcastle, it is taking handling equipment to the United States. But he had found a plus. He had reduced 15 grease points on his equipment down to one by new design and new engineering.

The other chap was selling what we call heat exchangers. He said that when he went to Europe he was quite sure that they knew more about heat exchangers than we did in Canada. He was corresponding with a German company and when he got the letter it was always signed Herr Direktor. Now in Europe the director can be anybody. It can be the office boy. So he made a call on this chap and when he got off the train there was a beautiful Mercedes automobile with a liveried chauffeur waiting for him. When he got to the plant he found it was not a little two-by-four, it was a plant employing over 4,000 people and he found that Herr Direktor was the owner of the business. He met him at the front door, took him upstairs, sat him down in his office, poured him a glass of brandy, shoved a black cigar in his teeth, and said: Now, sell me!

Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that this is the kind of experience a lot of our Ontario manufacturers are getting, and enjoying; and I am sure they are cashing in on it.

These are but a few of the very great number of men who have widened their horizons, created job opportunities for others by their resourcefulness and selling ability, and expanded their businesses abroad so that they are not dependent solely on the domestic market. In other words, they have hedged for a rainy day.

We have a trade mission just returned from the West Indies. I took a couple of days off and met them down there and I find a number of things that appeal to me and I think would interest this House. Trinidad has a population of 800,000 people. They have a population increase of three per cent per year and they have an unemployment rate of 20 per cent of the labour force who lack jobs and have no job opportunities. Yet they have one of the highest literacy ratings in the world.

More than 90 per cent of the population in that small country can read. All over the city of Port of Spain, there is a poster, a national flag and underneath it has three words: discipline, production, tolerance.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, more Canadians should visit and visualize the tremendous problems of these underdeveloped and overpopulated nations. These people are looking for Canadian know-how. They buy Canadian products and we need only cultivate this and help to achieve their aims for a better way of life for their people and we will build ourselves a tremendous market very close to home.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friends will realize by now I am a confirmed optimist, and they are right. I never sold a dollar's worth of merchandise in my life by crying on a prospect's shoulder, because I usually found he wanted to cry on mine. We are living in Utopia in this province and you can take my word for it, we will get very little sympathy from the world at large in asking others not to disrupt our cosy market, even though we are the world's largest importer of manufactured goods. We have no time to lose. It is said that the average salesman only sells three hours a day, the rest of the time he is coming and going. When we go into the international market, we do not even get three hours a day.

I am reminded of a story, Mr. Speaker, that drives home this point. It is of a young man who arrived back at the office on Saturday morning. The boss called him in, one of the old-fashioned types, and said, "Joe, you are not making enough calls. You are not going to be with us very long unless you double up." And the next week the kid came in, turned in his report, and he had averaged 64 calls a day. The boss called him in and said, "This is wonderful, it is tremendous. I knew you could do better." And the kid said, "Yes, I could have done better this week, only one customer stopped me and asked what I was selling."

We cannot run to Europe and visit 15 and 20 countries at a time within two or three weeks and do business. We have to take each country at a time and comb it thoroughly. We must make each call count. If we sell, as I have already said, we must be prepared to buy. If we exchange our know-how for dollars, we can also trade a like commodity with every other country. We can bring new science, new skills and new trades to the province of Ontario. If we recognize that foreign markets like our own are changing as the restless sea, and move on to others as they open up, there is no limit to what we can do in export markets.

What are our chances for success? We have drawn on the know-how from the most powerful industrialized nation on earth, the United States. We have drawn engineering, designing, research. We are now trained to be more independent. Our apprenticeship days are over. Winston Churchill once said that if Hitler won we would face 1,000 years of darkness. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. members of this House that the formation of the European economic community of people who have warred for centuries indicates that they are looking for 1,000 years of sunlight. The market is wide open. There are 160 million people who want to live like us and want us to do business with them.

We also have in Europe the outer seven who are not into this community yet, but I am quite sure they will be very shortly. Then we will have 300 million people who want to do business with Canada.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. Minister is an optimist.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am a complete optimist, sir. And I would suggest this, that perhaps this has been missed. The United States has just made a drastic reduction in its armed forces. The Soviet Union has just done the same thing and all nations are following suit. Mr. Speaker, this suggests to me that the war of the future is going to be an economic war and they are recognizing it and they are getting ready for it. Surely, in a province of salesmen such as we have here, we should seize the opportunities offered in this European market and make the most of it.

We have been trained in one of the most competitive markets anywhere in the world. We have brought into this province $236 of manufactured goods for every man, woman and child compared to $18 in Japan, $50 in the U.K. and $52 in West Germany. It must be recognized that we are international traders in our own market and we know the meanings of export. To me, it is obvious that the world of industrialized nations, at least, recognizes the one unalterable fact that we can no longer anticipate a third world war and the war of the future will be economic. To those countries that will not participate in this programme of looking for new markets, I say to you, sir, they will collapse and decay like the ancient countries of history.

We in Ontario have already given leadership in international trade and others are fast emulating our efforts. New tariff negotiations are imminent and Canada will have to bargain for the best deal. But to get, as I have said, we have to give. We are in a surplus supply position in almost every industrialized country. Booms and soft-sell days are over and are fast coming to an end. The hard-sell era is here.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada, and this province in particular, have always been prepared to accept challenge and opportunity and hard work and I am confident that this government, under the dynamic driving leadership of our hon. Prime Minister, working as a team with industry and labour, can prove not only with words, but with resourceful, determined action, that Ontario of the past, Ontario of the present and Ontario of the future can proudly claim to be a province of opportunity.

Mr. R. A. H. Taylor (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, may I add my congratulations to the many others you have received concerning your new office. The judgment you have shown in controlling the debates thus far has added a great deal of dignity to this House. I am sure your tenure of this office will be long remembered in this light.

Mr. Speaker, we in Canada sometimes feel that we are not being fairly treated by the country to the south of us. Some people say these neighbours of ours have exploited our natural resources to their own financial advantage. We are inclined to feel that not only do they not understand our growing problems—they have no interest in them.

We feel that they are interested in our future development only insofar as it might be beneficial to them.

They, in turn, wonder about us. They wonder why anyone would care to live in this wide-flung, sparsely settled country, so far from the main centres of trade and so-called culture. They wonder that we, with our limited commerce, should be so troublesome marketing our lumber and agricultural products. They are surprised that we might suggest that they change any of their trading arrangements to fit into our business pattern.

They are not, in reality, very interested in getting to know us any better or in trying to understand our problems.

Up to now I have been talking about two sections of our continent. The point I would like to make is that unfortunately this condition has its parallel insofar as the two sections of our province are concerned.

We, in northern Ontario, feel, and with considerable justification, that the rest of the province does not understand, nor is it concerned with, our development problems. We feel that only insofar as our natural resources can produce immediate revenues is the province, as a whole, interested.

Those who live in southern Ontario, also are inclined to wonder about people who choose to live distant from the metropolitan and more populated centres. They are not particularly interested in the development of our agriculture or secondary industries except insofar as we may become a trading nuisance to their commerce.

We feel that the province listens with only one ear when northern problems are being discussed. The parallel of inter-country relationship and intra-provincial relationship is a very true one.

Why, then, should these feelings be otherwise? The development of Canada over the next 20 years will be most important to the United States. It will only be with American understanding and encouragement that Canada will develop to the point to enable our continent to continue to be the dominant factor in our ever-expanding world.

Again, in Ontario, it will only be by recognizing and understanding northern problems and encouraging northern development that our province will maintain its position as the leading province of our Dominion. Let us hope that this recognition does not come too late.

Today I do not propose to discuss the problems of all northern Ontario—only those directly related to the district of Timiskaming.

First, I must draw your attention to the seriousness of the problem of depleted mining municipalities. I intend to cover this subject more fully in the debate on this subject presently a resolution on the order paper.

Suffice it to say for the present that, unless some attention is given to this problem, the waste of existing assets will be in the hundreds of millions of dollars. Kirkland Lake and Timmins will eventually follow the path now being trod by Elliot Lake and Matachewan. The neglect of this problem will also seriously cripple our agricultural industry, and any industry that depends on these mining centres for its markets.

In Timiskaming our agricultural development has been hampered through insufficient and inadequate drainage. Our heavy northern clay normally retains moisture to the detriment of our crops. In order to help overcome this basic problem, the ARDA division of The Department of Agriculture has recently indicated that it is prepared to undertake an area survey to lay out a master drainage plan for this section. This step will be of material assistance in clarifying and simplifying our drainage requirements and will certainly add to the total agriculture production in Timiskaming.

To encourage the raising of beef cattle in this district, ARDA again has started a community pasture in the Earleton area. This, indeed, has been a major step forward. There are, however, still two additional requirements needed to get this project going. Both are related to finance.

First, some further latitude must be given by way of loans to the farmers for the purchase of cattle. Loans to northern farmers are presently limited by a valuation placed on their land somewhere around 50 per cent below that given to farmers in southern Ontario. To successfully move into the beef cattle business this disparity will have to be removed.

Second, the control of the quality of the beef produced is most important to the success of this new industry. I am hopeful that ARDA will be prepared to help in this direction by providing quality breeders to these community pastures on a fee basis which would eliminate the capital cost and the control problem for the individual farmer.

As has been pointed out by my hon. friend from Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Farquhar), the future of dairying throughout northern Ontario is very limited. The shortage of consumers, sir, and the discrimination against northern farmers through existing legislation eliminates any possibility of competing on an equal basis with southern farmers.

In northeastern Ontario we are even further limited by our higher cost of seed, feed and fertilizer. The absence of lake freight to this area increases our costs by up to $15.00 a ton. It takes a sturdy soul and hard work to struggle against these odds. The farmers of Timiskaming have continually fought an uphill battle. They have been so neglected in the past that they have come to expect that it will always be uphill. Even a little concern for their immediate problems would be widely appreciated by the farming population. It is for these reasons that ARDA's efforts get such a great reaction throughout the north. The results achieved will certainly minimize the costs involved.

Another sleeping giant is our northern water resources potential. To a province that should be concerned with water conservation because of past mistakes this should be of major interest. Here, in the north country, is the solution to the water shortages that have developed to such serious proportions in the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence waterway systems. Here is the means of replenishing and replacing the billions of gallons presently being diverted from these waterways by major American cities and our own industrial developments. Here is also the means of eliminating the expenditure of some $40 million annually for American coal to produce electricity. In addition, it could bring the benefits of lake shipping and could open navigation to and from northeastern Ontario and northwestern Quebec. Here is the means of opening up and developing the hidden wealth of these areas.

The plan that has been evolved by a Sudbury engineer, Tom Kierans, promises to do all these things and more.

His proposal calls for the reversing of the Harricanaw River which now flows north into James Bay. Power stations would be used to force the river's water to back up until it reached the high point of land near Amos, Quebec. It would then naturally flow south into Lake Timiskaming where the flow would join the Ottawa river. It could then be channelled from the Ottawa River at Mattawa across to Lake Nipissing and from there down the French River to Lake Huron.

Mr. Speaker, here is a plan of vision. Here is a major development that could be accomplished with little, if any, capital investment by this province. The Americans need our water and are prepared to pay for it. All that is required is a show of interest by this government and by the other governments that would be involved. I therefore propose that this government set up a special committee to study the feasibility and the desirability from the standpoint of this province of putting this plan into effect. Such a committee might well be the lead for the most important step made by an Ontario government since it decided to build a railroad to penetrate its unknown northern resources in the early 1900s.

This brings us to one of our most continuing problems in northeastern Ontario. This is the problem with respect to the Ontario Northland Railway, Ontario's development road. The men who conceived the idea of a railway to northern Ontario at the turn of the century, with the purpose of opening up and developing the natural resources of this vast unknown area, were far-seeing men indeed. This purpose was crowned with success even before the railway was completed.

With the discovery of silver at Cobalt the new area was opened and development followed. The railway moved with this growth and branches were later extended to Timmins, Kirkland Lake and Noranda, Quebec.

Such was the railway's immediate and continuing success that even during the distressed 30s, it was the only railway throughout North America operating profitably. It has been profitable throughout most of its years of operation.

Somewhere in the early 1940s, however, the railway or the government seemed to lose sight of its original objectives. The area had been fairly well opened up by this time and a good portion of its apparent resources were being developed. At this point the Ontario Northland ceased to be a development road. It lost its interest in new development and settled back and became a plain railroad. Its prime purpose became one of making a profit on its operation and it let the north country look after itself. While the government still calls it the northern development road, it has become, in effect, simply a commercial railway.

As a result of this, even in terms of existing commerce, the railway has lost ground. Its lack of foresight in recognizing the changes taking place in transportation methods encouraged the growth of a number of individual trucking firms. Not appreciating that these truckers were performing services that were essential to the growth of the area, the railway attempted to fight this transition, rather than to move with it. It was only after watching and resisting the growth of these private truckers over a period of 15 to 20 years that the railway finally accepted the fact that long-distance trucking and the service that it could give was essential to the commercial interests of the area. Finally, in 1959, it purchased ownership of the Star Transfer Company of Timmins and this since has become an important part of both the railway's operations and revenues.

In the meantime, however, our Ontario Northland Railway had lost a lot of ground and considerable revenues. It had accepted the concept of a shrinking economy and set out to reduce its own cost. Its first steps were very timely and successful. It modernized its equipment from steam to diesel and effected considerable operating cost savings. Spurred on by this success, the railway has been thinking in terms of cost reduction regardless of the effect on its services or on the economy of the areas it covers.

The railway has failed to appreciate the necessity of developing new industry in the north to offset the depressed mining conditions. The former period of growth has been reversed. Any new developments that have come about have merely lessened the impact of the closing of a great many mines throughout the area. Even the opening of the new Adams iron mine at Dane will not begin to equal the loss in employment presently in process in the Kirkland Lake area.

We, in the north, feel that it is time that the railroad got back into the development business. We feel that this government should restate its railway's objectives in this light. The railway requires a full-time director of development. This man's job would not be to merchandise railway services. It would rather be to seek out, encourage and directly assist the development of new secondary industry throughout the north. He would also promote and encourage outside industries to set up plants within this area.

A minimum annual budget should be set up by the railway for this purpose and to assure that this work will be continuously carried on. The director should, of course, work very closely with and receive the full support of the Ontario economic council in performing his duties.

The cost of such a project would be small in terms of the railway's annual budget. However, the returns could be very substantial. Every new industry would mean a potential customer and a direct return to the railway.

At this point we should go back to its original objectives. Is it the government's desire that the Ontario Northland Railway make good on its claims of being a development road? If such is the government's wish, should this not be spelled out in clear terms of reference to its railway commission? The commissioners would then direct the railway's policies in recognition of these responsibilities.

If the government is not prepared to do this, then let us stop calling the railway a development road and recognize it for what the government has allowed it to become—just another government department, primarily concerned with its own self-perpetuation.

The people from the north say it is time for the government to fish or cut bait. The railway's terms of reference should be clearly restated in terms of the situation that exists today. The original objective of northern development is even more essential now than it was in 1900. If new development needs to be subsidized, the commissioners should be so directed.

With respect to the commission itself, not since the death of the late Bob Herbert have the agricultural and industrial interests of Timiskaming been properly represented on this board. There is no one presently on the board who is concerned or even familiar with this area, an area which has meant so much over the years to the railroad. Most of the commissioners presently on the board live outside of the area the railway serves. This lopsided condition should be corrected and members appointed who know the problems of the area and who are interested in seeing the area developed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I have today talked about four specific needs of north-eastern Ontario:

1. The problem of depleted mining municipalities;
2. The encouragement needed by our agricultural and beef cattle industry;
3. The need for a committee to study the Kierans plan and the development of our water resources;
4. The need for clarification as to the present terms of reference to the ONR commissioners. Is it or is it not to be a development road?

The people of the north wonder whether the government is still listening with one ear. They wonder whether it is really concerned with the development of the larger half of this province. It is for these reasons that I speak to the amendment, so ably proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver), with particular reference to the need for the recognition of the potential of, and a plan for, development of northern Ontario.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, the first words I would like to express as a baby member of this honourable House, are words of sincere thanks and appreciation for the courteous welcome that has been extended to me by all members of this House, regardless of their party affiliations.

I feel greatly honoured in having been given the privilege of representing Renfrew South in this Legislature. I do not mean to leave the impression that this honour was conferred upon me personally, but upon the grand old party of which I am a member. As most of the hon. members of this House are aware, Renfrew South as a riding is one of the most picturesque, colourful and historic ridings in this province. It has often sent great and colourful men to this Legislature.

Permit me briefly to mention some of its later contributions. When overseas with the Canadian infantry in June, 1945, I cast my first ballot. It was one that helped elect the late James Shannon Dempsey. Many of the hon. members here knew him as a great and courageous man with a heart as warm as the Gulf Stream and as big as this province itself. He was responsible for many good things coming to Renfrew South in the way of highways, rural hydro, The Dempsey Act which gave the pine back to the farmers, and a score of other benefits.

After Mr. Dempsey's sudden passing in October, 1955, Renfrew South sent the late James Anthony Maloney as its representative to this Legislature. He was one of the most powerful and able members this assembly has ever seen, a member who could and would get things done. He was overpowering in debate and I am sure that the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) especially will never forget it. I am told that this House has never been quite the same since his sudden untimely passing in October, 1961. The Maloney family—James Anthony and his father before him, and other members of that family—have made great contributions to Renfrew South and to the political life of this province and country.

My predecessor, Leonard Quilty, served Renfrew South from January 18, 1962 until the election last September 25, when the majority of our people honoured me with the task.

When I look back on the contributions made to Renfrew South and this Legislature by men like James Shannon Dempsey and James Anthony Maloney, I realize full well that someone like myself, possessing limitations and inadequacies, will have to work tremendously hard to give Renfrew South the type of representation she deserves. Mr. Speaker, this I intend to do.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I, too, wish to congratulate you on your appointment as Speaker of this assembly. I am not going to enlarge on what the other hon. members have said with regard to the manner in which you conduct the affairs of this House. You have thus far done, and will do, a remarkable job. But this, Mr. Speaker, I expect of you, knowing that you come from eastern Ontario and the Ottawa Valley and you have already tattooed on you the stamp of quality.

The election last September 25, is now history. However, I would like to set the record straight on one or two things pertaining to that election. The hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume)—and I am sorry that he is not in his seat today—on or about March 16, 1962, stated in this House that my wife was the only Tory in Renfrew South. I would like to inform that hon. member that there were 889 more Tories in Renfrew South last September 25 than there were Liberals. And furthermore, even if the off-and-on courtship that goes on between the Liberals and the New Democratic Party had blossomed into marriage before September 25, we would still have defeated their combined efforts by over 500 votes. I am wondering, Mr. Speaker, if perhaps the hon. member for Essex North would wish to retract that statement he made at that time and substitute one to read something like this: "That my wife is not the only Tory in Renfrew South, but that she is the best Tory in Renfrew South."

Mr. Speaker, I do not for one moment claim credit for any recent election successes, because I had a lot going for me in that campaign. I had the best party, with the best platform, with the finest leader, and a great riding organization spurred on by thousands of wonderful people. And on top of all that, one wife and 13 children pulling for me.

I am not one to disregard the feelings of others. Sometimes I like to put myself in the other fellow's position. In this way, we get a broader view of the things that confront us. For instance, right now, if I were sitting in the seat of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver), or if I were sitting in the seat of the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. MacDonald) or in the seats of any of their followers, I would be inclined to look across the floor of this House at the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and say to myself, "Is he not a tremendous leader? Does he not look disturbingly healthy and does he not look disturbingly able?"

Renfrew South is a large and great riding. It is bordered on the northeast by the Ottawa River, on the north by Renfrew North, on the west by the district of Nipissing and Algonquin Park, on the south by Hastings East and Lennox and Addington, and on the east by Lanark and Carleton—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Yakabuski: I am coming to that. And through its entire length flows the mighty Madawaska. On the Madawaska there are two Hydro storage dams, one at Bark Lake and the other at Palmer Rapids, and two power-generating stations, one at Stewartville and another at Barrett Chute. The Madawaska is capable of producing many thousands of additional kilowatts of power and I know that this government will take steps to see that that potential is further developed. I have in mind the doubling of the capacity of the Barrett Chute plant at Calabogie and a new generating plant in the vicinity of Mountain Chute, in the Black Donald area. These undertakings are not only important in that they will add thousands of additional kilowatts to our power grid, but they will provide much needed employment in Renfrew South.

The population of Renfrew South is made up of many fine people. It was first settled by the Scots in McNab township, later by the Germans in the Eganville, Killaloe, and Palmer Rapids areas, the Irish in the Mount St. Patrick, Eganville, Killaloe and Barry's Bay areas, and the Polish in the Renfrew, Wilno and Barry's Bay areas also. There are also a goodly number of French people and people of other racial backgrounds in Renfrew South. We also have an Indian reservation at Golden Lake, inhabited by the descendants of the Algonquins. Truly, all these groups are fine people living in harmony and dedicated to the proposition that although they are proud of their ancestry and their own racial cultures, they are Canadians first and foremost.

The western and southern parts of our riding depend primarily on the lumbering and tourist industry, the central and eastern sections on agriculture. I might mention that fine beef raising is done in Gratton, Admaston, Horton and McNab townships. For years, until he became weary of hoeing, Mr. Arthur Budarick of Palmer Rapids, grew the world's finest potatoes, and only last year Mr. Bill Winters, who also grows tobacco in Horton township, was the world's rye king.

The towns of Renfrew and Arnprior, as well as being agricultural towns, have considerable manufacturing. To mention a few companies, there are Dominion Magnesium at Haleys, near Renfrew, the RCA-Victor plant in Renfrew, the Gillies Bros. lumber mill at Braeside—one of the largest and most modern on the continent—and the Kenwood mill at Arnprior, famous for its blankets and papermaking felt the world over.

Renfrew South can boast of possibly more miles of rural hydro lines than any riding of equal size in the province, thanks to this government. Our highways and municipal roads have been improving steadily since 1943 and I feel the hon. Minister (Mr. MacNaughton) will agree with me when I say that his office, Mr. Speaker, will give every consideration to an accelerated programme of highway building and municipal road improvement for Renfrew South in the coming years.

Before I close the page on the makeup of Renfrew South, I would like to mention the Bonnechere River that flows thorough a considerable part of that riding and is famous for the Bonnechere Caves. We have a butter named after that river, and of course Bonnechere Manor, in Renfrew, a home for the aged. It is a fine home, one of the first of its kind in this province on which a large addition was recently opened and it now accommodates over 200 of our senior citizens. I need not mention that the provincial government is to be commended for the consideration it has shown to every age group in this province and Bonnechere Manor in Renfrew is a prime example of that consideration.

Many of the older hon. members of this House are familiar with the reference, the law of Killaloe, where if you are a naughty boy you will get your head soaked in Brennan's Creek. Killaloe is planning a new community centre and I want to wish them every success in their undertaking. I know that this government will be of assistance in bringing their project to a successful completion.

Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned our lumbering, agricultural and manufacturing industries. The lumbering industry has been hard hit by the new federal sales tax, western competition, mechanization and automation, not to mention dwindling stands of timber which are great distances from mills and not easily accessible. Our agricultural industry, although sound and stable, has been transformed from a series of small farms to fewer and fully mechanized operations. Our manufacturing industries in many cases are hard pressed, and as an example I use our fading textile industry.

The town of Renfrew has been one of the most hard hit areas. Renfrew's population has decreased by 60 in the past year and when you consider the newborn, you can make that figure 200. Our junior government in Ottawa has stubbornly refused to recognize it as a depressed area, as it has other areas which are in no particular need, such as the atomic town of Deep River in the north country.

Mr. Speaker, I did not want to refer to the government in Ottawa as our junior government, because I realize that the government in Ottawa is really our senior government. What I meant to say is that it is a junior government by way of performance.

Mr. Speaker, just as the winds of change have been blowing across the continents of Asia and Africa for the past two decades, so too are the winds of change blowing across some of the rural parts of this province. No longer are we content to see our people move to more densely populated areas in search of employment. No longer are we content to see our raw materials and power used for manufacturing in other centres. No longer are we content to see our finest agricultural land, the bread basket of this province, eaten up by new manufacturing sites around Metro and Hamilton. And no longer are we content to see this province jeopardize its long-range future by concentrating all its manufacturing in the southern area. For half a century, yes, for far too long, has the Ottawa Valley and places like Calabogie, Eganville, Killaloe and the Barry's Bay areas been supplying the men and women who helped build the Ontario north and who helped make Kitchener, Waterloo and Metro the places they are today.

We are living in the age of the atom and I submit to the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) that his department should plan accordingly or this generation could be judged very harshly by succeeding generations. I do not want to seem pessimistic or be a purveyor of doom, but let us be realistic. This giant, this industrial complex, could be wiped out in one stroke, and with it perhaps 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 lives.

What is the alternative? Decentralization of industry, with industrial planning to suit the age in which we live.

We in the have-not areas of this province are not begging, we are not looking for something for nothing, but we are in need of incentives and assistance whereby we can help ourselves. Some of these incentives could be in the form of designated areas where fixed assessments, tax incentive plans and subsidized low-cost power would be available.

I am no disciple of Judy LaMarsh, and in the light of what Graham Towers had to say the other day about the proposed Canada pension plan, it is becoming increasingly evident to all that our hon. Prime Minister is to be commended on the stand he has taken so far with regard to that plan.

I note with interest a rumour in the press recently stating that Elliot Lake could possibly be the headquarters for that plan should it come into being. Whether the plan has merit or not, I like the idea of the headquarters being located in an area that is in need of assistance and I might say to the hon. Prime Minister that when our own provincial medical plan is ready to put into operation, that we have many ideal locations in Renfrew South for a headquarters for such a plan. Places like Calabogie, Eganville, Killaloe are ideal places, but I could think of dozens more.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I was interested the other day in the reasons the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Braithwaite) gave as to why he had become a member of the Liberal Party. I want to say that I am not a pre-natal Tory, but that at heart I have been a member of the Conservative Party since early school days, because it was then that I learned that ours is a party of builders. Since Confederation and before, our party has advocated those projects and other things that have made our nation great. Since taking office in 1943 this party has proven that it is the party that is good for Ontario, and time after time the electorate have agreed.

That is why, as I look across the floor of this House and see our great hon. Prime Minister and the other hon. Ministers of the Crown, I am sure the affairs of this province are in good hands. I do not deny that we have problems and they are many, but with men of their wisdom, their vision and understanding, I am sure that most of them will find a solution.

Thank you.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, last night I watched a television show where the people seemed to be quite crazy about the programme — the young people anyway—and on it were the Beatles. I was just wondering, if I had the Beatles here today whether we could not attract some of these Cabinet Ministers to take their seats in this chamber and also some of the hon. members, because truly I have felt at times that some of the remarks made by the hon. members in this House fell on just a few interested people.

However, Mr. Speaker, before congratulating you on your appointment, I want to hasten to congratulate the new Progressive-Conservative members of this Legislature who have participated in the Throne Speech debate for the very effective way they have presented their maiden addresses in this House.

Unlike what I have heard in the past, the flowery description of the accomplishment of the government has been put aside for more serious recommendations which this government should adopt to make this a better and a greater province of Ontario. And this is how it should be. We are legislators who have a great task ahead. What happens today and tomorrow is what counts. Our plans should be focused on that alone.

However, Mr. Speaker, the present government does not adopt this concept. At least the Speech from the Throne read by the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor on January 15 did not show this, not to my estimation and the estimation of many others. In fact, the editorials that I have read in several newspapers were of the view that this government praised itself for a job well done in the past and that they were satisfied with this.

There is also, Mr. Speaker, a complete new observation which I detected in this year's Speech from the Throne. The great majority of the areas which elected members in the Opposition were left out of the proposed programme of the government. In fact, I could go on to point out where the Opposition were elected, in the Speech from the Throne these sections were omitted. It was only a few places here and there where the government has brought in some programmes that it intends to do for those areas.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, it leads me to ask this question: Is a riding or an area that opposes the government in the selection of their members to be penalized for the expression of their democratic rights? Is this government going to be a government representing all the people of Ontario or only a certain party?

I have conclusive arguments to present to this House this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, to substantiate my statements of promises made in this House last spring concerning the area where I come from and which were repeated by Cabinet Ministers who visited our area during the election campaign. Their views today have changed. The promises made have been forgotten. Mr. Speaker, I have before me Hansard No. 72 of Monday, April 1, 1963.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): April Fool's Day.

Mr. Belanger: That is right, it was an April Fool. And what has happened since then I would say certainly shows this.

I am reading here, Mr. Speaker, after addressing the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton), I had asked him a question and after his answer, I said:

Thank you, Mr. Minister.

My second question: I think that you are aware that last year the department started the reconstruction of Highway No. 18 from Amherstburg. I know that on the estimates of this year there is not very much to be added onto it. But I would like to have an assurance from the hon. Minister that it is the intention of the department to carry this through and that we shall not have to wait, say, five or six years before it is completed because you have a drainage problem on that highway and also a very bad condition at Turkey Creek bridge. The hon. Minister is very familiar with the situation. I think you were around the neighbourhood last summer and I would say to you that the people would certainly like to get some date from the department when this is going to be continued.

This is the answer of the hon. Minister:

Well, Mr. Chairman, with respect to this section of Highway 18, let me say to the hon. member that originally, as we contemplated our programme several months ago, it was felt that it would be adequate if we provided for resurfacing only, a surface treatment. Subsequently, as we got into the programme it was then concluded that a complete job of reconstruction should be done, that the base was not adequate and that a resurfacing project there would only be of a temporary nature and a stopgap remedy. Coincidental with that it was recognized that we had to deal with, as I see here on a programme, a New York Central overhead half a mile north of Amherstburg and then there is the Wigle Creek bridge 1.2 miles west of Highway 18A at Kingsville. This is the schedule for this year.

With respect to the Turkey Creek bridge, I might say to the hon. member that this was at one time on the programme. It was on the programme up to a matter of just a few short weeks ago. We were obliged to take it off because my engineers informed me that they were not satisfied with the design. I am told that it is a rather tricky piece of design. It is not a straightforward bridge, there are certain angles associated with it. They were not satisfied with the design so they took it off as recently as just a few days following a discussion with the hon. member.

(Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.)

I approached our planning and design branch, the director of planning and design, and the planning engineer and I am assured to the greatest extent possible they will proceed with this redesign. If it is possible to get it in as an addendum to the 1963 programme, it will go on. If not, I can assure that this redesign work will go on and will be done in 1964. This is the reason it was left off. I indicated that to the hon. member some time ago that it was a surprise to me that it had to be left off, that it had not been left on, but that is the reason for it.

Mr. Belanger: Well, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this very much indeed and I know that the people will be very happy to hear this. I think that I have had some discussion not only with you but also with the previous Minister about Highway 18 through the town of Ojibway. I think that you are aware of the developments that are going to take place in the town of Ojibway this year and that definitely some reconstruction will have to be done. At least, if you intend to do this just piecemeal, you are going to have to do some resurfacing or some mending this year because it will not be able to carry the traffic that is going to go there this year. Therefore, I would say that that should be taken care of in the very near future.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I can only assure the hon. member that the required maintenance indicated in this section will be carried out. If it is not a programme for this year, I will have a personal look at the thing with respect to the future. But certainly, to the extent that it requires any maintenance, I can assure him that this will be taken care of.

You can see from this that the department was going to reconstruct Turkey Creek bridge in 1963, and that if it was impossible in 1963, it would be done in 1964.

An hon. member: For sure.

Mr. Belanger: On October 5, 1963, after the last election, I sent the following letter to the hon. Minister concerning this bridge.

An hon. member: We will talk turkey now!

Mr. Belanger: This is dated October 5:

Honourable C. S. MacNaughton, Minister of Highways,
Parliament Buildings,
Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Charlie:

Let me first congratulate you for your success in the recent Ontario election. Now that you and I have been re-elected and you are still at the same post let us put the election behind us and continue serving the people of Ontario as we are voted in to do.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Belanger: The letter continues:

I want to thank the department for the installation of the traffic signal at the corner of Huron line, that is Highway 3 and Grand Marais Road.

It went into operation around August 5, as your regional office had told me would be done. We do appreciate this and it will eliminate a great hazard at this intersection.

Now if you will recall during the estimates of your department last spring, I asked you what would be done with Turkey Creek bridge at the entrance to LaSalle on Number 18 highway.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Belanger: This is to you maybe something very funny indeed, but to the people of that area this is a very important bridge. This is the bridge that leads to Essex South—

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Another hon. member: The bridge of sighs now.

Mr. Belanger: The letter continues:

At that time you told me that you had it set for the 1963 budget but due to the change in plans it had to be relocated, but that you would do your best to have it done this year. May I please ask you if you have any further information on this, and when you think the department will start on the project?

On October 23 I received this reply from the hon. Minister:

Mr. Maurice L. Belanger, MPP,
470 Randolph Ave.,
Windsor, Ontario.

Dear Maurice:

I wish to acknowledge your letter of October 5, 1963, and thank you for your very good wishes on my re-election. Let me also congratulate you and wish you every success.

Regarding the Turkey Creek bridge on Highway 18, and the traffic study at the intersection of Third Concession Road and Highway 3B, I wish to advise that due to additional commitments for priority highway construction projects which had been made this year, a number of projects which had been delayed for various technical and property acquisition reasons have had to be deferred on our programme so as to keep our expenditures within our projects.

For the above reason the Turkey Creek bridge, which still has some involved technical and property acquisition problems, has been deferred on our programme for construction to 1965.

Nineteen sixty-five! And after the promises that I received right here that it would be done in 1963, and if not in 1963, at least in 1964. Now, this is what I get. After the election!

An hon. member: You cannot believe a word they say.

Another hon. member: Perhaps they figure on waiting until 1967. They are squirming, Charlie.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The turkey is in the creek.

Mr. Belanger: Let me read also, Mr. Speaker, from a photostatic copy of a letter which the hon. Minister had the kindness to send me—

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): I am going to quit writing you letters!

Mr. Belanger:—from the president of the Sandwich West Chamber of Commerce—

An hon. member: He would be better to phone the guy.

Another hon. member: He should either quit writing letters or live up to them; one of the two.

Mr. Belanger:—dated November 13, and this is addressed to the hon. Minister.

Dear Mr. MacNaughton:

For the past several years the Sandwich West Chamber of Commerce, formerly the LaSalle Chamber of Commerce, has repeatedly brought to the attention of the Minister of Highways for the province of Ontario, the deplorable condition of Highway 18 which runs through the township of Sandwich West. All of our correspondence about that brought promises, promises and promises, but unfortunately the reconstruction of Highway 18 has not yet started.

You, sir, I know, are well aware of the dangerous condition of the existing bridge at Turkey Creek and the extremely poor drainage along Highway 18 running through the township.

The Sandwich West Chamber of Commerce firmly believes these existing conditions are holding back the growth of this community. We are convinced that as soon as these conditions are corrected a dynamic future awaits this area. We therefore beg of you, sir, to give consideration to redevelopment of this section of Highway 18, and that work be immediately started.

We thank you for your consideration and look forward to an early reply.

Yours sincerely,

Sandwich West Chamber of Commerce
(signed) Leo J. Belanger, president.

And I may say that he is no relative of mine, but he is an acquaintance. This I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the people of that area are quite concerned in that they are asking The Department of Highways to live up to the promises that they have made.

An hon. member: It is only fair and right.

Mr. Belanger: I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that I have some sort of a doubt about this government not penalizing an area that votes against the government? During the election campaign, no fewer than ten Cabinet Ministers came to the area to make appeals in support of the government. Some promised great things for the Windsor area. I do not see him in his seat now, but the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) promised that the government would acquire Peche Island, which is an island in the Detroit River, and develop it as a provincial park. That was a promise. The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests promised us that.

Today, these plans have been changed and what they have offered the city of Windsor is that if Windsor and the surrounding municipalities wish to acquire this island, they will give them a grant of $50,000, just the same as any municipality that wants to develop a park. Great promises before the election, but after the election, it is not the same thing.

The hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) has made many visits to Windsor, and I may say that we like to see him there because I know that he has very close ties there. I may say that some seven or eight years ago we were honoured to have the province establish the Western Institute of Technology, and the building it got from the city of Windsor was an old school, mind you, that had been condemned. The city of Windsor let this to The Department of Education for $1 a year. It has been in that same building ever since, and because of the increase in the enrolment, it has put hut after hut around this building. It is right in the downtown area. It is poor advertising for this great province, which prides itself in the development of education. I want to say that on one of the visits he made to Windsor, he did promise the citizens of Windsor that there would be a new institute of technology in the city of Windsor. Still, in the Speech from the Throne, no mention was made of this.

The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree), oh yes, he came into the city of Windsor. I want to say to the hon. Minister that after attending a meeting last week, where some of his own hon. members turned against him; the way he carried on that meeting, Mr. Speaker, was deplorable. Certainly the way they were trying to get some information from him and he was determined that he was going to get his piece of legislation through and his own hon. members were asking him questions; and the way he answered was deplorable indeed.

He came into the city of Windsor and we asked him when The Ontario Minimum Wage Act would be extended from the golden horseshoe to the city of Windsor. He promised it to them soon and still nothing has taken place.

Then there was one man that I thought was rather supreme in the administration of justice in this province, but I have found out that there is somebody in this province already that can tell the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass): This is what I am going to do and this is what you are going to accept.

I am speaking of the former chairman of the Ontario Police Commission, and we all know that the former chairman of this commission and the hon. Attorney General do differ on certain points. But we in the city of Windsor do not want to be the victims of that. Because of the fact that this former chairman says he is going to do as he pleases, he established himself—after resigning his post—in the city of Windsor again.

In the city of Windsor we have two new judges that were appointed by the federal government very recently, and then because of these appointments there were appointments to the police commissions here and there, and these appointments to the police commissions are made by the hon. Attorney General. We feel that the man who should have been appointed to the police commission in the city of Windsor should have been the senior county judge of the county of Essex. Such was not the case. It was the former chairman of the Ontario Police Commission that was appointed to that and the new senior county judge had to take a position on one of the suburban police commissions—Sandwich West. I think that this was an insult to our senior county judge.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, relating some incidents and comments made by some of the hon. Ministers. The former Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) certainly made some grand promises to the people of Windsor when he was there. The hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Auld), the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett)—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Tell us about the dinosaurs.

Mr. Belanger: —and then the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts). I want to say just this, Mr. Speaker, that I want to relate a little faux pas that the hon. Prime Minister made in the city of Windsor when he came there on one occasion. We have what we call the Greater Windsor Foundation in the city of Windsor which has done a tremendous amount of work to bring up the city of Windsor to the standard that we enjoy today. They raised some $40,000 to erect a sign on a building eight storeys high which overlooks Detroit and it appeals to the people of Detroit to visit, shop, save in the city of Windsor. The sign is several feet high and can be seen from miles away.

At this gathering, there must have been some 700 guests or so. When the hon. Prime Minister was speaking he referred to the city of Detroit as the capital of Michigan. Really and truly, the murmur that went on in that hall afterwards was certainly something. That was certainly a faux pas made by the hon. Prime Minister.

Sometimes I have felt that I should have said this in the past, but I am going to say it now, that if you have the representation for the county of Essex that we have today, and mind you we are very proud there are four Liberal members there, that you yourself on that side of the House are to blame to a great extent.

Now let me say the reason why, I am going to be honest and sincere about this thing. Previous to the election of 1959, the riding that I represent had a Cabinet Minister. Then came the northern Ontario gas scandal and the Cabinet Minister, for his participation in this, was fired from his post. He did retain his seat, however. In fact, he was the government's candidate in the 1959 election. I had served on the city council of the city of Windsor and I was known also—

Mr. Troy: No natural gas there!

Mr. Belanger: I recall that the previous Prime Minister, the Honourable Leslie Frost came to visit Windsor during the campaign and he had his picture taken with this former Cabinet Minister and the caption under the picture was this: "This is my man." I want to say that the people of Windsor are intelligent people, they take their politics seriously. How could they accept this statement from the former Prime Minister that this was his man, when just a few months previous to that he had fired him from the Cabinet?

Mr. MacDonald: Oh no, he just resigned.

Mr. Belanger: I recall that my hon. colleague from Essex North (Mr. Reaume) did tell the hon. members of this House previous to that election that he would be back after the election of 1959 and that he would bring two other members with him. He kept his promise.

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Belanger: Now this year the whole county of Essex is solid Liberal—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Belanger: —and I want to say that in spite of all the money that the hon. members opposite poured into the county to retrieve seats, they were unsuccessful. The people of Windsor were not going to be fooled—nor the people of that county. They were not to be bought. Hard work, organization, devoted workers, and, I want to say, superior candidates did the trick.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Another hon. member: Grand optimists, we are.

Mr. MacDonald: The Beatles have nothing on this.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, I want to say in spite of what has been said by outside newspapers, especially in the city of Toronto, and the gloomy picture painted by those outside of Windsor about this great, friendly, courageous industrial municipality—Windsor is going ahead today.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Right.

Mr. Belanger: I invite the hon. members of this House to visit Windsor, see the new city hall—

An hon. member: They will come around in the next election.

Mr. Belanger: —the Cleary Auditorium and Convention Centre, the redevelopment area, the ever-expanding University of Windsor and our homes for senior citizens, our expanding townships, our numerous diversified industries, our several new shopping plazas. I can go on and on.

The government says, done here, and done there—they are not the only ones who can spread that stuff around.

Several hon. members: Done!

Mr. Belanger: But what I am saying is the truth. Not done like the hon. members opposite said, when it was not.

Mr. MacDonald: A Liberal talking to a Tory.

Mr. Belanger: The high rise apartments downtown on the river front, the new court house!

(Mr. Speaker resumes the chair.)

Yes, Mr. Speaker, today there is a new Windsor. And how was this accomplished? By people who were determined to go ahead and not say die. Oh, we still have unemployment, but we have made progress.

Would you believe that our welfare costs—which by the way is quite a saving to the province of Ontario, because the government pays 80 per cent of that cost—had dropped close to $300,000 by the end of November and I know by the time the December 31 figures are out it will be larger than that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this: that we are appreciative of some of the things that we have received from this government in the past. If I have left the impression that the government has not helped us in the past, I do not want to leave that.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Some of us got that impression.

Mr. MacDonald: —being on both sides of the issue.

Hon. A. Crossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Just coincidental.

Mr. Belanger: Now, just a minute, just a minute now. It is not just coincidental. Some of the things were deserved and they were coming to us, and the government had to take a hand into it.

An hon. member: It was the taxpayers' money, too.

Another hon. member: Sure!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Belanger: I want to say a lot can be done by this government for Windsor. What we do hope, Mr. Speaker, is that because we are 100 per cent Liberal in Essex county, that we will still be considered as part and parcel of Ontario and that we will continue to enjoy harmonious relationship with this government.

Now that I have covered some of the local problems, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the government certain points that I feel would be beneficial for the general good of this province.

In the Speech from the Throne I was interested in the decision of the government to establish a select committee of the Legislature to be set up to study the whole question of greater youth participation in every sphere of community life, and the place and problems of young people in a modern technological society.

Last year when I made some comments during the estimates of The Department of Reform Institutions, I suggested the formation of a youth ministry which would be devoted to youth in all its aspects, except education. The establishment of this select committee is a step in the right direction. I would like to suggest that one of their first points of study would be to recommend that Ontario training schools for both boys and girls be placed under a different department than Reform Institutions.

I do not know how many of the hon. members have visited some of these training schools. They will find there boys and girls ranging from nine to 16 years of age who have been committed to these schools—mind you, they are called schools and properly so, for they receive an education while there as well as being rehabilitated. Yet we place them under a department which has control over reform schools and jails.

You do not treat kids from nine to 16 the same as hardened adult criminals, derelicts, dope fiends and others. These training schools for juveniles should be either under The Department of Public Welfare or Health or Municipal Affairs. I would not place them under The Department of Education, because there would be resentment from other sources there. But surely let us take it away from The Department of Reform Institutions.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver), in his participation in reply to the Speech from the Throne, suggested to this government that it was high time it should start to practise economy in its administration. This was also emphasized by my colleague, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). I want to subscribe to this policy.

Truly, Mr. Speaker, this government cannot continue to mislead the people of this province by their interpretation that everything is fine in Ontario, that there is prosperity, that the debt is being reduced. I would like to read to you excerpts from an article written by Mr. Don O'Hearn which appeared in the Windsor Star of December 9. I am just going to read a certain part of it if here, Mr. Speaker. It says:

Toronto—The province of Ontario's financial report released today has good news. The report shows for the first time just how the province made out in 1962-63 in a spring budget statement. Only interim figures with an estimate for the last three months of the year are given.

The good news is that the increase in the net debt for the last fiscal year was only $75 million. This was less than the increase in 1961-62 of $116,400,000, and even less than in 1960-61, which was $99 million. This reverses the trend of recent times that the addition to debt goes up more each year, and it would indicate the province is in a happy position.

The figure, however, can be somewhat misleading. The last fiscal year was the first full year of sales tax in the province and this return of $175 million was nearly $100 million more than the year before. Also, it was the first full year on new Ottawa tax agreements, and this means $30 million more from personal income tax and in addition $20 million from corporation tax—a total of $150 million in found money. This bonanza will not be repeated.

So therefore, you can see, Mr. Speaker, that there are others who do not believe the government's claim that the cost of government is decreasing every year. Mr. Speaker, from what has happened since the release of this financial report and the statement made by the hon. Prime Minister in Hamilton, it is almost sure that there will be tax increases in 1964.

Since the Ontario committee on taxation began public hearings in Toronto on November 26 last, there have been several organizations and associations that have presented briefs or made submissions to the committee.

I was particularly interested in the views of the Canadian manufacturers' association, Ontario division. It was of the opinion that with increased taxation from all levels of government—municipal, provincial and federal—the Canadian manufacturer was taxing himself from the competing markets of the world. Our imports will continue to rise and our exports to decline, Mr. Speaker. What was said by the hon. leader of the Opposition, that this province, in order to achieve more revenues must look to another field than taxation, is very true indeed. It must develop its natural resources, it must induce its manufacturers to promote sales here and abroad. This they will be able to do if taxes are cut instead of being increased.

To me, any government which decides that, in order to carry on the services to the people it represents, it must continually increase taxes for its programmes shows a marks of weakness. The average housewife, when her family increases and the household income remains the same, has to resort to economy here and there to meet the circumstances as they arise. She has to face up to the problem and this demands courage. Governments should have the courage to face the many problems that they encounter without placing undue hardships on the people they represent.

During the last election campaign I recall seeing in our municipality over 100 billboards which carried the picture of the hon. Prime Minister with the message: "Good government deserves your support."

Hon. members opposite were just a little too quick there again with their applause, just a little too quick, just a minute.

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): The hon. member walked into that one.

Mr. Belanger: I know that the same billboards were erected all over the province. In fact, I would be interested in knowing what amount the party spent on this type of billboard alone. Yes, good government deserves support, sir, but this same government is asking the people it represents to accept increased taxation, increased Ontario hospitalization costs, increased liquor prices, increased automobile registration—increases, increases and increases.

Why did it not have the courage to tell the people of Ontario during the election campaign that in order to give them good government, it would have to increase taxation? No, it chose to deceive the people of Ontario. It chose to paint a rosy picture. Let me tell you that I recall a certain man by the name of John Diefenbaker, who was the Prime Minister of Canada, and he used the same tactics, saying to the people of Canada that everything was fine in the election of 1962. Only a few days afterwards he had to appear in front of the people of Canada and to admit that the economy of the country was in jeopardy. His government did not last too long. He met his defeat in April, 1963.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): But he has new support, he has new support.

Mr. Belanger: Oh, yes, I saw that too, last week.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Sandwich has the floor.

Mr. Belanger: True, Mr. Speaker, you won the seats on September 25 last but you did not win the popular vote. You deceived the people once again with this and it cannot continue. There is a day of reckoning.

I would say to this government, that on February 12, when the budget is presented, it faces a moral obligation to the people of this province. It promised them good government and not increased taxation. Therefore, it must face the problem with courage and not weakness.

Mr. Speaker, in the heat of arguments and proceedings of this House, I have found that we often forget the purpose for which we were elected by the people back home. In fact, I will go so far as to say that we forget the purpose of our very existence, namely, to serve God and our fellow man. These are our God-given rights. Mr. Speaker, I am cognizant of the fact that at the opening of each of these sessions, we implore Divine guidance in prayer, but too often this becomes routine and the words of prayer have no meaning.

I wonder if the government and especially the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) would not consider that as more and more office spaces are being made available in this building by the transfer of various departments to other locations in the city, whether he could not turn one of these offices into a small chapel, where one could go during the day and in those surroundings, with proper atmosphere, could ask Divine guidance. Such a chapel exists in the Parliament buildings at Ottawa, and it is used by members of all faiths and denominations. I do not think it should be too elaborate, as simplicity should prevail.

M. le président, je veux féliciter les membres de cette Législature qui ont adressé la parole en français au cours de ces débats et de leurs discours. C'est une bonne chose. L'attitude aujourd'hui a changé de ce que c'était en 1960. C'est pour le bien et j'espère que cela continuera dans l'avenir.

In 1960, when I made a few remarks in French, Mr. Speaker the then Minister of Municipal Affairs who was later the Minister of Labour, interrupted me by saying these few words: "We do not have to listen to this in this House." I am very happy to see that the attitude has changed.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to congratulate you on your appointment. I have had the pleasure of knowing you since I came into this House in 1959. I know that you have a very difficult task and I know that you will do it justice. What you have done since your appointment has been very good indeed, and I want to congratulate you.

Mr. A. A. Wishart (Sault Ste. Marie) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are four speakers left in the Throne Speech debate and I think we will be able to complete it tomorrow afternoon. When it is completed we will return to the order paper.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.55 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, February 11, 1964

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Tuesday, February 11, 1964

Third report, standing committee on private bills, Mr. Gomme	541
Operating Engineers Act, 1964, bill intituled, Mr. Rowntree, first reading	541
Highway Traffic Act, bill to amend, Mr. Haskett, first reading	542
Bailiffs Act, 1960-61, bill to amend, Mr. Cass, first reading	542
Resolution re Bill No. 9, concurred in	543
Department of Agriculture Act, bill to amend, reported	544
Resumption of the debate on the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Wishart, Mr. Young, Mr. Sopha	545
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Sopha, agreed to	567
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	567

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the west gallery students from the Western Ontario Agricultural School, Ridgeway.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark) from the standing committee on private bills presented the committee's third report which was read as follows and adopted.

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill No. Pr4, An Act respecting the city of Waterloo.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill No. Pr29, An Act respecting the township of York.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) moves, seconded by hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister), that this House will tomorrow resolve itself into the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Allan moves, seconded by hon. Mr. Robarts, that this House will tomorrow resolve itself into the committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE OPERATING ENGINEERS ACT, 1964

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour) moves first reading of bill intitled, The Operating Engineers Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in line with The Industrial Safety Act, 1964, and The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act, 1964, which were previously introduced in this session, The Operating Engineers Act, 1964 is a complete recasting of the existing legislation respecting the operation of boiler plants, compressor and refrigeration plants and the licensing of the personnel.

In August of 1962, the then Minister of Labour appointed a special committee, consisting of Mr. A. J. Poulson, Q.C., Dr. E. A. Alcott, retired dean of engineering, University of Toronto, and Mr. George Rose, chief operating engineer at Frigidaire Corporation of Canada Limited, to review the existing legislation. The appointment of this committee was intended to satisfy a recommendation of the Royal commission on industrial safety that this legislation should be reviewed and brought up to date.

The committee reported to me under date of June 28, 1963 and I requested that the report be studied in The Department of Labour, with a view to implementing its recommendations and, at the same time, to preserve many of the basic and accepted principles contained in the existing legislation and regulations.

My understanding is that the committee received 28 briefs and heard the parties presenting them. As the review of the report and its implications progressed, we came to the conclusion that a new statute should be drafted. When the work of re-drafting was well under way, I ordered the report of the committee to be made public so that all interested parties could study it and be in a position to assess the new bill when it was introduced into the House. Several months of intensive work have gone on in The Department of Labour and I know, from my discussions with my officials, that it has not been an easy task to draft the bill dealing with this highly complex and technical field.

In presenting this bill, Mr. Speaker, I can state that it is the view of The Department of Labour that we have endeavoured to deal with the major recommendations of the committee. However, in fairness to the hon. members of the House, I feel that I should point out that until this draft is printed and becomes available to the public and, in particular, to the interested parties, they have no knowledge of its contents and how their particular interests may be affected. Obviously, this bill should go to the standing committee on labour, legal bills and municipal law, and I propose this course after second reading. I expect that there will be representations and recommendations on this bill and I am anxious that every group which has an interest should have an opportunity to study it.

The major change in the bill, Mr. Speaker, is that we are departing from the old method of raising the capacity of boilers, compressors and plants, according to formulae for calculating horsepower which appear in the old Act.

We are now implementing new formulae for calculating the capacity of boilers, compressors and plants in line with the report. The term "thermhour" replaces horsepower as the rating unit in the new bill. This will involve the re-registration of existing plants on the new basis.

To get the new system underway, it will be necessary to have a degree of flexibility in determining plant operating requirements and the operating qualifications of engineers and operators. This flexibility can best be achieved by regulation. It is the hope of the department that a draft of the regulations will be available to the standing committee.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is a further step taken by the government to ensure the safety of the people who live and work in Ontario.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the bill deals with an assortment of matters such as requires to be tidied up periodically to keep the Act up to date. It includes such items as pedestrian crossovers, buses stopping at railroad crossings, speed limits, impounding of motor vehicles and financial responsibility of owners. The bill will go to the appropriate standing committee, namely, that on highways and tourism.

THE BAILIFFS ACT, 1960-61

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Bailiffs Act, 1960-61.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, there are three things that this Act will do. In pursuance of intradepartmental reorganization, we are placing the private bailiffs covered by this Act under the same official who deals with other matters of consumer credit, such as The Collection Agencies Act and The Mortgage Brokers Act and The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act.

Secondly, the bill will provide that no person who is in the business of a collection agency may also be a private bailiff; and thirdly, the Act provides that the maximum penalty is now increased from $100 to $1,000 per offence and there is a limitation period of a year provided.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I think all hon. members of the House will join with me in welcoming back the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Gordon) and I would like to say we are very happy to see him.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko), notice of which has been submitted to him.

Has the hon. Provincial Secretary received any further information as to a report of the Metropolitan Toronto Police having been forwarded to The Liquor Control Board of Ontario regarding a distillery? If not, would the hon. Provincial Secretary make a further inquiry of the board and report to the House?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the chairman of The Liquor Control Board of Ontario that no report of the Metropolitan Toronto police has been forwarded to the board respecting a distillery.

I requested the chairman of the board to give me a report for the House as to any contact whatsoever between the Metropolitan Toronto police and the board respecting a distillery during the past year and he advised me as follows:

As a result of investigation by the Metropolitan Toronto police in September, 1963, two charges under The Liquor Control Act were laid against a distillery, one under section 70(1) and another under section 42(1). These charges were heard by Magistrate R. C. Taylor on October 16, 1963, at which time the distillery in question pleaded guilty to both charges through its counsel. As a result of the conviction, the magistrate imposed a fine of $5,000 for one offence and $1,000 for the other.

The board immediately ordered a transcript of the evidence of the hearing before Magistrate Taylor and, after obtaining and considering the same, imposed disciplinary action upon the distillery on October 21, 1963 by delisting the company's products for one week in all 363 of the board's stores.

No official report was ever forwarded to The Liquor Control Board of Ontario in connection with these charges against the distillery, or any other matter concerning it. However, prior to the return to the convicted company, by the Metropolitan Toronto police, of the records seized by them on the premises of the company, the chief of the Metropolitan police invited, as a matter of courtesy, the Chief Commissioner of The Liquor Control Board of Ontario to examine the seized records.

On October 31, 1963 the chairman, the general manager, and the legal counsel to the board examined the said records in the police chief's office. None of these records were recent or relevant or provided, in the opinion of these officials, any basis upon which charges could be laid against the distillery or an individual under part 3 of the Criminal Code or any further charges under The Liquor Control Act.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a short statement that I would like to make to the House.

The statement, sir, announced today by Great Lakes Paper Company Limited, of its intention to expand marks the culmination of months of negotiation, including The Department of Lands and Forests.

This is the third major expansion announcement in the pulp and paper industry in Ontario in the last six months. There have also been a number of new developments, using Ontario wood, outside the pulp and paper industry. More will be said about the latter at some other time in the session.

Today I am sure the House will welcome this latest announcement.

In October, 1963, Domtar Newsprint Limited announced that it would spend $11 million expanding its Red Rock mill, located about 65 miles east of the Lakehead and near the town of Nipigon.

On February 1, of this year, Abitibi Power and Paper Company Limited announced a conversion of its Smooth Rock Falls mill from sulphite pulp production to sulphate pulp production with expanded facilities, at a capital cost of some $13 million. Both of these also followed very thorough and complete discussions with The Department of Lands and Forests.

Now, today, we have the latest in this series—the proposed expansion at the Lakehead by Great Lakes Paper Company Limited, involving $31 million. The total of the three is some $55 million.

The Great Lakes Paper Company, since it commenced operations in Fort William forty years ago, has progressively expanded its newsprint production from an initial 100,000 tons to 360,000 tons, requiring an annual pulpwood production now of some 400,000 cords.

The new mill will be constructed with an estimated capacity of 200,000 tons of kraft pulp annually. It is expected that the work of construction will be completed by the end of 1965.

All three major expansions—the Abitibi, the Red Rock and the Great Lakes—anticipate completion in 1965.

The end result of all this is the maintaining of the high quality products of this industry from Ontario in the highly competitive world markets. It also means more export dollars and increased employment.

It is to the credit of all concerned in the negotiations that this major expansion can take place well within the planned management of the forest resources of our province.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Sixteenth order, committee of the whole House; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following resolution:

That the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may make arrangements for supplying the money necessary to fulfil the requirements of any guarantee under The Department of Agriculture Act and to advance the amount necessary for that purpose out of the public funds of the province, as provided by Bill 9, An Act to amend The Department of Agriculture Act.

Resolution concurred in.

THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 9, An Act to amend The Department of Agriculture Act.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves that the bill, as reprinted, be considered.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): I might explain, Mr. Chairman, that the purpose of this reconsideration of the amendment here is that it is a limiting factor of $2,500, together with interest thereon made to farmers for the purpose of paying the costs of transporting water, including the cost, if any, of purchasing such water, and that it be limited to a maximum of $2,500 and to the purpose of water only.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister would give us some explanation as to what is the total—I presume he has no idea as to the total amount? In effect, has he asked for a blank cheque depending on the number of people who apply for this?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would say this, in effect, is true but it is limited to those who do apply for water transporting alone. This is not to drill wells; it is for nothing but to buy and transport water in the present emergency. The amount is $2,500; no farmer can exceed that amount as a guarantee. This is the limiting factor.

It is relatively impossible to determine how many people will apply. Quite frankly, with the recent rains that we have had and the quite substantial amount of snow which fell in western Ontario, which practically has gone now, the water situation is greatly improved up there. There is not nearly the same emergency there was even a few weeks ago, and we feel that there will be actually very few people who will avail themselves of this; but, on the other hand, if we have another dry year as we had last year this will be in effect for those who might be caught in such an emergency another year.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he would tell us what other purposes this bill was originally intended for, as he introduced it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There were no other purposes. As I mentioned in the House it was for the purpose of paying for the cost and transportation of water in the emergency.

This was what it was intended for, and I quite rightly recognize that, the way the bill was printed before, it could be interpreted as applying to almost anything. Quite rightly. This was the way it read and we recognize this, and this is why we brought this amendment back here.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: In the hon. Minister's own words, it was for the supply and transportation of water and such other purposes as the hon. Minister or the government in council saw fit. That was the way it was originally.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, this is the explanation that the hon. member may take out of it, but I think what I have said today clears the thing up as well.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, may the hon. Minister clear this up? What about farmers who bought equipment in the past; can they apply last year? Can they apply for any assistance under this bill?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I did not hear the first part of the hon. member's question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Spence: Last year a number of farmers bought tanks and equipment for drawing water. Can they apply for any assistance for the past?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, this does not cover the cost of any equipment, either trucks, tanks, water pumps, or irrigation systems. There were various means used for transporting water, but it does apply to those farmers who had to buy water in another municipality from a distance and had to transport it. Some of them got it free in other municipalities, or in certain ponds or lakes or something like this, and had it trucked in. Now it was intended to assist them until they got some permanent source of water. This was the idea.

Section 1, as reprinted, agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

Bill No. 9 reported.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report it has come to a certain resolution and also has passed a certain bill with amendment and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report it has come to a certain resolution and also has passed a certain bill with amendment, and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: Fifteenth order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. A. A. Wishart (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, on the first occasion when I sat in this assembly as a member, on January 15 of this year, after the reading of the Speech from the Throne I was much impressed by the remarks of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) when he said: "I do not think there is any nobler pursuit than the offer of a man to serve his fellow men in a democratic society in a Legislature such as this." I must confess, Mr. Speaker, I have not been quite so impressed or quite so in agreement with some of the later statements he has made to this House, but the tone and the sentiments which he expressed on that occasion I found very acceptable.

Those remarks which I have quoted, Mr. Speaker, were made by the hon. member in congratulating you on your election to the high office which you hold. As I add my respects and congratulations I think the best tribute I can pay you, sir, is to say that I will seek to observe the fair rules of debate in this assembly. I shall accept your rulings and I shall not endeavour to place upon the record anything which may be objectionable or out of order.

Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to represent the riding of Sault Ste. Marie, so ably represented previously in this House by the late C. Harry Lyons, a man who had the affection of all who knew him and who became a sort of legend in his lifetime. I learned very recently that he made his maiden speech from this very spot which I now occupy. He followed in the footsteps of his father, the late Honourable James Lyons, the Minister of Lands and Forests in the government of this province and the man who is remembered for a very great contribution in opening up and developing the resources of the great northern areas of the province of Ontario.

This is no mean riding. It stretches from the shores of the St. Mary River for some 250 miles along the eastern shore of Lake Superior to the terminus of the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway at Franz. It has a population of more than 100,000 people and I am conscious of the fact that I represent all of them. It is rich in resources of people, of industry, of mines and minerals, of timber, of lakes and rivers, hydro-electric power, fish and game, and possessed of scenic beauty which is unsurpassed anywhere in this broad Dominion. To use a trite expression, it is a tourists' paradise.

To be more specific as to resources, I mention the great iron ore deposits of Goulais and Michipicoten, the gold of Renabie and the copper deposits now being brought into production at Batchawana; and the vast stands of hardwood and softwood timber which cover a great portion of my riding.

Upon the broad base of those resources and the vigour and enterprise of the people there have developed a number of very prosperous industries: the Algoma Steel Corporation with some 7,000 employees, the Abitibi Power and Paper Company, Mannesman Tube, the Algoma Central Railway—entirely within the boundaries of this riding—Great Lakes Power, Weyerhaeuser and a number of others.

There came, Mr. Speaker, on my desk a day or so ago, a publication entitled "Selected Canadian Common Stock — Profits and Prophecies" dated October, 1963. This was prepared by Burns Brothers & Denton Limited, and that company in this publication reviews its recommendations for purchase in 1962 for holding in 1963. It is interesting to observe that of 18 common stocks selected all across Canada, three—Algoma Steel, Algoma Central Railway and Great Lakes Power—are entirely within the riding of Sault Ste. Marie. In the 22 recommendations made now for purchase and holding for the next year, the same three appear with an account of their excellent performance and their excellent prospects.

I may be pardoned perhaps, Mr. Speaker, if I suggest this is rather remarkable. Yet it is not so remarkable when I remind this House that those industries are located on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway; they are served by two railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Algoma Central Railway, and by the Trans-Canada highway, and have the resources which I have mentioned on which to draw. They are served also by excellent management, and the working force of those industries enjoy excellent relations with management. When these things are taken into account, perhaps it is not remarkable that we find the report which I have offered to this House.

I am sure, sir, that the people of my riding would wish me to express to the government the gratitude of my constituents for the location and construction of the Trans-Canada Highway along the shore of Lake Superior through Wawa, through White River and on to the west; and for the very large part which was played by the government in the construction of the international bridge at Sault Ste. Marie and across the St. Mary River. The effect of those two things alone can scarcely be exaggerated in the development of the riding and of the whole area which is served by the bridge and by the highway leading from it. If anyone doubts that, let him ask the people of Wawa, White River and the places in between.

Nothing, I would say, does more to open up and develop the north country than roads, good roads. We have in our hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton)—the hon. member for Huron—a man who is aware of this fact. We note with satisfaction the construction of the highway from Hornepayne to join Highway 17 near White River and the construction of the road from Chapleau through Hawk Junction and Wawa to join with Highway 17. There are many other communities which require access roads and I hereby serve notice by way of a friendly warning upon the hon. Minister, that he will hear more from me upon the needs of these communities for roads, which will do so much for their prosperity and for the prosperity of the area.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the most important matter with which government has to deal is education. The increased grants to lessen taxation at the local level and the implementation of the Robarts plan to provide equality of opportunity in primary education for every child in this province are things which must meet with universal commendation. The establishment of a Department of University Affairs and the Crown corporation to deal with capital grants for university construction programmes, are things which we will watch with interest. They are to be commended, and we look for tangible and definite results from these programmes reported and offered in the Speech from the Throne.

In my riding, I might say, a large group of people—dedicated people—have been seeking for some time to establish a college in the district of Algoma which would serve to offer first-year arts and science courses, with the eventual hope that this would develop into a university which would offer education to our young people in the area where they live. We are a long way from the seats of higher education, and surely nothing but commendation should be given to people who seek for their children, for the young people, a means of securing a good education without having to go to far fields to attain it. I trust that the new university affairs department, and the new Crown corporation, along with the university affairs committee, will be able to assist in seeing established a college in the district of Algoma.

The Department of Lands and Forests is one that touches the welfare of my riding very closely. While considerable is being done in the matter of reforestation, I am bound to report a feeling that the programme of reforestation should be greatly expanded so that this source of our wealth is not depleted but continually restored and renewed.

While it is important that large corporations, which have invested great amounts of capital in plant and equipment, be assured of adequate timber limits to maintain their operations over the years, it is at the same time essential that the small operator who has invested substantial amounts in equipment over the years be looked after; that he be kept in mind, and that sufficient areas of timber be kept available near his place of operation, so that he may carry on. Because the small operator over the years has been the mainstay of his community, by providing employment, particularly in the winter months. This is a pattern which has endured over a long period of time and I urge that it be borne in mind, and that areas of timber be set aside and kept available for the small operators; otherwise the government may find itself supporting, through welfare grants, people who are capable of being employed and who would prefer to be employed.

In the matter of the planting of fish, it is apparent that the programme is far too meagre and quite inadequate.

There are many large lakes which are the natural habitat of trout, and which used to teem with these game fish, which have not been planted for many years. In many others, such planting as has been done has been too little and too late. We believe that, instead of one hatchery to serve this tremendous area, small rearing ponds should be established on the larger lakes which are known trout waters. I would name such lakes as Ranger, Saymo, Basswood, Mashagama, Island Lake, Old Woman—and I could name a dozen others. We refuse to accept the attitude that these waters cannot be restored as a prime tourist attraction.

We believe that a programme, such as we have suggested, would solve the problem, would be almost immediately effective, and would more than pay for itself in increased tourist revenue. We urge it upon the department and ask for a prompt and aggressive approach to this problem. For far too long we have been depleting the waters which are easy of access and which lie near at hand, and moving on to other lakes and rivers, until now fishing is practically confined to those who can afford to fly to distant waters; and we feel there is no reason for this situation to continue to exist.

The tourist industry is of great and growing importance throughout this province, and nowhere more so than in northern Ontario. It is significant to note that the number of tourists entering Ontario at Sault Ste. Marie increased last year by 109 per cent. The average rate for the province of Ontario was seven per cent.

I predict that the number of tourists entering this province at Sault Ste. Marie will, in the years to come, exceed those entering at any other port of entry, located as we are at the only point of access between International Falls and Sarnia.

I had the pleasure, on the seventh day of this month, of accompanying the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Auld) to Sault Ste. Marie, where he spent a busy two days. The new travel information centre, to be constructed near the International Bridge plaza, will serve a great need in that area and will be greatly welcomed; and I trust it will be under construction early this year.

Mr. Speaker, I have for a long time been interested in hospital matters, having served as a director of the Plummer Memorial Hospital in my riding for some 23 years, and being presently chairman of that board. I welcome the announcement in the Speech from the Throne regarding increased hospital grants, and I am in full accord with the remarks made in this House by the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop).

It had been my intention, as a member of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, to make some remarks on the work of that commission, but that matter has been covered very fully by my colleague on the commission, the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root). I shall reserve my further comments until the appropriation for the work of the commission is being considered in the Budget debate. I would say only, at this time, that the government is to be commended for the creation of a new Department of Energy and Resources Management and for bringing the commission under the Minister of that department, sir, which will, I believe, afford the commission the scope and the means to carry on in conjunction with the ARDA programme and in co-operation with other conservation bodies, a greatly increased programme of water development, irrigation and conservation, while continuing and expanding its work in removing pollution from the waters of this province.

Mr. Speaker, I listened with much interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis). Much of his speech was devoted to automation and the effects of automation. He seemed to regard automation as something new under the sun and to fear its effects upon our society, particularly upon the employment of our working force. Mr. Speaker, automation is not new; it is an acceleration, a rapid acceleration, of a process that has been going on for a long time. It is a sudden acceleration due to great scientific advances, and certainly it will create problems with which we must deal and to which we must give our prompt attention, but it is not something we should fear.

Rather it is something we should welcome, as we should welcome every scientific advance and breakthrough. Let us not be like those who made Galileo recant his scientific conclusions centuries ago. Let us rather take advantage of the opportunity for a fuller, more abundant life which our knowledge and our science and our skills have made possible. The door to the future is open. Let us enter boldly.

It was the fear of automation which caused the cotton mill workers to smash the spinning jennies—the machines which put them temporarily out of work. Little could they foresee that the advent of those machines would increase a thousandfold the growth and the use of cotton, so that for every worker displaced a hundred would be employed, and that cotton would become available at a price where every man, woman and child would have a dozen garments, where only the rich previously could afford to buy a single one.

The blacksmith cursed the internal combustion engine mounted on wheels as the motor car drove him out of business. Little could he conceive that hundreds of thousands of mechanics and factory workers and service station operators, oil drillers and pipe line layers, would take his place to make it possible for everyone to go quickly from place to place and that thousands more would be employed in producing rubber, building highways, and providing services catering to the thousand-and-one needs of an affluent society on wheels. The wheel itself was an early form of automation and I understand it forms a large component of our most modern automated machines.

The clerk in the solicitor's office, before the typewriter came on the scene, copied laboriously in longhand the letters and indentures one at a time, working 12 and 14 hours a day and producing a meagre output. Today, in the same office, a secretary with a modern machine, working six hours, will produce 50 times what her predecessor could do in 12, and she will make ten copies of each document at the same time; and there are 500 secretaries for every clerk of 50 years ago.

Certainly hours of work have lessened from 14 to 12, to ten, to eight. Is there any reason they should not decrease further to six, to four, or less? Certainly days of work have decreased from seven per week, to six, to five, to four. Is it not possible they may fall to three or less?

What do we work for except to secure the means to obtain the things we need to provide a good life? If, by the use of machines of automation we can produce those things we need and those things we need to exchange with other people for their products and services, why should not every man then live like a king of old?

Their affluence, their culture, their leisure, was provided, sustained and supported on the backs of slaves and serfs, where the many toiled in poverty to keep the few in luxury. Our society has the opportunity for all to enjoy the benefits of our knowledge, our science, our automation, if only we have the knowledge and the courage to so order our society that we can use our knowledge for our advantage.

I am confident we shall meet the problems of automation. It is not something we should fear. It can open up great new areas of progress and prosperity. It will decrease certain types and areas of employment, but it can and will open up thousands of new occupations.

Let us by all means study the implications and the changes which automation brings about, and then let us, with straight thinking and clear vision, accept the conclusions at which we arrive and then act accordingly. We have everything on our side. Ontario can lead the way and I believe we shall do it.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege during the fall session of this House to congratulate you upon your appointment and I suppose all I need say at this point is that, in spite, of some differences of opinion, I believe that this House is in good hands.

However, after yesterday's speech by the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yaka-buski), which elicited some curiosity among the hon. members of the House, I think this House would very much like to see your tattoo. We look forward to this in the future.

Mr. Speaker, as a new member of this House, I have been most intrigued in listening to the various speakers ranging the field. With the preponderance of government novices trying their oratorical wings, it is no wonder we have been treated to rare flights of fancy into the ethereal realm of the improbable. Many of these speeches were good. Some of them were excellent, and they made a great deal of sense. Some of them contained progressive ideas, and things that should be implemented. But I suppose a great many of the speakers knew that the things they were talking about had very little chance of implementation very soon.

I suppose all of us in this House have to demonstrate to the people back home that we are aware of their needs and that we are working for the things they want. Down in Kingston they want a bridge to Wolfe Island, so that is on the record. A bridge, I suppose, is the oldest political gadget that we know. In Lakeshore they want smoke abatement, and so that is on the record. A link road is wanted up in Nickel Belt and the appropriate hon. Minister will be shown by helicopter where that link ought to be. And so the story goes.

I was delighted the other day to find my good friend, the hon. member for York Mills (Mr. Bales), advocating a technological institute, not in his riding but in mine. This, I think, is a real sign of progress and fair dealing.

But in all these speeches there always is something for each of the local newspapers and something for each of the pressure groups. And even though each knows that there is about as much chance as the proverbial snowball of getting them all, they are there on the record. And the politician can go back to his home for the next election and say: "I tried. Now even if we didn't get all these things, send me back and I'll try again".

One thing I can say at this juncture, if the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and his government take all the advice of the young enthusiasts in his party and if they do build the technological institutes, if they build the hospital and roads, and clean up the smoke menace and do the things like cleaning up salacious literature and sending back home the people who may not have proper morals in our province, then we are going to have a very busy time over this next period.

And, believe you me, as I look around—if I may be able to address the hon. Prime Minister directly through the Speaker—you have a great many admirers in this House. They love you! you see! and they love also the hon. Ministers in whose hands is the furtherance of their own pet project. I might say that if there is as much sweetness on the part of the hon. Ministers toward these projects as there was in the syrup jug which overflowed across this Chamber during the past couple of weeks, then there are going to be an awful lot of happy backbenchers in the days to come.

Another thing I noticed, Mr. Speaker, is that there is enough dynamite in the younger crew in this House to blow the present Cabinet Ministers—or many of them—right off the Treasury benches, if they maintain their present steam and if that dynamite is not de-fused. They talk our language, and they are talking a programme which is much needed. Take, for example, the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Walker). He wants certain things. He wants the pension, and a better one, and this before the next bargaining session of local 222. He wants the minimum wage extended right across Ontario, and he wants it now. He wants regional planning, and a lot of other things that he mentioned the other day.

You know, as I said to him after his speech, if he talked this way during the last election campaign, I can quite understand how he defeated my good friend Tommy Thomas in Oshawa. Because the good people of that riding must have thought they were voting New Democrat. I have noticed that the aisle here is very narrow—

Mr. A. V. Walker (Oshawa): Quite a different name.

Mr. Young: —between the hon. member and this group, and I think he ought to just move his desk across here and join this group which has consistently, and in public, talked about the programme and stood for the programme that he enunciated the other day.

Mr. G. H. Peck (Scarborough Centre): Come on over this way.

Mr. Young: Well, as a matter of fact, with some pretty obvious exceptions, I would say that many, in the group on this side of the House particularly, have been showing deviationist tendencies that must be worrisome to the Treasury. Something seems to be rubbing off here.

I would think, Mr. Speaker, from the kind of speeches that have been made, that this aisle ought to be abolished. Some of them are mighty good people, and I stand here to pay my tribute to them, sir, even as a member of an Opposition group. I would say that many of them, if they keep their idealism and then take some real, fundamental, modern economics, might even make good Cabinet Ministers in the days ahead, in the government which the New Democrats will eventually form in this province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: The hon. members have had their play. Now comes the whipping into line and the rewards for obedience.

But let me, Mr. Speaker, through you, give to these hon. members some words of advice, advice from another one of the new boys in this House. I say to them, keep your idealism! Don't let the establishment crush you. Do not lose the enthusiasm which you displayed. Keep hammering away at the things that you have been talking about. And if some of the occupants of the Treasury bench just can't get rid of their antediluvian ideas and if they can't come into the 1950's, let alone the 1960's, then bump them out of there and bring your party up to date and make it more ready to cope with the modern, atomic age.

That is a challenge for you and I hope that you will work at it.

Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued the other day when the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Paterson) made his blunder and got his flags mixed up. You know, when you lack a programme, you always bring in some diversion or some stunt to distract attention. But he got his flags in the wrong order. Remember what he did? He held up one with the letters NDPO on it. Now any fourth grader knows that the newspapers and others have designated the members of this party as NDP. Sir, I saw him hesitate and look at the flag in sort of wonderment. I am sorry he is not here, but perhaps he can be conveyed the message. He finally came up with some devious explanation which did not make too much sense to him, or to us, and we still wondered what the O stood for.

Well, that night the mystery of the O was solved. A trio of hon. members from this side of the House were on television. They talked about many things, particularly the New Democrats. We are delighted they spent so much time giving us the advertising. When asked about a new leader, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) used a delightful term. He said that it did not make much difference who the new leader was—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Oh no, he did not!

Mr. Young: —as long as he was telegenic. And then, of course, there was agreement that they would have to go outside the House to find him. Then they came to the business of programme.

Mr. Sopha: Well, Fisher is coming to lead the hon. member's party.

Mr. Young: Wonderful!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: He is trying to instil some thinking processes into the hon. members of the other parties, Mr. Speaker!

When this group came to programme they admitted that there is not much use yet in exploring the possibility of programme for this party, because, after all, until they get the new leader, it does not make much sense. Then I understood about the mystery of the O. If I could refer to what the hon. member for Essex South said, he, as I read it, said this: "The NDPO must stand," after he waited a moment, "for no damn part of Ontario."

I was shocked at his language, Mr. Speaker, I was shocked. But it explained something. The hon. member for Essex South hesitated before he brought this out, but obviously what happened was, whoever made the flag for him and gave it to him, intended it as a Liberal flag. Those four letters simply stood for "no damn programme for Ontario."

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): An awful big build up for an awful bad let down.

Mr. Young: We have heard from the hon. members on this side of the House, to my right, various criticisms, but they have laid down no guide lines as alternatives to the programme that has been offered from the other side of the House. They did give us this idea of a flag and a flag pole, and I would say this, Mr. Speaker, and through you, sir, to the hon. Prime Minister, that they have urged upon him to set up a flag for Ontario and build the flag poles to fly it from. They have done this in spite of the fact that their party in Ottawa has consistently refused to bring in a distinctive flag for the great realm of Canada, in spite of the fact that they have promised it in election after election.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I notice that the hon.

members in this House have talked about their own ridings. They have outlined the kind of physical features that are there, the industries, the educational institutions, all these things, and then have always said what wonderful people live there. I suppose the stacks of Hansard that go back to the ridings make sure that what is said here is read back in the ridings.

If I could borrow a leaf from the book of the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly), I would simply say that the people of Yorkview just do not need this kind of treatment. They proved their good sense and progressive outlook last September 25. At the south of Yorkview, we have that enlightened territory which consistently sends the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. MacDonald) to this House, and up in the north, right astride the boundary—

Mr. Singer: The hon. member wants to get rid of him, he wants Fisher instead of him.

Mr. Young: That is what the hon. member says.

Mr. Singer: Well that is just what the hon. member said.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): No, that is what you misinterpreted.

Mr. Young: That is what he misinterpreted. Right!

In the north of Yorkview we have a situation where the riding is deeply rooted in the past. We have Pioneer Village run by the Metro conservation authority. Except for people, nothing is allowed in Pioneer Village less than 100 years old. This means, of course, that all rock-ribbed Tories will feel perfectly at home there and we invite them to visit Pioneer Village.

Right next door to Pioneer Village the new York University is being erected; York University will play a great part in the future. The thinking processes that will go on there will generate a great many New Democrats in the days to come.

East of Yorkview is Keele Street and on the west is the Humber River which the Metropolitan conservation authority tells us is fast becoming a polluted sewer because of the neglect of this government.

Within the riding we have some pretty exciting things going on in housing—row housing, garden courts and high rise complexes reaching to the sky. We have the plant that prints Eaton's catalogue and sends it out to eager hands clear across the province.

We have within my riding, too, some streets with pot holes in them. And we have, smack in the middle of the riding and now clawing its way through, Highway 401. I was delighted, Mr. Speaker, to hear the hon. member for Armourdale (Mr. Carton) the other day speak about the need for compensation for the people who are living adjacent to Highway 401 and whose properties are being devalued. Ever since the beginning of that work, some of us have been speaking at meetings, we have been writing, we have been on television urging that the things which were presented in the House the other day should be done. My friend, the hon. member for Downsview has been a part of this process, Mr. Speaker. I take for granted that, because the hon. member for Armourdale has entered this fight, there is some indication from the government benches that something will be done. I hope that this is true.

I think it is a fundamental in any democracy that, when a minority of people suffer from any installation for the benefit of all the people, the minority ought to be compensated for the damage that may be suffered. So I hope it is true that these people, who are going through this period of trial at this time, are going to have the compensation which the province ought to give.

The hon. member for Armourdale outlined some of the methods which some of us have been talking about now for a long time, and that we perhaps would have outlined if it had not been done so ably by him last week. I notice that, as long as it suits the purposes of a government, it is willing to hide behind legislation in order to do nothing; but when that government is determined that something must be done—a way can be found. And so, Mr. Speaker, I hope that way will be found and that justice will be done.

I have no objections to the hon. member for Armourdale getting the credit for the justice. He can come into Yorkview and make the announcement, just so long as we get the justice due the people of that area.

Mr. Speaker, in the amendment to the amendment offered by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) the stress was on the need for action to meet the challenge of the scientific revolution. The government takes the attitude that they are moving to solve our problems. The hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) yesterday assured us that all was well; the government was moving as fast as possible; that the problems presented by automation—and we heard it again this afternoon—were being worked out in this great province. But I would like to tell the hon. members that the future will not judge us by whether or not we moved as fast as we could. The future will judge us as to whether we moved fast enough!

The scientific revolution, as the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) pointed out, will not wait; and we are either going to keep up with it or be swept into the limbo of history. The story of the past is cluttered with great civilizations which could not adapt their social and economic institutions to the changing times fast enough. And they paid the price.

One of the characteristics of this age, Mr. Speaker—one of the devices which enlightened democracies are using to adapt to the scientific revolution—is that more and more people use the instrument of government to achieve social goals which they cannot possibly achieve as individuals. This is not a case of government doing things for people. It is a case of people using the instruments of their own governments to achieve social objectives which they cannot possibly arrive at as individuals. We do this with education, with the post office, with Hydro, with highways, fire protection, police protection and a host of other things—things which a former generation regarded as the sacred prerogative of private enterprise—and fought the idea of people using governments to achieve these objectives.

Around the world every nation of stature except Canada and the United States has used its government to make medical care available, at cost, to its people. We have taken the first step here through our hospital plan. But this government refuses to take the next logical step. It still looks upon medical care as former generations regarded education and hydro.

So we have the illuminating address, well flavoured with OMA statistics, from the hon. member for Scarborough North (Mr. Wells), and the amusing, but none the less sincere, bit from the hon. member for Eglinton the other day. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member knows the type of paper he was quoting. But be that as it may, let me assure him that we all know that there is no plan of any kind anywhere in the world which will have 100 per cent backing of all the people within a democracy. And, having said that, I could, if I wished, quote from other papers to refute what the hon. members said. But I am going to leave it at this: I will say simply to the hon. member for Eglinton that this spring there is an election coming up in Britain. I will wait with interest to see whether the Tory Party in Britain will incorporate into its platform the abolition of the health plan which we were told is so unpopular in that country.

If I read the papers aright, and if they are correct, we are going to have a provincial election in Saskatchewan this year. The Medicare plan there is less than two years old. I wonder if the Conservative Party in Saskatchewan—or the Liberals for that matter, who fought this plan so viciously when it was introduced—will come to the people with the abolition of the Medicare plan. We await these events with a great deal of interest.

We have heard a lot of the matter of Medicare costs. As a matter of fact, experience proves that as the political techniques of the scientific revolution are used more and more, and as the people use their government, where necessary, to achieve a desirable social goal, not only do more people get better service but they get it at much lower costs.

This is illustrated in the instance of car insurance in Saskatchewan, where the public plan pays back to the people of that province the sum of 87 cents out of every dollar it receives in premiums, while private insurance pays out only 60 cents. And the same thing is true of Medicare—public versus private. In this field, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Scarborough West and also the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), the non-profit plans in Canada paid out $89 in benefits out of each $100 collected in premiums, while private plans paid out only $72.

In the light of this, perhaps we can better understand the Freudian slip made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Welch) when he paraphrased the original statement of the hon. Prime Minister on this subject of Medicare. And he said he was glad to see that the hon. Prime Minister was against the system which took everything away from the people and then set up a group of bureaucrats to hand it all back to the same people.

Of course the hon. member was a bit in error here. Because no matter whether the plan is public or private, all cannot possibly be handed back because there are certain legitimate expenses that must be met. And the public plan—no less than the private—could not possibly do that. More than that any kind of a plan must take something from everybody if it is going to hand it back. Both plans must do this. But the basic administration costs of a public plan are less than the costs of a private plan, and so it is that while the public plan will hand more back than the private one, it hands it back to the same people—the same people who paid the premiums.

Private insurance plans not only take more for basic administration, but they hand some of the premium dollar back to different people. The private companies get their cut. This, I think, is a fundamental thing in the difference between the two plans. And this complaint that the public plan would hand the dollars back to the same people who pay the premiums is a rather intriguing one.

You know, future generations will regard, as one of the great jokes of this generation, the present Medicare plan which is being perpetrated upon the people of Ontario. Oh, I know the answers: That the people voted for this government, and they did in large numbers—too large to suit me—but they did. But they certainly voted for this government because they were assured, as far as Medicare was concerned, that the plan was there on the statute books. It was done! And checked off as done! When the people wake up to realize it, there is no difference really. As far as the majority of the people are concerned, they now have the plan they are going to get under the legislation.

The only different thing is that the people who are on welfare, and the indigents, will now have private insurance companies cover their need; and those premiums will be paid by the public authority instead of having welfare costs met by the municipality.

I want to bring to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, a letter which appeared last week in the Toronto Daily Star. It was headed: "Insurance Man Calls Roberts' Plan a Medicare Fraud":

The Ontario Medicare plan is, as you so correctly described it January 24, a plan of semi-care; for this is all it will give. My company has advised me that we agents will be writing it and will get our usual commissions, so I had better not criticize.

This was no threat but merely a matter of mutual conversation. There should be no need to pay more for a full family than $7 a month; and for a single person, not more than $4 a month. This is my estimate for a government plan. But the government knows full well, as do the companies, that it is not possible to give a plan of this kind to the people unless it is compulsory.

As I see it, this government plan for Medicare through the companies is nothing more than a plan of progressive and deliberate cheating people out of great sums of money, amounting to nothing short of fraud.

This government, Mr. Speaker, is evidently not prepared to move with the speed that is needed in the scientific age.

The other day in this House a matter was brought before the hon. members which I had intended to raise but which was done very ably and very well by the hon. member for Parkdale. It is this matter of the slick door-to-door salesmen who are rooking our people of so many dollars. I just brought one letter and I am going to refer to it. It is written by Mr. Ken Millman of 40 Acacia Avenue in Yorkview, and he tells about his contract with one of the agencies mentioned the other day, the Compact Agency of 1871 Avenue Road:

They sold me [he says] a vacuum cleaner and Mr. Klein was the salesman, and the price added up to $225.40—$12.50 per month over 18 months—so the total price finally came out to $245.30.

Of course the gimmick was, as the hon. member for Parkdale pointed out, that if he could produce so many names of people, of his own friends, who would buy, he might get the machine for nothing. But when he sat down to think about it, he realized that he was being taken for a ride, and so he called Mr. Klein and asked that he be let out of the contract. Mr. Klein told him it would cost him $73, to have him come and take the machine back. Finally, he settled for $45, which made a total, with a $20 deposit, of $65.

Now, I bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because it seems to me there is a way by which these people can be curbed. Legislation needs to be introduced in this House to give the victim of the door-to-door salesman at least four days to think the matter over. Legislation which will make it possible that a contract signed in haste by the victim of the door-to-door shyster, will not be valid and binding until four days have passed. That gives the person who has bought the article a chance to sit down and think about it. And then if he calls the salesman within the four-day period, the salesman must come, bring his deposit, and take the machine back provided, of course, the machine is still in good order.

This technique has already been worked out in Britain, it is in the legislative mills there. The Labour Party introduced it into the House, it was referred to the Maloney committee. That committee has now brought it back to the House and it is, as I said, in the mill and we hope it will become legislation. It should also become legislation in the province of Ontario.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word this afternoon about this matter of municipal reorganization. We have a select committee which is working on this job now and I would hope that it would come up with the kind of solutions which are necessary for this day and age. So far the committee, concerned as it is with the legislation dealing with the municipalities, has been changing words and phrases within the existing Acts.

More needs to be done. Out of the work of this committee should come new legislation and new techniques at the municipal level which will bring our whole concept of the municipality into the scientific revolution. I do not want to dwell upon this too long. I would prefer to have the select committee bring in recommendations and then the House can deal with them.

But the hon. member for Oshawa did bring to us an illustration of what we are up against with this problem. He said that the southern part of Pickering township is experiencing a tremendous home building boom and virtually new communities have sprung up in the last few years. The hon. member was right in pressing for regional development and regional planning. In that area we have a regional situation from the boundary of Scarborough right along to Port Hope—and perhaps farther. We have a complex of municipalities in many river valleys, communities of all kinds, and with industries largely based on the motor car. The people are criss-crossing municipal lines as they go to work and as they come back to their homes at night.

When the hon. member for Oshawa, sir, mentioned Pickering township, we have here the illustration of a municipality where a great deal of building, as he says, has been going on, particularly in the south part of that riding.

Bay Ridges is a well-planned community where people like to live. There are there moderately priced homes of the type which ordinarily do not bring in as much tax revenue as the municipality must pay out to provide the services for such an area. And there is little industry to compensate. So it may well be that in that particular township trouble is brewing. Already I have heard mutterings of a secessionist movement among the farmers of Pickering because of the rising tax rates, which inevitably must occur in order to afford services to a subdivision which at first looked like such a great asset to the township.

The Smallwood report points out some of the pressures that are building up within the Metropolitan area. One of the hon. members mentioned this the other day. Right across this province, we see the same thing happening.

So the day is here, sir, when legislation is needed so that we can plan regionally—as so many hon. members on the government side of this House pointed out. And those regional planning areas must be backed up by regional governments which will have power—power to co-ordinate industry, the homes, the playground areas, the smoke abatement, the conservation services; all these things that go into or should go into a modern municipality.

These new areas may or may not correspond to present municipal boundaries. But the day is here, Mr. Speaker, when we have to face this business and face it realistically. Matching this must come the four-year term for elected municipal officials if they are going to plan in a long-term way and if they are going to give efficient administration to the municipalities of the future.

If it is true, as has been said in some quarters, that the terms of reference for the present select committee dealing with The Municipal Act and related Acts are not broad enough, then this House should broaden those terms of reference and should send that committee out to do the kind of job which it must do in order to bring our whole municipal concept into this age of automation.

The final subject I want to deal with, Mr. Speaker, is that of post-secondary education. My colleague, the hon. member for Scarborough West, pointed out the kind of problem we face; he calls it a scientific revolution through which we are passing. He pointed out the almost incredible possibilities we face in the field of production. He showed how the machine is replacing manpower to an almost frightening degree and how technological unemployment is hitting hard at the undereducated and the uneducated, and how a desperate need exists to upgrade our skills and to provide maximum training for the brain power of our nation.

Last week in the Toronto Globe and Mail there appeared an article headed this way:

BOSSES FEAR COMPUTER TAKEOVER

Manitoba managers of national industrial firms are secretly worried that they may be replaced by the computer control in eastern Canada. As a result, 90 Winnipeg executives recently returned to university in a bid to ensure that they are never pushed out of work by an eastern electronic brain.

More interesting, however, is the motivation of the executives who work to establish the four-year course. They took the step because they believe western industry may become completely automated if Manitoba managers do not upgrade their management skills. Western Canadian managers stand in danger of losing their jobs by default if they don't improve their techniques, M. J. Lyons, the association president, Winnipeg branch, said in an interview.

Most western industrial plants are branches of eastern companies so it stands to reason that eastern home offices will not retrain western managers if they find it is more efficient to give orders by Telex and computers.

(Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.)

Now I hold in my hand, instance after instance, Mr. Speaker, where this sort of thing has been done to a greater or lesser degree. I quite realize that what the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Wishart) said this afternoon is correct. Those of us in this group have no fear of automation and we welcome it. But we also say that we ought to have clear in our minds the techniques by which automation, and the whole process that it involves, can be used for social needs to serve society instead of society serving the machine.

Yesterday the hon. Minister of Economics and Development assured us that automation can be a great boon to mankind, and we agree with that. He also gave us a soothing picture of the Ontario economy, and assured us if we would just go out in the tough marketplace and sell, everything was going to be just fine. But it is just not as simple as that. Automation can be a boon only if we have the people to direct it intelligently, and if we build the kind of social relationships so that the machines serve man.

The hon. Minister, I think, and perhaps the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, this afternoon, missed the fundamental point, that in this scientific revolution the development of skill and brain and the lifting of living standards among all the population is at least of equal importance as the flow of goods from the smooth-running, automated machines. Without human development, the material development ultimately goes by the board.

The scientific revolution is demanding that human beings take precedence over machines. In the days ahead, every effort of this civilization must be bent on increasing the human capacity for both production and abundant living. As the machine frees us from unending toil and gives us increasing leisure from its demands, then new horizons emerge, beckoning men to explore the unknown and to live and work on a creative plane that he could not know as long as most of his energies were encompassed in the struggle for sustenance. These are the possibilities.

But the facts today bring us solidly back to earth. We just have not yet begun to think seriously about the place of man in this scientific revolution. We have not tackled in a realistic way the problem of equipping ourselves to handle the forces driving through our economic existence.

And then, coupled with this failure, is a still more serious situation facing us. The high birth rate of the post-war years is now sending a surge of teenagers through our secondary schools and into our universities and technological institutions. All of us have heard, I think, the figures that have been given in the report of the university presidents, first filed in 1962 and then updated in June last year. They point out a significant fact, that by 1970 we are going to have, in the grade 13s of Ontario alone, about 200,000 young people. They also point out that even though very great efforts are made, and even though emergency measures are undertaken, the universities cannot possibly hope to seat more than 85,000 to 90,000 of these young people.

In the technological field the same thing is true. They point out that while we have something over 4,000 students in the technological institutes today, unless we can find places and teachers for 18,000 by 1970 then Canada cannot keep her place among the nations of the world in this technological age.

And in the matter of teachers, the situation is even more desperate. We have, today, in the post-secondary teaching staff, about 2,800 people. The report says that by 1970 we must have 8,300 of these if we are to meet the demands. Dr. Reid, who at that time was the head of the organization of university teachers, said last fall on a CBC programme that even if the programme now under way produces all the PhDs it can, by 1970 we are going to have only one-tenth as many as we need for proper post-secondary teaching.

And then there is the whole matter of research. I think our consciences have been jogged in the events that have happened in the past few days. In this morning's paper we heard something about the "brain drain" from Britain, because of the failure to face up to this whole business of research.

In talking to one of my friends the other day, he pointed out this startling fact: Because of our failure to do the job we ought to be doing, and something of the measure of what ought to be done, he said that the University of Chicago today, with about 8,000 students, has a budget of $60 million, whereas the University of Toronto, with twice as many students, has a budget of $20 million. This, perhaps, shows the distance we have to go to build up the kind of research institutions we must have, not only for the academic field but for the development of industry and the whole industrial and commercial life of this nation.

Mr. Speaker, this is the challenge that we face, and what are we doing about it? In the report of the presidents to which I have referred, the updated report, they say this: Some universities do not now believe that they can expand as quickly as they hoped at the time when the Ontario presidents' first report was submitted to the government. This is understandable, in view of the government's request for slowing down the rate of increase of capital expenditures. In 1963-64 the university received only about 60 per cent of the amount it had requested in capital grants. There is, therefore, a great urgency about providing all the universities, new and old, with a capital fund they need for speedy expansion.

I quite realize that sometimes institutions, even universities, may ask for more money than they can actually expend at the time; but certainly there is something serious here. Particularly so since following this we find a brief presented—which was mentioned in this House yesterday—submitted last December by the Ontario council of university faculty associations.

The brief has charged that the universities, under present financial and other arrangements, are failing to meet their responsibilities to the Ontario economy. They cannot undertake the basic and applied research needed by both industry and government, nor can they supply graduates to meet the need, the brief said. It charged that the universities received only 60 per cent of the money requested from the government. The plain truth is that our universities are good undergraduate teaching institutions, but they are not equipped to do much more than that. Without research, universities are merely glorified secondary schools, the brief said.

Then, to follow this up, is a copy of Varsity News which came to me the other day, and it says this:

Some university extension courses will be offered at Scarborough this year and the college is scheduled to open a year from September. Erindale College will open a year or two later.

Each will begin with fewer than 500 students. These are institutions that were expected to open next fall with about a thousand or so students each.

I know that there is something being done, Mr. Speaker. We welcome the setting up of the special department dealing with university affairs, and we welcome, too, the announcement of a Crown corporation to assist in university financing. These are steps that should have been taken long ago. Actually, if we face up to the whole problem of building for the present generation and the whole problem of research that must be done, then we are facing a capital expenditure of almost $1 billion within the next decade and less.

I do not suppose it is possible for our post-secondary schools to build this fast and certainly, if they could, we could not provide the teaching staff for them. But prior to this kind of capital investment, there has to be real planning done as to where that investment ought to go. In the report of the select committee on manpower training, we have these words:

Especially disturbing is the lack of adequate vocational counselling and the absence of any kind of organized manpower research. Without these services it stands to reason we cannot allocate our funds as wisely as we should and we will not be able to advise and channel students as effectively as we might.

This means simply that we must survey, we must find out, how many teachers are needed, how many social workers, what technical people we ought to have.

In addition to this, we face the whole problem of an awakening world around us. The awakening nations of Africa, other parts of the world, want to send students to us for training. They want us to train their technicians and their professors. They also want us to send some of our professors to set up their educational institutions, as a challenge here which this nation dare not turn down.

(Mr. Speaker resumes the chair.)

If we cannot prove to the awakening world that democracy has within it the strength and the goodwill and the vision to invest sufficient of its resources in this whole field, so that it can welcome those who come to us, and can also share our brains with them, then who can blame them if they turn to the east for the help that the east might well be able to give them?

You see, no longer should we regard education as an expense on the economy. It is an investment, as has been said before in this House, an investment in brains and skill. And if we do not match our investment in the machine with an investment in the brain power and the skill to run the machine, to maintain it, and to replace it as often as it needs to be replaced, then we are going to be in real trouble.

G. T. Galbraith, that oft-quoted man who wrote The Affluent Society, says this:

Now we get the larger part of our industrial growth not from more capital investment in machines but from improvement in man, and improvement brought about by improved men. This process of technological advance has become fairly predictable.

He says that we get from men pretty much what we invest in them. Man has not retreated before the machine; rather the machine has become desperately dependent upon the improvement of man.

Peter Drucker, in his Landmarks of Tomorrow, points this out:

The development of educated people is the most important capital formation today. Their number, quality and utilization, the most meaningful index of the wealth-producing capacity of a country.

Theodore W. Schultz, in his Education and Economic Growth, shows that between 36 and 70 per cent, depending upon the period, of the increase in income in the United States between 1926 and 1957 was due to the increase in the educational level of the labour force.

Edward F. Dennison, of the University of Chicago, points out that each additional year of schooling increases output by about four-and-one-half per cent.

Mr. Speaker, we have done well in our investment in machines, and the time is here when we must work out the techniques by which more and more of the capital investment of this province and of this nation can be channelled into this fundamental business of preparing our people for the scientific revolution. What I am saying is simply that education is not a cost to society, it is an investment in the future; and that investment pays big social dividends. Just as in any sound business.

The capital we plough into it today will be returned with dividends in the days to come. More than that, even with this crash programme which I have outlined, we are providing for only about 20 per cent of the teenagers of the Grade 13 age group. And if we fail here, then I can see the unemployment lines backing up from our university doors, as the young people who are storming those doors are turned away, and as the scientific revolution cannot utilize enough of the untrained and the undertrained.

For this government to say that we are moving on the problem is just not enough. The desperate urgency of the situation has been underlined by the brief from which I have just quoted. And I want to emphasize another aspect of that brief.

I am quoting from the Toronto Globe and Mail of last week:

Some of the main criticisms are aimed at the government's university advisory committee headed by Leslie Frost, former Prime Minister of Ontario and MPP for Victoria.

And on Mr. Frost's committee the teachers' brief said: "With all due respect we observe that the members of the advisory committee cannot be expected to have an intimate knowledge of university matters since none of them has had the experience as a university teacher or administrator. And they are all busy men and have many other responsibilities both public and private. Only when the provincial government is in a position to ask the right questions about university matters in general, and about specific institutions, can it allocate financial support in such a way as to produce the greatest return to the province at large.

Mr. Speaker, this is a serious charge, and the incredible thing that it underlines is that the advisory committee is headed by the very man who sat as the head of this government while the present crisis was building up and who did little to lay a sound basis for its solution. In the light of all the evidence today, the chairman of the committee should be replaced by someone who has demonstrated his competence and his genuine interest in this field. And the committee should be strengthened by the addition of other similar people.

The crisis today will not wait for its solution on a government which is moving only as fast as it can; and it cannot be met by the four to five per cent of our national income that is going into this business of education. Not while other countries of the world—and some of them are communist countries—are putting up to 10 and 12 per cent of their national incomes into education. We must work out the techniques to meet the needs of our young people in our own homes and in our own neighbourhoods.

Yes, and we must meet the needs of the emerging nations which are turning to us for help and will turn to us increasingly if that help is available. We must prove to them that our democracy can muster the resources to make the maximum utilization of brain and skill in our nation, sir, and that it can use the machine to raise living standards and abolish poverty and disease around the world in the days ahead.

Some time ago I had the privilege of visiting the University of Upsala in Sweden. In that university there are 10,000 students, 5,000 of them living in accommodation on the campus. Not one of those students pays tuition and three-quarters of them have bursaries and scholarships, both from public and private sources, which pay for their full board and lodging.

When one of the members of our group asked the question: How can a little country like Sweden afford this kind of thing, the guide turned to us and said: How can your country afford not to do it? He pointed out that in his country they look upon investment in the brains and the skill of the young people as the most important capital investment that the nation is undertaking. Perhaps this is one of the reasons why Sweden has taken second place both in the standard of living, the average standard of living and in per capita productivity in the world.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we in this group have outlined why we feel that the measures proposed by this government are inadequate to meet the challenge of the scientific revolution through which we are passing. We have indicated some of the action which is needed to meet the problems of the age of automation and of the atom. We have also indicated that while the government is moving along some of the lines needed, we just do not consider that it is moving rapidly enough or with sufficient vision for this day and age.

They are not moving rapidly enough to overcome past neglect and to salvage the wasting talents of the rising generation. If I could urge again the new hon. members who have demonstrated something of the vision and enthusiasm in this House, that they push this government. History will not wait for the leisurely pace of this government. More vision and more action is needed, Mr. Speaker, if we are to meet the responsibilities laid upon us by the fast-moving technology of the last half of this century.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, we have arrived at the penultimate stage of this debate and my hon. colleagues—that is a good word, Mr. Speaker, penultimate.

An hon. member: What does it mean?

Mr. Sopha: The one before the end.

My hon. colleagues have done me an honour and conferred upon me a privilege in asking me to sum up the views of this group in the House before the hon. leader of the government (Mr. Robarts), I suppose tomorrow, takes the opportunity to celebrate, as I expect him to do, the events of September 25.

Your Honour, since the debate began I have listened to the many compliments that have been paid you. Some of them have been effusive, exaggerated in such a way that sometimes I have hardly been able to recognize you for the man I have known for five years. All of them, indeed, have been warm. I do not wish to indulge in the repetitive, but my conscience would not let me sleep this night if I did not take the opportunity, sir, to add to what has been said by extending to you my best wishes for the continued able and competent carrying out of your very difficult duties.

A year ago, Mr. Speaker, I took the opportunity to say something about the history of your office. Like the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Grossman), I am not one of those who reads past speeches so I will not engage in repetition at this time by referring to anything I said at that time.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): That must have been a good speech I made.

Mr. Sopha: But I want to express to you, sir, a word of caution at this time; for there are dangers in your office, grave dangers. You are the arbiter of the House and you have to exercise an eternal need to be vigilant for the perpetuation of the historic rights of all members, and particularly the rights of the members of the Opposition; for it has been said, sir, Parliament exists for the Opposition.

There are difficulties in a House where there is an environment of an overwhelming imbalance of power in favour of one party. I illustrate the danger, sir, by referring you to what is historical fact. Indeed, it is historical fact within the memories of some hon. members who still sit in the House. It is not many years ago, Your Honour, when an event occurred in this House which I venture to think was unprecedented in the history of British parliamentary institutions.

Back in that day, in 1947, a "murder" took place in this House. I put quotation marks around that, that word "murder". It was a "murder", Mr. Speaker, when a Minister of the Crown, who sat over there not far away from where the hon. Minister of Health (Mr.

Dymond) now sits—almost as close as Ruby was to Oswald—got up in the House and he indulged himself in the dramatic and unusual, in that he took the opportunity to publicly humiliate the Speaker. And after that humiliation of the Speaker, the Speaker summoned his Deputy, he left the House and that Speaker never returned to the Throne.

It was said he would not even give up the togs that you wear. They had to drag some up the following day when another Speaker was nominated to occupy that honoured position. What was the matter of high policy, sir, that led that Minister of the Crown—in fact, he was a crown prince of that day; we do not appear to have a crown prince any more here, but he was the crown prince at that moment—what was the matter of high policy that led him to humiliate the Speaker? Hon. members will be very anxious for me to say, to tell them, what it was. The matter of policy was that the Speaker failed to accord to the Minister sufficient or adequate seats in the Speaker's gallery to certain of his friends, he did not pass out the tickets with sufficient alacrity and eagerness.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Shame on him!

Mr. Sopha: Shame on him is right. And who were the friends, you might be interested to know? The friends were certain Cabinet Ministers of the then Liberal government at Ottawa.

So, sir, let me say to you in closing off this portion of my remarks, that I do not expect that to happen again, in fact we will be vigilant to see that it does not. And if, Mr. Speaker, you ever find that the pressures become too great and seem to be insurmountable, because you are in some way the victim or the recipient of the pressures of a party that has an overwhelming number of members, then, sir, I urge upon you that you come to us and we will give you succour.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The law of Killaloe is dead.

Mr. Sopha: One matter about the procedure of the House—and I want to take an early opportunity to advert to it—is the practice that goes on around here, if you will permit me to descend into the vernacular, a practice that gives me a perfect pain, and that is the matter of questions. In my humble opinion, sir, this business of having to submit to you before twelve of the clock the question that we would like to ask a Minister of the Crown, presumably to get his approval to answer it in the ensuing session at three o'clock that day, is infantile in the extreme. And I ask, rhetorically: Is it founded on the principle, or the idea, that these hon. Ministers do not know enough about the running of their own departments that they have to have notice of the question so that they can summon the civil servants and ask them to help them out?

You know, the civil servants, whom the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts), the other day, called the bureaucrats—a loaded word—"bureaucrats," another word that was going out of style. But is that the inarticulated major premise? Is that the unstated major premise that the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton), for example, or the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), or my friend the hon. Minister of Health, does not know enough about his department that he has to have three hours' notice so as to be able to answer a question?

I say to you, sir, that, comparatively speaking, they are paid well enough to know something about the business they administer. They are high in the organization-man type of pay scale. But I would hope—and I am not going out of my way to butter up the hon. Prime Minister, he knows I do not go out of my way to butter him up—I am seeking now to suggest to him, and I know he is a man who is conscious of the development of Parliament and to make it a living and vibrant thing, that he might look into the possibility of the installation of a question period here, as they have in Ottawa. You know, we are not guided by the Ottawa precedent, we go to Westminster. But at Ottawa, I am told, this question period is a very telling thing.

It goes on for an hour; in fact the Speaker was complaining not too long ago that it went on too long; but it is a very enervating exercise and it gives the opportunity for the public, as well as the members, sir, to be informed on matters that are of immediate moment. Because, after all, that is what the questions are; they usually arise out of matters that one has seen in the press, or matters that have occurred very recently.

And finally, on this score, I cannot resist the temptation to say, by way of underscoring what the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) referred to the other day, that it really shocks me that, even with all the notice to the question, hon. Minister after hon. Minister will get up and read the answer to the simplest of them; they have to read the answer. He has had three hours to prepare his answer, to inform himself, and then he has to get up and, as if conned by rote, he has to read the answer. A notable exception to that I notice is the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), and I accord him my respect in this.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): We like to make it clear for the hon. member for Sudbury; that is why we do it.

Mr. Sopha: Well, it would ill behoove me at this time—I felt to review, as so many hon. members have taken the opportunity to do, the certain events that occurred in this province on September 25; and I do not intend to do that, except to make the comment that, in the last stages of the campaign, when my five-year-old daughter said that she liked Mr. Roberts, I knew we were beaten. In the same way, the converse of that, in a previous election campaign in which I was involved in a little way, I made a little contribution, I knew that we had won because my same five-year-old said to me one night, sir, after the CBC news was over and a certain political figure came on the screen: "Daddy, we don't like Mr. Diefenbaker, do we?" I hasten to assure hon. members that I did not in any way brainwash her.

But the election on September 25 did not solve a single problem in this province, not a single problem. An exercise, Your Honour, in arithmetic; that is all it was. An exercise in arithmetic.

Mr. MacDonald: It depends on your vantage point.

Mr. Sopha: We come back here and we face the same personages, the same faces that we faced when the last Legislature was dissolved.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, I am not looking that way. I am looking across the way here. We face the same old faces; and those problems we deal with in our amendment will get worse; they will become aggravated in the next four or five years.

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): The hon. member will have them for ten years.

Mr. Sopha: Well, on the question of the personnel, we have had a little game of musical chairs. We see one or two changes in Cabinet portfolios; we see the hon. Prime Minister is starting out to build an empire for the hon. Minister—what is he Minister of—of Energy Resources (Mr. Simonett).

One thing about this House, you know, Mr. Speaker, is that one cannot keep up with the names of the department. They keep changing from week to week, sir. We see the Minister of Reform Institutions is switched to another department. We see a newcomer in the person of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall), since "Rapid" Robert has gone on to greater things downtown. But the rest is just about the same, and I imagine the hon. Prime Minister would like to make some changes.

When he is indulging in Cabinet-making, that very fine art of finishing carpentry, I doubt very much if he will call me up at the King Edward Hotel and say, "What is your view on it?" I doubt it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: But, within the recesses of my cranium, I imagine there are two or three changes he would like to make. He would like to send the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) farther into the bush.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Nonsense! Absolute nonsense!

Mr. Sopha: There are one or two changes in the second row and—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Eh bien! Je sens que le Premier Ministre désirerais remplacer le Ministre Canadien-français par le député de Stormont (Mr. Guindon).

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I do not know whether the hon. member will thank me for that or not.

Well, sir, I looked at, and looked at again, the amendment put in by the party to the left, and I suppose we are going to support it. I have not quite made up my own mind yet, but I would think we are going to support it. After all, what is it but a rewriting, a rephrasing, a change of language, the imposition of semicolon and synonym to what we said in ours.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: That word was synonym. Well that is what it is, it is a rephrasal of what we said.

Really I do not want to indulge in semantics or adventure into sophistry or pedagogy, but the thought occurs to me that so many references in it to the technological and scientific evolution are made that you would think—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. member for Simcoe East if he maintains a polite silence and listens to what I have to say, by the time the clock comes around to six o'clock he is going to find that he is better informed.

The thought occurred to me that our hon. friends to the left did not invent the scientific or technological revolution. I think it started in the 18th century, with the invention of the steam engine and other scientific developments. Their amendment seems to say that it is something new and startling that has descended upon us, which of course, is not in accord with historical fact. But we are going to support it when the time comes that it is called.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): The hon. member suffers the same complacency as the government I see.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: I said the election solved nothing. The puck, so to speak, is rolling for the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member may think so, we do not.

Mr. Sopha: But on the other hand, when I adverted to the fact that the same personnel were across the way, on the other hand we have, especially here and down in the other corner of the chamber—we have some very bright, alert, agile and able new faces to whom I might, sir, I might say in contrast to the past do not indulge themselves in the banal politics of rhetoric to which we have become accustomed.

Sir, somebody called me a veteran member of the Legislature. I doubt that I am that, but I can recall in yesteryear that we had to listen by the hour as member after member got up in the Throne Speech debate and indulged himself in the most exaggerated phrase and comment about the then leader of the government. Somehow or other they do not do that about this leader of the government.

I would not like to single any one of them out for special mention, but I feel obliged to say to the hon. member for Russell (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) that when we listened to his contribution the other day, all of us on this side felt what a refreshing change it was to the contribution of his predecessor. In that regard, I can go on and say to him that so far as the former member for Russell was concerned, that any change was for the better.

An hon. member: He was a convert from Liberalism.

Mr. MacDonald: That was their problem, and they took it with them.

Mr. Sopha: Now the debate, sir, is about this very interesting document. I have read and reread it on a number of occasions, and as our amendment attempts to say, and I put it to you, Your Honour, knowing that often you agree with me when there is doubt, that most of its phraseology and choice of words, I wonder, sometimes wonder, Your Honour, how this document is written. I have come to the irresistible conclusion that it is written through the mechanics that the hon. Prime Minister sends it around to each of 22 departments and says will you put in a paragraph; and then the finished document comes back and that is what is put into the lips of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member is quite wrong.

Mr. Sopha: But as our amendment says, it is hollow and empty and these are adequate words to describe it—and nobody would accuse me of too great exaggeration. It is typical, I suppose, of a post-election document of this kind. Now we, sir, have time to advert to one part of it. That part is to be found on page four of the copy I have. I read these sentences to you, sir, for the contemplation of the hon. members.

We will resist attempts to divide us through economic competition among the provinces. The fragmentation of the Canadian market by preferential price treatment policies at the provincial level will render all provinces less competitive both at home and abroad.

Of course, sir, that is nothing short of a warning to Quebec. That is why it is in the document; it is a warning to the province of Quebec.

I say to the hon. Prime Minister that instead of putting that in the Speech from the Throne, he might better use his time in telling us whether out of the many conferences and discussions that he has had in recent months with the hon. Premier of Quebec, Mr. Lesage, has he discussed these problems?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The hon. member should read the papers.

Mr. Sopha: Has he taken the opportunity to say to the Premier of Quebec: We are concerned about some of your economic devices; we are concerned about you using hydro to give preferential price treatment; we are concerned about you trying to win industry to come into Quebec and locate there?

I say to the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, would he dare to stand on the floor of the Legislature and tell us and tell the people of the Ontario, that if he had the opportunity to invite an industry to locate in Ontario, would he not do everything in his power to do so?

Mr. Letherby: I would hope so.

Mr. Sopha: I would think so, says the hon. member for Simcoe East.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Do not worry!

Mr. Sopha: Yes, who always speaks for the government.

Mr. Letherby: That is for sure.

Mr. Sopha: Of course he would. Of course he would, and he would be ashamed to say on a public platform or elsewhere that he would not. But why the veiled threat to Quebec in the Speech from the Throne—"We will resist attempts to divide us through economic competition among the provinces"? What does it mean? And how will they resist it?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: All the provinces of Canada should be joined together.

Mr. Sopha: Short of war on Quebec—are we coming to that?

An hon. member: By taking away the ammunition.

Mr. Sopha: How will they resist it? Well the Throne debate has come and gone and, as I said, we are at the latter stages and have not heard how we are going to resist these attempts. And all Quebec is saying, sir, in the words of Kipling:

Daughter am I in my mother's house,
But mistress in my own.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: You bet!

Mr. Sopha: To paraphrase, that is all Quebec is saying. Quebec is saying that, in the economic development of this country, we have got out of the main stream of expansion; we have lagged behind. You, Ontario, you are one of the—you are the most wealthy, most populous, most industrialized province. And, as we look around our own house, we discover that we have not had this same measure of development as you have had.

And now Quebec is saying to the rest of the nation: "We are going to be mistress in our own house; we are going to take the steps that are necessary to bring about, in the earliest possible time, the economic advancement and industrial manufacture and natural resource development of this province." And who, as a resident of Ontario, can complain? And if the hon. Minister of Mines sits up there and mutters, as he is inclined to do—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The hon. member knows why Ontario is leading Canada—

Mr. Sopha: It is not leading Canada in mineral production.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Oh, yes it is.

Mr. Sopha: Not in mineral production—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Sopha: Indeed, we have not had a new mineral find in Ontario since Manitouwadge in 1954. That was the last one.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): You will get some, he says, in the fullness of time.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is out digging.

Mr. Sopha: But Quebec, in very recent times, has had the Mattagami development and now has the Senneterre, and they have had increased activity around Val D'Or and Bourlamaque, and there is nothing in Ontario to compare with that. But I am going to come to that later.

Of course, we got a little enlightenment in the Throne debate about the meaning of those words that I read from page 4, and let me just repeat what they say:

We will resist attempts to divide us through economic competition among the provinces.

And startling words they were; indeed, they were startling. And the House missed the import of them. I listened to this speech being made, and I thought to myself that it was a speech that could have been made 50 or 70 years ago. It was out of joint with the times. It was very significant in that it showed the type of thinking that we have to contend with in this province at this time.

And one hon. member says this:

But today there is a movement afoot to break the great experiment in nation building.

I say nation building in the present sense because Canada, we hope, will always be building and growing. Unfortunately for the common good some think they can do better alone. This is an approach in direct opposition to the present turn of events.

Is he serious? Is this hon. speaker serious? Does he really mean that? That there is any concerted or important attempt in the Canada of 1964 to break our nation, as a nation? I would think that a statement like that should have been right across the headlines of the Toronto Telegram and the Toronto Daily Star the night of the afternoon on which that speech was made.

Mr. Letherby: They missed it.

Mr. Sopha: Let me go on. He says:

In Canada the spirit of one nation, I believe, is on the wane. At the moment we are not united to meet the challenges of the world; divisive forces are at work. These forces are greater than one thinks.

I have felt and I am sure that many others here in a like manner assumed that the two-nation principle, or separatist principle, was the figment of a small minority's imagination, or possibly newspaper sensationalism.

Well, that is a serious charge to make against the press.

Then hearken to this, listen to what he says then:

Mr. Speaker, on this point I have changed my mind. This change has come about because of events in the past few weeks. I am not thinking of the theft of arms in Quebec, or the increase in the guard around armouries, or Mr. Caouette's demands emphasized by some sort of a bank; but because of information received of a very startling nature; information that has great significance for the province of Ontario. I hope to convey this to the House in the next few minutes.

Now let me go back: "These forces," he says, "are greater than one thinks."

That is, the forces that would break our nation and render it asunder in the way that the American union one time was attempted to be rendered asunder by dissidence in the southern part of the country and over which they had one of the most bloody holocausts in human history.

Well, that is what an hon. member of this House thinks. He thinks that Confederation, and the idea of the people in 1864—who sat down a hundred years ago, sir, this year, at Charlottetown and Quebec and they founded a nation here, this hon. member thinks that because something is going on in Quebec and some elements are very sensationalist and very articulate that we are on the verge of having it destroyed.

To descend into the vernacular, Mr. Speaker, I am one that cannot buy it. I cannot buy a proposition such as that, startling in its import, in its end result. Incidentally, the reason he gave, that hon. member, for the serious results and the divisive influences was because Quebec Hydro was giving some industry a preferential hydro rate in Quebec, and has apparently attracted that industry to locate there though we were not at all enlightened as to what the nature of the industry was.

However, the hon. member who made those remarks in this House is not alone. There are others in this country who indulge themselves in the same type of thing. I refer to a letter published not too long ago in the Toronto Globe and Mail. It was signed by three people who identified themselves with the University of Toronto. Unfortunately they did not say whether they were students or members of the faculty. I want to read it into the record; maybe somebody will look at these remarks at some future time. These three students say:

We were struck by the enthusiastic comments regarding the birthday of John A. Macdonald, hailed as statesman and nation-builder. Is this so? If a nation is defined as the will to be a nation based upon a conscious unity of spirit, can one call this country a nation?

Can one call this country a nation? Confederation has not produced a nation. Indeed, it could not since it ran counter to the natural development of North America as a geographic and economic entity.

The Macdonald entourage were reactionaries in the North American scene. They perpetuated the existence of British North America as a gathering basin of disgruntled ex-Europeans who could not integrate into the socio-economic pattern of the United States, e.g., the Loyalists.

Confederation also ensured the continued existence of a French-Canadian reservation, a fatal development in view of the desirability of cultivating a unity of purpose only possible on the basis of a North American political unit.

Confederation was not a popular movement, it was an anachronistic effort to forestall American expansionism facilitated by British withdrawal. In view of this, it does not seem strange that Mr. Macdonald became rather loose with the bottle.

It is signed by three individuals.

In a day and age in which which we are paying $100 million—is that the amount, $100 million?—towards our universities, it makes one wonder whether our money is well spent.

In other words, what these three students, who are the beneficiaries of the $100 million which we vote in this Legislature, at least part of it, are saying is that our country was the product of the thinking of reactionaries; so he typified Sir John A. Macdonald and Blake and Brown and Sir Georges Etienne Cartier and Langevin, and the rest of them. And he said, in other words, that we were the result of a mistake.

Well, two or three days later Edwin C. Guillet, who at one time occupied the office of Ontario historian, replied to this letter, calling it “a curious production,” which indeed it was. He said this—I will read one sentence, or perhaps I will read two:

What a pity John A. Macdonald hadn't their hindsight along with his own astuteness. He could then have left the isolated portions of the present Dominion go their own way until they were gobbled up piecemeal by the United States. History, after all, is what happened, not what a few people a century or so later would have liked to have happened.

Well, that is the role I am seeking in such a limited way—and no one is more conscious than myself of my own limitations—but that is the role I am seeking to play when I use the time of the House at this time to reflect upon what happened 100 years ago at Charlottetown and Quebec, and to determine whether this experiment in the formation of a nation after all was worth it.

Of course, my main theme, to which I return, is that in Ontario, as elsewhere in Canada, there are many examples of extremism—extreme comments from English Canadians directed at our French cousins or brothers, as you will—that only serve to exacerbate the situation, as I believe that statement on page four of the Throne Speech exacerbates what should be approached in a moderate fashion.

I give you the very superb example of that, in an article, or a column I guess it is, in the Toronto Telegram. I do not read the Toronto Telegram as much as I should. But a column is given to one—Gladys Taylor is her name—and apparently she writes in the Toronto Telegram from time to time. She refers to the recent events in Quebec, which involve the theft of arms from the armouries, as well as other examples of extremism. She says this:

To the English Canadians laws are made to be kept. To the French Canadians they are made to be broken.

Do you hear that? Do you hearken to that? What does the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) think of that statement? What does the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) think, and how does it fit with my colleague from Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers) and so too the hon. member for Stormont?

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. member not ignore it instead of stirring up dissension even further?

Mr. Sopha: I cannot ignore it because this is the type of thing that is gobbled up nowadays. It is the product of people who indulge themselves in the grossest form of extremism.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, that is a good phrase.

Mr. Sopha: It is the type of thing that, if you ignore it, just will not go away. Let me go on and read another, put it in the record. Let me read another one.

In Quebec it is literally true that no one feels guilty about breaking the law, only at getting caught at it.

Mr. Letherby: Who said that?

Mr. Sopha: Well, I certainly did not say it. The hon. member for Simcoe East gets on to me not to talk about things that the government—

Mr. Letherby: You are condemning the government for that statement.

Mr. Sopha: I certainly did not, and I might say I certainly never intended to convey that meaning in the slightest way. And I must say that gives an illustration of the feeling I have often had about the hon. member for Simcoe East, one of wonderment whether he has as much inside his head as he has on top of it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I do not intend to apologize for this. I do not intend to apologize for it. I do not think there is a subject, that one could exercise his time or ask the indulgence of the House, of greater importance at this particular time than to discuss the meaning, the foundation of our confederation when it is under review, and when the country is in some sort of crisis about it, and when you have people going around like this Mrs. Taylor, saying the extreme things that she says.

In that regard, I noticed a recent publication of this government—if my friend wants me to say something about the government—that said that prejudice is a vagrant opinion without visible means of support. Those are very opportune and very germane words.

However, Mr. Speaker, I notice my hon. friend from York South used part of his time, after he got finished with the statement of claim, to attempt to become a statesman, because he read at great length from something said by George Brown at the Confederation debates. I have the feeling about him, that if he is seeking to become a statesman then he is a bit too late at this time; and in that way I got the impression that George Brown and Sir John A. Macdonald were something of a recent discovery by my hon. friend from York South.

Here is the thing put in terms of government, and put in terms of our problem, and I will get down to it. As I see it from our problem, and I have the sympathetic ear of the hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, because I noticed he was saying something about this in New York to our American cousins yesterday—or maybe they were Canadians who live in New York. Here is our problem: The statute under which we exercise our powers, The British North America Act, in section 92 of it—we have been living with that document for 97 years and I would not need to make much of an argument, and I would not need to call upon the constitutional lawyers to support me to say to you, sir, that the document is out of date.

Again I say this is the anniversary year of the Quebec conference where the 72 resolutions were formed, or were presented or were created, which later on became the basis of The British North America Act. Perhaps it would not be too much out of line if I suggested that it would be a good year to convene another conference at both Charlottetown and Quebec, so that all of the leaders of all of the governments of the provinces could sit down there and finally resolve our problem about the distribution of legislative powers; because that is the thing that bothers them.

The reason I used his time, I say to the hon. member for Simcoe East, is because I wanted to provide some of the background and to show that we have our difficulties. We have our difficulties about coming to an accommodation with French Canada about this. But not many years, sir, are going to go past until we are going to have a—have to have—a hard and searching look at the division of powers in sections 91 and 92 of The British North America Act and make up our mind in this country what are going to be the respective responsibilities of the various levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal.

The long and short of it, of course, is that the provinces now have responsibilities of a magnitude, and especially a fiscal magnitude, that Macdonald and Cartier and Brown and Blake and Howe and Tupper and the rest of them whose pictures are out there in the hallway—that they would never have dreamed we would have. They thought of the provinces as being responsible only for matters of a purely local and private nature, and all of the major powers and responsibilities would be exercised by the strong central government.

Of course, why did they want a strong central government? In a word they wanted a strong central government because of the events that had taken place in the United States between the years 1860 and 1864 when brother took up arms against brother, and cousin against cousin, on the issue of states' rights. They said we will not have anything like that in this country.

Look at education! Education which was the little red schoolhouse of the member for Victoria, the predecessor of the present one—the little red schoolhouse that was the common thing in 1867—look how it has expanded now into the great edifice of mortar and bricks and gymnasias and parking garages and everything else that is connected with it.

The automobile—the automobile was never even dreamed of by Macdonald and his confreres; and the great superhighways that are required to carry them which are the responsibility of this government.

What do they tell us? That the projection of highway needs—the provision in the next 20 years that are now on the drawing boards they tell us that something like $6 billion, is it?—will be required to build them.

Now, in another sphere, in another sphere, we are more of our brother's keeper than Macdonald was. That is to say that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Welch) will forgive me if I venture into something he raised and the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) and my hon. friend from Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer), when I say that we are more of our brother's keeper than Macdonald was; and I say that in terms of our social welfare legislation now we love our brother more in the Christian sense. We love him in the Christian sense, that is so if he suffers dislocation, if he suffers poverty, if he suffers disease or any of the other human afflictions, then the state moves to look after him. And that's another example of the expense that descends upon provincial governments.

Then another fact is—another salient fact apart from this division of powers which is out of joint—another very salient fact that cannot escape attention, is that the federal and provincial governments trespass with abandon upon each other's fields. I have referred to this before. Now the federal government is in the field of education. Now they are making grants to universities. Education used to be the preserve entirely of the provinces.

Municipal affairs—when that bill came before the House of Commons, how well it delineated the difference in the points of view of the constitution between the Premier of this province and the Premier of Quebec. Forgive me, if I refer to it. The Premier of Quebec—when the subject was mooted and the federal government said we will make loans—up to $400 million, was it?—the Premier of Quebec said: Oh, no, you will not, you will not in Quebec because municipalities are an exclusive matter of provincial jurisdiction and you will not trespass into our province in something that's given to us under section 92 of the Act.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario, what did he say?

An hon. member: He objected!

Mr. Sopha: He was not concerned, he was not concerned about any high-minded appraisal of the division of legislative powers. No, the Premier of Ontario said he favours the small municipalities at the expense of the big ones, or the big ones at the expense of the small ones—I forget which—but he said one of the two.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member does not remember what I said.

Mr. Sopha: He said one of the two. Oh, yes, sir, he said one of the two. But unlike the Premier of Quebec, he was not concerned about an invasion of provincial autonomy. Oh, no!

Of course, that has been going—

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Does the hon. member want him to behave like the Premier of Quebec?

Mr. Sopha: I will get finished if the hon. member will just permit me.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: That has been going on around here for quite a period of time. We called attention to it before. The trespass of the provincial government into matters of exclusive federal concern. Emergency measures, which under section 91 is a matter of exclusive federal jurisdiction, I suppose under the rubric and head of national defence. Well, I give my opinion as a lawyer and you can have it free.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: As it is. As it is.

It would not stretch credulity if the government said to the Pearson government tomorrow or next week: Mr. Pearson, we are not having anything more to do with emergency measures. That is your responsibility under national defence and you look after it, and then in a few weeks time, sir, you would not have to ask us to vote that $400,000 that we are being asked to vote for emergency measures.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: But we would have no emergency organization.

Mr. Sopha: How is the hon. Prime Minister entitled to say that?

Mr. Yakabuski: Did Sudbury make use of that loan?

Mr. Sopha: Why is the hon. Prime Minister entitled to say that if he left it entirely to the federal government?

Well, let me just end the illustration by referring to Moosonee. We should acquaint the new hon. members who come here about Moosonee, and all the years of travail and experiment and the wastage of money. They attempted to develop an ocean-going port at Moosonee, and if hon. members looked in section 91 of The British North America Act, then they would see that navigation and shipping is a head of exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government. But for a good many years this government, well, to resort to the graphic, they poured money into the Moose River at Moosonee in an endeavour, a futile one, to determine whether an ocean port could be developed there. And finally, finally—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: Will the hon. Minister kindly stop muttering.

Finally it was the Diefenbaker government that sent a report down to this government, and said: Look, do not tell anybody, do not tell anybody, but it is infeasible from an engineering point of view to build a port at Moosonee. The Moose River just brings too much effluvium—effluvium, that is a good word, I say to the hon. member for Simcoe East.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: It just brings too much silt down to where it empties into James Bay in order to make the development of a port there feasible. I used to say, may I make this personal and reflective and anecdotal reference, that I used to look over at the predecessor of the person who leads the government now, the esteemed hon. gentleman who leads the government now, and it was he that wanted the ocean port, it was his predecessor. I used to look over at him, and finally one day I summoned up courage and I said to him, you know you remind me of Mary Tudor. Mary Tudor was the one, the third of the Tudors, who said: When I die you will find Calais written on my heart. I said, when you die they are going to find Moosonee written on yours.

Well, finally, in this vexing problem, and I do not care what ribaldry, I really do not care what ribaldry this evokes, because these are important things, they need to be said in this year 1964.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I have to do the best I can in that regard. These are important things.

There are two or three heads of jurisdiction that we might well give the federal government. Let us get out of them entirely. I have not got time to go into them in detail, but one is jurisdiction, sir, over insurance and trust companies which would seem to fit, being part and parcel of money and banking—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, if I may, we obviously will not finish this debate tonight. I am very interested in the hon. member's remarks in this area and if he would care to adjourn the debate I will call it again and he can complete his remarks some other time.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I will be very grateful to the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Sopha moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) will introduce the budget, and if there is any time left after that we will either go to the order paper or we might come back to this debate. I just do not know what time will be available.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Wednesday, February 12, 1964

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Wednesday, February 12, 1964

Budget Address, Mr. Allan	571
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Whicher, agreed to	585
Gasoline Tax Act, bill to amend, Mr. Allan, first reading	585
Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, bill to amend, Mr. Allan, first reading	585
Killarney Recreational Reserve Act, 1962-1963, bill to amend, Mr. Roberts, second reading	585
Trees Act, bill to amend, Mr. Roberts, second reading	585
Crown Timber Act, bill to amend, Mr. Roberts, second reading	585
Game and Fish Act, 1961-1962, bill to amend, Mr. Roberts, second reading	585
Department of Agriculture Act, bill to amend, Mr. Stewart, second reading	586
Board of education of the city of London, bill respecting, Mr. Cowling, second reading ..	586
Town of Smith's Falls, bill respecting, Mr. Gomme, second reading	586
Riverdale Hospital, bill respecting, Mr. Cowling, second reading	592
City of Barrie, bill respecting, Mr. Evans, second reading	592
W. F. Thomas Foundation, bill respecting, Mr. McNeil, second reading	592
City of Peterborough, bill respecting, Mr. Cowling, second reading	592
Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act, bill to amend, reported	592
Magistrates Act, bill to amend, reported	593
Department of Travel and Publicity Act, bill to amend, reported	593
Territorial Division Act, bill to amend, reported	593
City of Owen Sound, bill respecting, reported	593
Huron College, bill respecting, reported	593
Ross Memorial Hospital, bill respecting, reported	593
Masonic Foundation of Ontario, bill to incorporate, reported	593
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Cass, agreed to	593
Appendix I	594

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1964

The House met at 3.00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We welcome to the Legislature today in the Speaker's gallery and the west gallery, a group of 35 members of the provincial affairs committee of the London Chamber of Commerce.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have messages from the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: W. Earl Rowe, the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1965, and recommends them to the legislative assembly, Toronto, February 12, 1964.

And the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain additional sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1965, and recommends them to the legislative assembly, Toronto, February 12, 1964.

Orders of the day.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

BUDGET ADDRESS

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my Budget statement, I would like to welcome in the House today a former Provincial Treasurer, Hon. Leslie M. Frost. I would like also to make mention of the total overall of the budgets that were presented to this House by Mr. Frost, to give you some indication of the growth and expansion of this province. I believe during his many years as Provincial Treasurer the total amount of his budgets amounted to $4,383,000,000 and in the short time that I have been Provincial Treasurer—including the budget that I will present today—such will amount to $6,288,000,000.

I would like also to mention our delight in having the son of a former Provincial Treasurer in this House, the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop). His father was Treasurer of this province from 1930 until his death in 1934. It is a very great pleasure to have his son present as a member of this legislature.

Before commencing my remarks on the Budget, I should like to express my deep regrets at the passing during the year of one of my distinguished predecessors in the office of Treasurer of Ontario, Colonel William H. Price. He was a member of this House from 1921 to 1937. He served as Attorney General for eight years, and was Treasurer of Ontario from 1923 to 1926. Colonel Price will be remembered for his ability, his devotion to duty and his consuming interest in the public affairs of this province.

The Budget which I am placing before the House this afternoon presents a clear picture of the present financial position of the province and the plans of the government for the coming fiscal year. It is firmly based on a realistic assessment of our existing circumstances and a full appreciation of the future needs and aspirations of our people. The allocation of public funds as projected in this Budget will enable the government to play its essential role in the realization of our full potential for the advancement of Ontario and its people.

No one can doubt Ontario's great capacity for future development. It is rich in resources and enjoys many natural advantages and a wide measure of prosperity. In large part, our present prosperity stems from the adoption of far-sighted policies and the prudent allocation of public funds in the past. This government has provided huge sums for basic services such as education, health, highways and roads, and for the protection and development of our vast natural resources. We have thereby given our people and our industries the services they require to benefit fully from the opportunities which abound in this province. In like manner, the programmes and policies we undertake now will have an important effect on our future growth and expansion.

The decisions which are required to establish these programmes and policies for the coming fiscal year are extremely difficult ones. Sound reasons are advanced for expanding existing programmes or introducing new programmes. On the other hand, there are limitations upon what can be undertaken in any one year. We must maintain a moderate level of taxation in order that business and industry can remain healthy and competitive. At the same time, we must keep our net debt at a reasonable level to preserve the financial strength of the province.

Through the Treasury Board and its staff, we have the facilities for studying and examining our estimates thoroughly to ensure that the best possible use is made of available funds. With the assistance and full co-operation of the departments, we were able this year to reduce original estimates materially. We will continue to make every effort to ensure that the greatest value is obtained from every dollar of provincial expenditure.

Even with the most diligent control over our expenditures, we must provide substantial additional funds each year to keep pace with the growth occurring within our borders and to meet the new needs of our people in this period of rapidly changing economic and social conditions. The impact of this growth and change on provincial responsibilities is tremendous, particularly in the fields of education, health, welfare and highways.

I shall detail the nature of the situation we face in these areas of responsibility and indicate the measures we propose to adopt. Since the steps we can take are determined very largely by our present financial position and our expectations concerning the effect of future economic activity upon our revenues, I would like first to review economic conditions.

Reviewing the economic conditions of the past year is a pleasure. The present period of expansion, which started early in 1961, continued throughout 1963 and we are now entering the fourth year of this period of economic resurgence. In other words, we are now experiencing the longest period of expansion since World War II. The year 1963 added at least six per cent to the gross provincial product.

The past three years were of special importance to Ontario. While Canadian exports grew rapidly in this period, the most remarkable advances were made in exports of fully manufactured commodities with a resulting favourable impact on Ontario. The automobile and steel industries had exceptionally good production years, reaching new peaks two years in a row. The concentration of these industries in Ontario contributed to our prosperity. A high level of construction and investment also aided the economy.

The improvement in Canada's foreign trade in 1963 provided an estimated trade surplus of more than $400 million, the highest since 1952. The unusually sharp rise in exports of manufactured products was of particular significance to us. During the past three years, these exports rose by an average of 22 per cent per year to a total of some $750 million in 1963. An expanding European market with rising prices and a vast range of new needs, combined with price stability here in Canada, a lower Canadian dollar and a well-timed Ontario Trade Crusade, all contributed to this stimulating success in foreign trade. Many of our manufacturers found that they could compete effectively in the United States itself.

Industrial production in Ontario continued its advance in 1963. The increase amounted to about six per cent. Manufacturing production, the most important growth component, rose by 6.5 per cent. The motor vehicle and parts industries were the leaders of the rapid growth in production, followed closely by the iron and steel industry. The record production of automobiles in 1962 was surpassed by more than 23 per cent in 1963, when total motor vehicle production amounted to 627,000 units. Records were also broken in the production of steel ingots and pig iron, which were ahead of record 1962 levels by 14 and ten per cent.

Ontario's mineral production is estimated to show a moderate reduction from the 1962 level of $902 million, mainly owing to the further decrease in the output of our uranium mines. On the other hand, the iron ore industry had a good year. The production of nickel is expected to be a little below that of 1962, though improvement took place toward the end of the year and rapid increases are now emerging.

The year 1963 was better than average in agriculture, with farm cash income being up 6.4 per cent in the first nine months. Although a prolonged dry spell in southwestern Ontario kept production below potential in that area, agricultural output increased in most areas of the province.

Total new capital investment in the province for 1963 is estimated at $3.2 billion. This is the highest level since the record year of 1957, and is considerably better than indicated at the commencement of the year. Machinery and equipment form an important part of the total, and general confidence, combined with greater demand on existing facilities, will likely result in large increases in this category of investment. New capital investment in construction during 1963 rose strongly. Residential construction more than maintained its 1962 strength and non-residential construction had a good year. Contracts awarded since the late summer indicate significant improvement for the immediate future. A number of new projects should set an excellent pace for 1964.

The generally strong growth of the economy of 1963, with major achievements in manufacturing, exporting, and import replacement, was clearly reflected in steadily rising employment throughout the year. The number of jobs rose by 60,000, thereby reducing the rate of unemployment to 3.8 per cent. This is much below the unemployment rate of 5.5 per cent in Canada as a whole, and 5.7 per cent in the United States. Much of the improvement in Ontario took place in the last quarter of the year, and the December unemployment rate, seasonally adjusted, reached a low of 3.3 per cent.

The gains in production, employment and average hourly earnings resulted in a healthy rise in personal income during the year. This is estimated at more than $13 billion, an increase of seven per cent. The rise in the consumer price index, however, was less than two per cent.

Retail sales were well ahead of the previous year with the sharpest gains recorded toward the end of the year. Car sales were the most prominent factor in the rise, but in the last quarter significant gains were also made in household furniture and appliances, clothing and footwear.

The improvement in exports, in import replacement, in the automobile, steel and other industries, as well as in construction activity, gave widespread strength to the economy. As a result we had higher levels of personal income, rising profit margins and a higher standard of living. An additional stimulus can be expected from the record wheat sales which enhanced the incomes of western farmers and gave them an incentive to spend more readily on a great variety of goods produced in Ontario, including agricultural machinery and supplies.

It would appear, therefore, that the economy is entering 1964 under the stimulus of record levels of activity in most of the important areas of the economy. Consumer income is strong and supports a rising volume of spending, especially on durable goods. Capital spending continues to accelerate, particularly in manufacturing. In general, the year 1964 promises to provide further gains in production and incomes.

Manufacturing is of crucial importance for employment opportunities, but cannot hope to thrive on the strength of our domestic market alone. It is, therefore, very encouraging to see that our manufacturers have already managed to make significant penetration into many very competitive foreign markets. Such footholds should pay important dividends in the years that lie ahead. Our government accepts its responsibility in this area and intends to continue its trade crusade in close co-operation with the federal government, in order that we may maintain the momentum in exports of manufactured products.

Provincial governments now have a much greater influence on the economy than in the past. Provincial expenditures have risen from 22.7 per cent of the total expenditure of all governments in 1956 to 28.3 per cent in 1962. Furthermore, emphasis has been shifted increasingly to the dynamic influences of investment in human capital. There has been an enormous rise in expenditures on education, job training and health. Such relatively intangible assets are essential if we are to improve the efficiency of labour and if we are to make the scientific and technological advances necessary to keep us internationally competitive.

The greater involvement of provincial governments in important economic matters and decisions has increased the possibility of duplication and contradiction. This high degree of interdependence in our economy necessitates inter-governmental consultation and co-operation on all important economic decisions. The impact of government activity is now so great that unco-ordinated action by different levels of government could have adverse effects on our economic development. At the important federal-provincial conference in Ottawa last November these matters were discussed and a solid foundation was laid for future co-operation.

It has been agreed that close co-operation between the federal government and the provincial governments is a prerequisite to healthy national economic development. Usually the provincial governments are in a better position to know and evaluate local needs. Consultation with the provinces, therefore, could be invaluable to the success of economic programmes national in scope. Our government has the desire and the facilities to assist the Canadian Economic Council in every way possible in seeking ways of maintaining a high rate of economic growth.

We are fully confident that the current economic expansion can continue. There is great potential for further and accelerated growth through the rest of this decade. It is, therefore, of the greatest importance that the various levels of government harmonize their programmes in order that we may capitalize to the fullest extent on the challenging opportunities of the 60s.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to present an interim statement of the financial operations of the province in the current fiscal year. In the hope of making very clear the period I am speaking of, I should perhaps explain that when I speak of the current fiscal year, I speak of the period from April 1, 1963 to March 31, 1964. The figures that I will present represent eight months of actual record and four months of forecast. They include a number of special grants and payments which we propose to meet from the current year's revenue.

Supplementary estimates totalling $6,693,000 will be submitted for your approval to permit the following grants and payments to be made, as shown in the table below.

In the current fiscal year, we have been engaged upon a large and comprehensive programme. Inclusive of the special grants and payments to which I have referred, net ordinary expenditure, which includes $41.5 million for sinking fund, totals $974.5 million before providing $81 million for financing capital payments out of ordinary revenue. Net capital expenditure on physical assets amounts to $236.5 million, of which $200.3 million or 85 per cent is for the construction of provincial highways, municipal roads and mining and logging roads. The remainder of the capital programme consists of $28.4 million for public works, $4.6 million for conservation projects, and $3.2 million for parks and rural power lines.

We are thus estimating our combined net ordinary and capital expenditures in 1963-64 at $1,211 million, an increase of $104.5 million over the preceding year. The increase is largely concentrated in additional assistance to school boards and universities, payments to municipalities and increased outlays for highways and other services associated with population and economic growth. Our expenditure for education is up by $43.9 million, of which $41.5 million represents additional assistance to school boards and universities. The overall growth in The Department of Highways' expenditures of $29.2 million is accounted for, in the main, by increases of $12.3 million in the assistance provided for local roads and $18 million in the capital outlays required for the construction of provincial highways, and secondary and development roads. Other significant increases are: $7.6 million for mental health purposes, $6 million for public welfare costs, and $4.1 million in public debt charges.

Bulking large in the province's net ordinary

EDUCATION

Study to determine the feasibility of extending the co-operative programme at the University of Waterloo	$ 25,000
New Universities Library Project	448,000
Special contribution to the Teachers' Superannuation Fund	1,000,000

HEALTH

Ontario Heart Foundation	150,000
Special grants to public hospitals under the authority of The Public Hospitals Act and the regulations thereunder	3,555,000
Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation	400,000
Illahee Lodge, Cobourg	4,800
Ontario Society for Crippled Children—for convalescent camps	48,200
Canadian Mothercraft Centre, Toronto	4,000

LANDS AND FORESTS

Grant to reimburse Niagara Parks Commission in part for the cost of development of Stoney Creek Battlefield Park	58,000
--	--------

TREASURY

Special contribution to the Public Service Superannuation Fund	1,000,000 and capital expenditures in 1963-64 are those of the following departments: education, $392.3 million; highways, $280.4 million; health, $132.7 million; public welfare, $62.7 million; municipal affairs, $45.6 million; public works, $40.8 million; and lands and forests, $35.4 million.
--	-----------

We are estimating our combined net ordinary revenue and net capital receipts at $1,058.1 million for 1963-64. This is an increase over the preceding fiscal year of $61.6 million. Higher receipts are indicated in most of the main sources of revenue, the principal increases being: $21.3 million in corporations tax; $10.7 million in motor vehicle licences and permits; $8.9 million in gasoline tax; $7.5 million from the Liquor Control Board; and $7.3 million in retail sales tax.

The tax rental agreement for individual income tax was replaced by a collection agreement commencing with the 1962 taxation year. It was therefore necessary for the federal government to forecast each year the income tax to be collected for Ontario and to pay monthly instalments based thereon. Although monthly instalments commenced in April 1962, tax returns for 1962 were not filed until the spring of 1963. It was the end of that year, that is, 1963, before accurate totals of tax actually collected for the province were tabulated by the federal government and only then was it apparent that Ontario had been overpaid for 1962 and that collections for 1963 had also been overestimated.

It is our understanding that these over-payments are to be deducted from instalments to be received before the end of the present fiscal year. Net receipts for 1963-64 from this source are now estimated at $157 million instead of the federal estimate of $171,376,000 which was used in my budget forecast of a year ago. This means, of course, a reduction in the income we had looked for of $14 million.

Apart from the individual income tax collections, the major sources of revenue are: corporations tax, $207 million; retail sales tax, $183 million; gasoline tax, $182 million; Liquor Control Board, $95 million; motor vehicle licences and permits, $73.3 million; and succession duties, $43.5 million.

Our interim surplus on ordinary account is estimated at $522,000, after providing $81 million for capital payments financed out of ordinary revenue and $41.5 million for sinking fund. However, when account is taken of net capital expenditure of $236.5 million and net capital receipts of $2.1 million, our revenues fall short of meeting overall requirements by $111.4 million. The result, of course, is an increase in net capital debt—a subject which I shall now discuss.

For some years, the province has been carrying out a huge capital programme to meet the growing demand for highways and roads, hospitals, schools and other needed facilities. In the postwar period $2.3 billion has been expended on physical assets. Of this amount $1.5 billion or nearly two-thirds has been expended in the past seven years. The high level of these outlays indicates the great importance we attach to the creation of physical assets as a means of strengthening the economic and social foundation of our society.

In financing this huge investment in physical assets, we have followed the policy of meeting a substantial proportion of our capital expenditures out of ordinary revenue. This policy has enabled us to preserve a strong credit position in the money market and at the same time to keep increases in debt well within manageable limits. Thus, while we have undertaken capital expenditures in the past seven years of nearly $1.5 billion, the net capital debt over this period has risen by $639 million. In other words we have met from current revenue about 56 per cent of our investment in physical assets.

Net capital debt at March 31, 1964 is estimated at $1,397.3 million, an increase of $113.2 million over the 1963 figure. This increase is reasonable when you consider our record net capital expenditure this year of $236.5 million.

In terms of wealth and financial ability, the level of our net capital debt is not a cause of concern. It now represents about 7.4 per cent of the gross provincial product, compared with 10.4 per cent at the end of World War II. It would require about 1½ years' revenue of the government to repay the net capital debt today, compared with some 3½ years' revenue in 1946. Thus, according to ability to pay, the burden of our debt is substantially less than it was at the end of World War II.

Through the use of the capital money market, we have been able to carry out our capital construction programme and still maintain a moderate system of taxation. We shall continue to make prudent use of our credit to finance part of our capital programme. Although the increases in net debt have been reasonable in the past, we shall continue to exercise the greatest care to ensure that further increases are kept within manageable limits.

In placing before the hon. members the government's plans for the coming fiscal year, I shall first present a summary of our overall expenditure programme.

Net ordinary expenditure for 1964-65, which includes $40 million for sinking fund, is forecast at $1,039.7 million before providing $117 million for capital payments to be financed out of ordinary revenue. Net capital expenditure on physical assets will amount to $264.4 million, of which $215.1 million is for provincial highways, municipal roads, and mining and logging roads. The remainder of the capital programme consists of $36 million for public works, $5.4 million for conservation projects, $5 million for parks and other recreational areas, and $2.9 million for other purposes.

The aggregate of net ordinary expenditure and net capital expenditure on physical assets is forecast—this is the forecast for the coming year—at $1,304.1 million. This represents an increase of $93.1 million over the current fiscal year. The four departments of education, highways, health and public welfare account for over 70 per cent of the increase.

Net ordinary and capital expenditures of major departments for the coming fiscal year will be: education, $412.3 million; highways, $299.4 million; health, $151.1 million; public welfare, $70.9 million; municipal affairs, $43.5 million; public works, $48.7 million; and lands and forests, $33.9 million.

I should like now to discuss some of our specific programmes, and the ones to which our attention is first drawn are in the field of social services and human betterment. I am sure that the hon. members will agree that adequate education, health and welfare programmes are vital to a dynamic province like Ontario; that we recognize their importance is shown by the magnitude of our expenditures. In the short period of six years, the combined net expenditures of the departments of education, health and public welfare have grown by $344 million from $243.7 million in 1957-58 to $587.7 million in the current fiscal year. In the coming fiscal year, they are forecast at $634.3 million, an amount approaching that spent for all purposes of government just six years ago.

The most costly of these social services, and the most important to our future is education. Enrolment in the elementary and secondary schools of the province now approximates 1.6 million, a substantial proportion of our total population. Financial requirements for the construction of buildings to accommodate students in schools at both levels, and to provide facilities for vocational education in secondary schools have been particularly heavy. During the past year, we have opened an average of ten new schools or additions to schools each week. Many of the new high school units were financed under the Federal-Provincial Technical and Vocational Training Agreement, whereby approved costs were paid in total by the province, which in turn was reimbursed to the extent of 75 per cent by the federal government. On the whole, new construction of elementary and secondary schools has been catching up with the requirements imposed by increasing enrolments. It is expected that expenditures for school building will decline in 1964 and will continue at a somewhat lower level for the next two or three years.

As you know, a revised system of legislative grants to the elementary and secondary schools will be implemented this year. The Ontario Foundation Tax Plan is designed to make possible greater equality of educational opportunity across the province than has hitherto been achieved, and at the same time to reduce or halt the growth in taxation on homeowners and farmers. The foundation plan is also designed to correct certain inequities associated with the payment of school taxes by corporations in relation to public and separate schools. In general, the plan aims to give the greatest help where it is most needed, to the end that each boy and girl may have access to a sound basic education without unduly burdening any municipal taxpayer. In practical terms, the new system will mean that in the coming fiscal year, the amount available for school grants will be increased by $52.1 million to an amount of $285.4 million. I am sure the hon. members will appreciate the marked benefit that local ratepayers will derive from these increased grants.

With the help of substantial government assistance, the number and size of the universities of the province continue to increase. Places were available last September for the 5,000 additional students who are being accommodated in the universities during the current college year. Trent University will open its doors in Peterborough in September, and it is expected that Brock University in the Niagara Peninsula will begin classes in temporary quarters in the autumn of 1964. The University of Toronto is establishing colleges at Scarborough and Erindale, and a new arts college and library are being planned for the University of Guelph. Progress is being made in the development of the campus at the Laurentian University, Sudbury.

In the coming fiscal year, the funds made available to assist universities in meeting rising operating costs and in providing additional accommodation for swelling enrolments will be increased by $30.5 million—that is the amount of the increase—to $101.3 million. Grants for operating costs, extended graduate programmes and special purposes will total $47.7 million, and the balance of $53.6 million will be made available by way of loans through a new Crown corporation. This new Crown corporation is to be established to assist universities with their capital construction programmes. The provision of capital funds through the new corporation, which is to be known as the Ontario Universities Capital Aid Corporation, will have the advantage of spreading the cost of the heavy requirements of the current expansion programme over subsequent years when the demand for capital funds is not expected to rise so rapidly. The cost of servicing the loan will be recognized, by the government, as part of the operating cost of the universities in subsequent years.

I will not read the list of the maintenance and construction funds to be made available in the coming year for the various universities of the province (see Appendix I). They total, as I have already indicated, $47.5 million for operation and maintenance, and $53.5 million for construction, a total of $101 million.

Apart from the provision of capital funds to universities through the new Crown corporation, we are forecasting the net expenditure for the other costs of education in 1964-65 at $412.3 million. This is an increase of $53.9 million over the interim estimate of the corresponding costs for the current fiscal year. Our education expenditure for next year is thus expected to approach the total net expenditures of the province for all purposes a decade ago.

The expanding needs of our educational system and the increasing demands that it will continue to make upon tax revenues at both the municipal and provincial levels are not going to diminish. Forecasts of enrolment for the next ten years indicate that the combined wisdom and effort of the provincial government, school boards, municipal councils, and taxpayers will be required in order that our children and youth may have the educational opportunities which we all regard as essential and that the necessary funds may be found to provide them. Certainly judgment and prudence must be exercised at all levels in determining priorities not only in the educational system but in our economy as a whole.

The second of the social services which are so vitally important to the life of this province, and to which our government has always given its wholehearted support, is the field of health. To meet the constantly changing needs of more than 6.5 million people in a highly developed province with a diversified economy, health programmes cannot remain static. Emphasis that was once placed upon communicable disease, environmental sanitation, and custodial care of the mentally ill, must now be directed toward modern treatment of the mentally ill, widespread public health services and hospital care insurance.

To give effect to this new emphasis, the rehabilitation programme to help patients in Ontario hospitals return to useful and active lives in their communities will be strengthened, facilities for the care and treatment of mental illness will be expanded, local centres for the early detection and treatment of mental illness will be improved, psychiatric units will be added in general hospitals and public health services will be extended.

I am pleased to announce that the government has decided to increase the scope of the out-patient benefits provided under the hospital insurance plan. Radiotherapy for the treatment of cancer, which is presently limited to in-patient admissions, will be accepted as an insured service on an out-patient basis.

Physiotherapy, occupational therapy, and speech therapy when prescribed by a physician as part of a planned physical rehabilitation programme for the patient will also be covered as an out-patient benefit.

Certain follow-up visits to a hospital for removal of plaster casts and re-check x-rays for fracture cases, treated at a hospital within 24-hours of an accident, will be accepted as an insured out-patient benefit whether or not the initial visit required admission to hospital.

Costs in connection with the hospital insurance plan continue to rise. Exclusive of the extension of out-patient benefits to which I have referred, the total costs under the plan are forecast for this year at $320.6 million, virtually double the 1959 costs of $161.8 million.

There are several factors contributing to this marked increase in costs. The population growth of Ontario, coupled with a more complete coverage, has resulted in an increase in the number of insured persons. At December 31, 1963, an estimated 98.1 per cent of the population was insured. There has also been a general increase in hospital utilization. As new hospital beds and facilities become available they are immediately put into service. In keeping with all other components of daily living, the per diem costs of hospital care have risen, mainly because hospital salaries have now reached a level that is more in keeping with rates of pay in other fields. It is anticipated that the annual cost of hospital care insurance will continue to rise, but that the rate of increase should not be as great after 1964.

In 1961, the government decided to stabilize premiums under the hospital care insurance plan for three years at the present level of $2.10 monthly for a single person and $4.20 monthly for a family unit. In the last three years, this government has contributed $143.6 million to pay the costs of the plan not met by premium subscription and the federal contribution. As the costs of hospitalization increase and the benefits are extended, the cost of this subsidy rises. In the coming fiscal year a provincial contribution of $86 million would be required to maintain the premiums at the present rate.

Since the inception of the hospital insurance plan, established nearly six years ago, the premiums for the benefits thereunder have not changed and consequently have not kept pace with the rise in cost. Indeed, the rise in costs, as I have indicated, has been met through increased contributions by the province. In view of the many other demands on provincial revenues, and after most careful consideration of all the factors involved, including the extension of outpatient benefits, it has been concluded that the premium income should be restored to the original basis whereby it met approximately one-third of the cost of the programme. To accomplish this, it has been decided to increase the monthly rate for a single person to $3.25 and for a family unit to $6.50, effective July 1, 1964. Even with this increase in premium, the province will still be required to provide $50 million towards the cost of the plan as well as $75 million for the operation of mental hospitals and for grants to sanatoria. In other words, the cost of the Ontario hospital insurance programme will again be shared approximately one-third by the province, one-third by the federal government and one-third by the insured persons themselves.

Mr. Speaker, our welfare services are vital and necessary in meeting the needs of those who, for various reasons, are unable to provide for themselves. To this end, we are continually expanding and improving our welfare services.

The highlight of the new services rendered by The Department of Public Welfare concerns the inclusion on a means test of widows and single women, between the ages of 60 to 65 years, as a special category for provincial assistance. More than 6,000 women are now receiving these allowances. This has relieved the municipalities of certain administration costs and payments of direct relief.

Increased allowances to recipients of old age assistance, blind and disabled persons' allowances, and to those under the new programme for widows and single women came into effect on December 1, 1963. In the coming fiscal year, an expenditure of $70.9 million will be required, an increase of $8.3 million over the current fiscal year.

In recognition of the fundamental importance of our highways and roads programme in promoting industrial growth and opening up new areas of the province, we have increased the net ordinary and capital expenditures of The Department of Highways over the last 12 years from $103 million in 1951-52 to an estimated $280.4 million in the current fiscal year. They will be increased an additional $19 million to $299.4 million in 1964-65.

Ontario now has a vast network of roads including many miles of multi-lane toll-free highways and expressways which have greatly facilitated the movement of people and goods throughout the province. We have not only provided for the ever-increasing number of motor vehicle registrations—which last year rose by 90,000 from 2,177,000 to 2,267,000—but we have made road travel easier and more efficient than ever before.

During 1963, provincial highway and road construction continued at peak level. The total mileage of paved highways completed, including reconstruction, was 461 miles. In the same period, 62 structures were completed.

Three new sections of Highway 401 were opened, bringing the total mileage in use to 502 miles. There was accelerated progress on the widening of this highway on the Toronto bypass. A number of major developments on other roads took place last year. The Garden City Skyway, taking the Queen Elizabeth Way over the Welland Canal, was completed in the late fall. Reconstruction of the Trans-Canada Highway continued at the various localities. Our programmes of roads to resources, and forestry roads, maintained their construction pace with 272 miles of resources roads and 76 miles of forestry roads completed to date.

In the current fiscal year 1963-64, the province's total expenditures on highways and roads are estimated at $280.4 million, consisting of $81.3 million for maintenance and $199.1 million for construction and other capital projects. Provincial road subsidies to municipalities and payments to unincorporated townships in northern Ontario, which are included in the foregoing, total $89.9 million, of which $33.7 million is for maintenance and $56.2 million for capital purposes.

For the coming fiscal year, a wide-ranging construction programme is planned which provides for further additions and improvements to the province's system of four-lane divided highways, work on three new roads and a number of existing roads in northern Ontario, and numerous projects for the improvement of highway alignment and driving surface.

For the coming fiscal year 1964-65, the appropriations for our highway and road programme total $299.4 million, or $19 million more than for the current fiscal year. Of this amount, $86.3 million will be for maintenance and $213.1 million for capital purposes. Included in the foregoing are road subsidies to the municipalities and payments to unincorporated townships in northern Ontario amounting to $97.3 million of which $35 million will be for maintenance and $62.3 million for capital purposes. This will provide for a combined provincial and municipal programme for the coming fiscal year of approximately $397 million, an increase of $26 million over the combined total of the present year.

A word about our natural resources programme. To enable the province to carry out its important responsibilities relating to the conservation and development of our vast natural resources, ordinary and capital appropriations totalling $72 million will be requested for the coming fiscal year. This represents an increase of $9.7 million over the interim estimate of combined expenditure for the current fiscal year.

In the key field of agriculture, our programmes of assistance and research, carried out by The Department of Agriculture, will be continued and expanded. In recognition of the importance of the family farm, and to assist young farmers embarking upon farming as a life career, larger loans will be made available next year under the extended junior farmer establishment loan programme. The agricultural rehabilitation and development programme will also be expanded, with expenditures expected to rise to more than twice this year's expenditures. Total net expenditure of The Department of Agriculture will exceed $20.9 million in 1964-65, an increase of $1.9 million over the present year.

Through The Department of Mines, we will continue to promote the exploration for, and the development of, Ontario's mineral resources. A substantial increase in the number of geological field parties is planned next year. A new programme of seismic exploration will be carried out next year and work will continue on the airborne magnetometer survey.

The consolidation of The Department of Energy Resources, the conservation authorities branch and the Ontario Water Resources Commission into the new Department of Energy and Resources Management will ensure closer co-ordination of these related activities. This will enable us to carry out a vigorous programme designed to protect and develop our valuable water, energy and other resources for the benefit of this and future generations. The expenditures of this department are forecast at $13.7 million for the coming fiscal year.

Through The Department of Lands and Forests, we are engaged in a progressive programme, utilizing modern techniques and advanced research, for the management, protection and regeneration of our forest resources. The continued well-being of the forest-based industries, which are dependent upon this rich natural resource, is indeed of crucial importance to the economy of Ontario.

Our extensive parks programme, offering a variety of attractive natural and man-made recreational and tourist facilities, will be expanded. Negotiations will be undertaken for the purchase of lands, valued at $5 million, for parks, forestry purposes, hunting and fishing, public access to water and general recreational purposes. Total combined expenditures of The Department of Lands and Forests will reach an estimated $33.9 million in 1964-65, an increase of $4.3 million over the current year.

There are other areas of government activity vitally concerned with the stimulation of economic growth. Through The Department of Economics and Development, we have been conducting an energetic and many-pronged programme aimed at industrial development and trade expansion.

Increased employment, an accelerated rate of economic growth, and an improvement in our balance of payments position all testify to its success. While devaluation of the Canadian dollar provided a sharp stimulus on the balance of payments side, there is ample evidence that our trade expansion programme has been a highly significant factor in the overall improvement in the Canadian economy.

We are confident that economic growth and employment opportunities will be stimulated during the next year by our participation in trade shows and sales missions, as well as by expanded efforts by our trade offices abroad.

The Ontario Development Agency, through guarantee of loans and provision of managerial advice to Ontario-based industry, will also provide new job opportunities and increase manufacturing production during the next year.

At the community level, a number of special activities are also planned. Local economic studies and forums concerned with the problems of regional industrial development will be further developed and expanded. In addition, the Ontario Economic Council will continue to study major problems affecting the Ontario economy as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I wish now to deal with aid to local authorities. A striking feature of the provincial Budget and a major contributing factor to its growth is the huge and increasing amount of financial assistance which is given annually by the province to municipalities, school boards and other local authorities. In the five years since I delivered my first Budget in 1959, the province has turned over to local authorities the sum of $2 billion. This is double the amount provided in the preceding five years. It demonstrates clearly the growing magnitude of the financial aid that we are providing to assist local authorities in carrying out their important responsibilities.

We, the government, are fully aware that local authorities, like the province, are confronted with greatly increased costs as a result of growth and development. These increased costs are the necessary outcome of more people, more children, more industry and more municipal services of all kinds to support a higher level of economic activity. To help local authorities meet these challenges and still maintain local tax rates at manageable levels, we have provided in the current year an estimated $495.1 million in provincial funds for the support of local services. In other words, we are turning over to local authorities nearly 47 per cent of the province's net ordinary revenue.

The coming fiscal year will represent an important milestone in the history of provincial aid to local authorities. Our assistance will rise to $546.4 million and thus for the first time will exceed, and I might add substantially, the $500 million level. Obviously, this vast sum will place a heavy strain on the province's revenue. I urge you to listen to this next remark: It will exceed by nearly $100 million—this assistance to local authorities—the total amount we expect to receive from the three major direct tax fields that we share with the federal government, namely, personal income tax, corporations tax, and succession duty.

Over half of our assistance in the coming fiscal year will be grants to school boards. These grants will rise to $285.4 million, an increase over the current year of $52.1 million. This is the largest increase in our history, the increase alone exceeding the total grants provided just 12 years ago. The Ontario Foundation Tax Plan will thus be of great benefit to school boards, particularly those with limited financial resources. This forward-looking plan represents a solid step on the part of the government to further the equality of educational opportunity and to relieve the burden of local taxation on farm-, home- and other property-owners.

Increased financial assistance will be provided by the province for the construction and maintenance of local streets and roads. Road subsidies to municipalities and payments to unincorporated townships, as I have stated, will rise from $89.9 million in the current year to $97.3 million in the coming fiscal year. Indicative of the extent of the municipal road programmes that have been made possible with our assistance is the fact that in 1963-64, for the first time, combined provincial and municipal spending on municipal roads actually exceeds the expenditure on our vast King's Highway system.

The province supports financially a wide range of local services in the health and welfare fields. Municipalities have not only been relieved under the hospital insurance plan of their former payments for hospital deficits, but are compensated in a general way for their hospital indigency costs. For the numerous welfare programmes in which the province shares, including general welfare assistance, child welfare and homes for the aged, we are providing $31.8 million in the coming fiscal year, an increase of $3.6 million over the current fiscal year.

There are also a number of other grants and payments, among which are the unconditional grants to municipalities, the payments under the municipal winter works incentive programme, and many others.

I come now to the important area of federal-provincial relations, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. members are aware, the discussions at the conference last November embraced a broad range of subjects. These included such questions as fiscal arrangements, shared-cost programmes, the public assistance programmes, pensions, unemployment, economic and industrial development and the need for continuing federal-provincial liaison arrangements. Some of these matters were held over for further study and discussion, being referred to appropriate committees in preparation for the next plenary session to take place in early 1964.

We were greatly encouraged by the spirit of amity and concord that prevailed at the November conference. There was general agreement on the need for close and continuing consultation and co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. In a federal system, there are many activities of common or overlapping interest which require co-ordinated and concerted action. Through frequent discussion and consultation, greater success can be achieved in integrating these activities. For our part, we are eager to co-operate, as we have in the past, in promoting the strength of our federal partnership and evolving plans for the economic and social betterment of our nation and province.

The tax-sharing arrangements between the federal and provincial governments occupied the main attention of the conference. The arrangements then in effect had been evolved after long months of careful study and discussion, and had been in operation for less than two years of their five-year term. Accordingly, we contended that the underlying principles should be continued in force for the remainder of the period for which the arrangements had been negotiated. However, the federal government decided that the arrangements would be changed for the coming fiscal year and that consideration would be given to further adjustments at the meetings to be held in the early months of this year.

Under the new arrangements, all provinces except Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia will receive equalization payments. Equalization will be based, not on the national average, but on the average yield of the standard taxes in the two provinces having the highest per capita yield, namely, Ontario and British Columbia. Provincial revenues from natural resources will be retained as a factor in the new formula, but the method of treatment will be altered. Instead of one-half of such revenues being included with the standard taxes and equalized up to the national average, the equalization payable under the new arrangements to any province having natural resource revenue above the national average will be reduced by one-half of the amount that such revenue exceeds the per capita national average. The revision in the equalization formula will benefit the seven provinces which are eligible for this form of special assistance.

Although Ontario has never received, nor has it ever expected to receive, an equalization payment, this province has long supported the principle of fiscal need assistance to provinces which do not have adequate resources to discharge their constitutional responsibilities. I am sure it is clear to all that if we are to progress and develop as a nation special assistance must be provided to some provinces to ensure a measure of equality of opportunity and standard of services amongst our people as a whole. However, it should be emphasized, and I cannot stress this too strongly, that the level of assistance should not be such as to impair or weaken the ability of the revenue-producing areas of the country to grow and expand. Since Ontario is the producer of more than 45 per cent of the national revenue, it is essential that there be maintained in this province a strong, healthy climate in which business and industry can expand and prosper, thereby enabling us to attain a greater measure of well-being for all. The development of Ontario's revenue-producing capacities serves the interests of the nation as well as those of the province. In order to preserve this position we will oppose any extension of equalization beyond that provided in the revised formula. And we are definite about this, that we will oppose any extension of equalization beyond that provided in the revised formula.

The hon. members are well aware of the province's need for an increasing share of the major fields of direct taxation. When fully implemented, the present tax-sharing arrangements will provide the province with only one-fifth of the personal and corporation income tax fields. In view of our expanding responsibilities for such basic needs as education, highways, health and welfare, we cannot regard our share of these tax fields as a just or adequate recognition of the growing revenue requirements of the province.

At the recent conference, the federal government gave partial recognition to the needs of all provinces for additional revenues. Effective April 1, 1964, the rate of abatement of federal estate tax will be increased from 50 per cent to 75 per cent. While this adjustment in our fiscal relations is welcome, it is quite inadequate in relation to our needs.

Mr. Speaker, as this Budget testifies, the province and its municipalities are being confronted with inescapable demands for an expansion and extension of services. Our communities and industries must be provided with essential services if we are to continue to grow and prosper. The revenue required to meet the costs of growth and development should come largely from the progressive tax fields which now are heavily occupied by the federal government. Our present share of the major tax fields does not reflect the special problems that exist in a growing urban and highly industrialized province such as Ontario. At the forthcoming conference, we shall press for a more equitable and realistic share of the major fields of direct taxation.

Mr. Speaker, the comprehensive expenditure programme that I have outlined for the coming fiscal year clearly demonstrates the province's need for increased revenue. The increased appropriations required for the fiscal year 1964-65 are indicative of the continuing upward trend we can expect in provincial expenditures. Ontario is a growing province, undergoing rapid economic expansion, population change, urbanization and technical advance. The government must meet heavy demands to expand its services and adopt new programmes to meet the needs of our people and industry in these challenging times. We must continue to provide for the added services required to promote our greater economic and social well-being in the future.

Recognizing that the additional funds necessary to meet increased expenditures must come largely from the growth in our revenue each year as industrial activity increases and incomes rise, we have thoroughly examined the ability of our present revenue system to meet our minimum requirements in future years. The conclusion is inescapable. Even on the most optimistic estimate of our future economic growth, the present tax structure cannot produce the revenues required to meet our essential commitments and maintain the financial strength of the province in years to come.

Consideration of the proposed programme for the coming fiscal year, clearly discloses that increased revenues are urgently needed. Consideration must also be given to the revenues necessary to maintain a strong financial position in the light of unavoidable growth in provincial expenditures in future years. Most of the increased expenditures required for the coming and future fiscal years are for education, health and highways.

A large part of our revenue problem stems from the fact that the major direct tax fields which grow most rapidly with economic expansion are heavily occupied by the federal government, a point upon which I have already commented. This is so a fact that the full effect of increased provincial expenditures is not immediately reflected in increased revenues. The expenditures which we are making to nourish Ontario's future economic growth will be returned many-fold in terms of more jobs and increased provincial revenue; this takes time.

The hon. members are aware that this government has taken steps to have a comprehensive and far-ranging inquiry made into the taxation and revenue systems of the province and its municipalities. The Ontario Committee on Taxation, appointed more than a year ago, has for some months now been receiving the views of interested and informed individuals and organizations. In addition, the committee will have available the results of research into each tax and revenue source, into the financial obligations of the province and the municipalities, and into intergovernmental financial relations generally. In these circumstances, it will be clearly understood that we do not wish to disturb the existing tax structure more than is absolutely necessary to carry out our responsibilities. It would be inappropriate, indeed, to make major adjustments in our taxation system at this time.

I would, however, point out that taxation in Ontario is by all standards moderate. Ontario's rates of tax in almost all major revenue fields are comparable or lower than those imposed in other provincial jurisdictions. In fact, in some major revenue fields, they are substantially lower than those levied in a number of other provinces. An examination of the net general revenues of the provinces of Canada, as compiled on a comparable basis by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, reveals the moderate nature of our revenue structure. While the total revenue of Ontario is greater than that of any other province—and this is provincial revenue, which in other words is taxes—it is lower on a per capita basis than the combined average per capita of all provincial governments.

In considering our course of action, we are deeply conscious of the necessity of keeping the increase in taxation at the barest minimum consistent with sound finance. The essential additional expenditures, which increased revenues will permit us to make, will enable our people and industry to take fuller advantage of new economic opportunities. At the same time, we are determined that the tax increase required will not counteract these advantages by adversely affecting production, employment and future economic development. Thus, the tax changes proposed will make no greater demand upon Ontario's economy and people than is necessary to maintain the financial strength of the province in the face of rising provincial expenditures.

There will be no new taxes and the few increases that are proposed in existing taxes are being kept to a minimum. One of the smaller taxes will be reduced. Several changes will be introduced in various taxing statutes in order to improve administration as well as to promote closer co-operation with other provinces and the federal government.

Effective at 12:01 a.m. tomorrow, February 13, the gasoline tax will become 15 cents per gallon, an increase of two cents per gallon. A bill to authorize this increase will be introduced this afternoon.

Refunds will be made to purchasers of gasoline used for purposes other than to propel a motor vehicle on the highways, at the rate of 13 cents of the 15 cents per gallon paid. Farmers and commercial fishermen will continue to receive full refund. The tax on aviation fuel remains at two cents per gallon.

Unlike the modern express highways in some other jurisdictions, which are toll roads, Ontario has been able to keep its modern highway system toll-free, except for certain bridges. The gasoline tax is being increased for the first time since 1957. No province to the east of Ontario has a gasoline tax less than 15 cents per gallon.

The tax on diesel fuel used in motor vehicles will be increased to 20.5 cents per gallon, an increase of two cents per gallon, effective tomorrow. An appropriate bill will likewise be introduced.

At the federal-provincial conference in Ottawa last November, the federal government increased the tax rental for the succession duty field from 50 per cent to 75 per cent of the federal estate tax effective from April 1, 1964. The seven provinces which have tax rental agreements will receive, by direct payment, their share of this increased rental. For Ontario and the other two provinces, which collect their own succession duties, the federal government will increase the abatement of estate tax from 50 per cent to 75 per cent. In order to take advantage of this increased abatement it will be necessary to amend The Succession Duty Act. I will, therefore, be introducing an amendment to this Act which will provide for an appropriate increase in duty approximately equal to the amount of the increased abatement by the federal government. This will have no effect upon the total amount of inheritance taxes collected by the two governments.

The Act was amended last year to exempt from duty the equity of a deceased person domiciled outside of Ontario in a pension plan administered in Ontario. I propose to introduce a similar amendment to extend this principle to certain other types of employee plans.

Changes will be proposed in a bill to amend The Corporations Tax Act which will generally reflect the changes made in the federal Income Tax Act, with respect to the taxable income of corporations.

I propose that manufacturing and processing companies which comply with the federal Act as to their "degree of Canadian ownership" be allowed accelerated rates of depreciation.

After careful consideration, however, I do not propose to incorporate into our legislation, the tax concessions made recently by the federal government to businesses in eight specified "designated areas" in Ontario.

A review of The Hospitals Tax Act brought to my attention that the growth in population in the province was causing a number of municipalities to have populations greater than 10,000, sometimes by a small margin. It is desirable to treat all municipalities alike.

This has to do mostly with motion picture houses. The exemption on admissions paid to places of amusement of 75 cents or less in municipalities under 10,000 population will be extended to all municipalities in the province. In addition, the schedule of rates of tax applied to admissions between 75 cents and 90 cents will be reduced in each case by one cent. A bill will be submitted to the Legislature covering these amendments. The reduction in revenue, as hon. members would expect, is relatively small.

The three per cent rate for retail sales tax will continue unchanged. As a step towards encouraging the use of public transportation facilities, I am proposing that a rebate of sales tax be allowed for buses used for public transit, within the limits of a municipality, purchased after February 29, 1964. Studies are currently underway to improve and simplify certain administrative practices affecting municipalities and local boards.

I should now like to summarize our revenue forecast and financial position for the coming fiscal year.

The aggregate of net ordinary revenue and of net capital receipts from the sale of physical assets is forecast at $1,159.2 million. This is an increase over the current fiscal year of $101.1 million. Of this increase, $30 million will be derived from the tax changes I have announced, $12 million will result from price adjustments by the Liquor Control Board of Ontario, and the balance, or approximately 60 per cent of the increase, will be due to expanding revenues from existing tax sources.

Major sources of revenue for 1964-65 are forecast as follows: gasoline tax, $218 million; corporations tax, $207 million; individual income tax collection agreement, $192 million; retail sales tax, $190 million; and liquor control board, $110 million.

The surplus on ordinary account is estimated at $855,000 after providing $40 million for sinking fund and $117 million for capital payments to be financed out of ordinary revenue. When account is taken of our net capital expenditure of $264.4 million and net capital receipts of $1.6 million, the overall shortfall in revenue is forecast at $104.9 million.

We will thus be required to rely on our borrowing power to an extent comparable to that in the current fiscal year in order to carry out the comprehensive programme we have planned for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion may I say that this Budget clearly indicates the positive action we are taking to meet the needs of a growing economy. It demonstrates our willingness to accept added responsibilities where these are necessary and vital to our continuing progress. We are not content to stand still, but are determined to move forward sensibly and constructively in meeting the demands of these challenging times.

Foremost in our plans for the coming fiscal year are the measures we are taking to assist in the provision of educational opportunities for our children and youth. Swelling enrolments with close to one-quarter of the population now enrolled in elementary and secondary schools attest to the magnitude of the task. The Ontario Foundation Tax Plan will lessen the impact of the mounting burden of education costs on local ratepayers and at the same time will assist school boards in equalizing educational opportunities throughout the province. The availability of capital funds to universities will assist these institutions in meeting the growing need for graduates of universities in many walks of life.

Of major significance in this Budget are the substantially increased provisions for further additions to our already extensive network of highways and roads. It is a great source of satisfaction to us that we have one of the finest systems of highways in the world. Not only have we kept pace with the growth in traffic, but we have facilitated the movement of people and goods and the decentralization of industry with resultant benefits to all. We have accomplished this without the imposition of highway tolls.

We are also deeply conscious of our responsibilities in the fields of health and welfare. These services will be improved and expanded, thereby strengthening individual and family security and the physical and mental well-being of our people. It is our continuing aim to ensure that these programmes are meeting the needs and requirements of our people.

The funds provided for the services I have mentioned, together with the expenditures to be made in such areas as the conservation and development of natural resources and the promotion of trade and industrial activity, will provide a strong stimulus to economic and social progress. We are undertaking a positive programme for the expansion of industry, the creation of jobs and the realization of higher living standards. Also, the huge amounts to be transferred to local authorities will help them to play a vital role, along with the province, in laying a firm foundation for social advancement and economic progress.

Let me assure the hon. members that the cost of providing these services is of vital concern to the government. Constant effort is being made to effect changes in the methods of operation of departments and agencies of the government to promote efficiency, economy and improved service in the despatch of public business, which is constantly in our minds. The analysis of programmes and staffing requirements of departments, which the introduction of programme budgeting has made possible, sir, is being conducted throughout the year by Treasury Board and its officers. Where duplication and overlapping of functions are identified, they are eliminated. Through the organization and methods branch, administrative management studies as well as surveys of systems and procedures are continuing. The recruitment, examination, position evaluation and staff development programmes of the civil service commission likewise contribute to economy of operation though effective use of personnel.

The leadership we are providing cannot, of course, ensure the achievement of all our goals. However, with the co-operation of business, labour and government at all levels, we can be confident of overcoming obstacles and making the most of our opportunities.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Perhaps we could revert to introduction of bills, Mr. Speaker.

THE GASOLINE TAX ACT

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Gasoline Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. Allan moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, we will pause for a moment and distribute the estimates at this time.

THE KILLARNEY RECREATIONAL RESERVE ACT, 1962-63

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests) moves second reading of Bill No. 30, An Act to amend The Killarney Recreational Reserve Act, 1962-63.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): On first reading I explained very briefly the purport of the amendment and I assume it is not necessary to say any more at the moment.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE TREES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 31, An Act to amend The Trees Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The purpose of this is that the amendment will permit a county to compensate one of its townships for loss of taxes arising from the establishment of land in the township as a county forest. This is permissive in nature and is designed to encourage the county forest programme.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CROWN TIMBER ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 32, An Act to amend The Crown Timber Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would say that this Act is further evidence of the effort and the continuous work that is necessary to carry on scientific management in the department on the principle of sustained yield and multiple use. There are a number of amendments dealing with licences, scalers' licences, mill licences, and in particular the provision of section 11 which provides for the repealing of the provision with respect to provincial forests. It is felt now, with the other types of forests, including the county forests I just mentioned, that this provision is no longer necessary.

This bill, I anticipate, will go to the newly formed committee on natural resources, wild-life and mining for further examination, and in moving second reading I would suggest that that be done.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE GAME AND FISH ACT, 1961-62

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 34, An Act to amend The Game and Fish Act, 1961-62.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This in turn deals also with a number of amendments in keeping with the activities that we have to meet in dealing with this important Act. The amending Act refers to set guns, licence issuers, repeal of township licences in certain cases, possession of illegal game, sale of game, hunting of birds, maiming of fish, dealing with live game in captivity, and dealing with certain regulations with respect to coupons and tags.

Again, in moving second reading of this bill, I would anticipate that it would be the desire of the House that this bill also go to the same committee for further consideration.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us how he has arrived at the happy conclusion that a firearm includes a long-bow and a cross-bow?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There are many weapons in use these days in hunting, and it is felt it is necessary to extend the definition in order to cover all of these "lethal" weapons that are being used in hunting.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves second reading of Bill No. 36, An Act to amend The Department of Agriculture Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF WATERLOO

Mr. K. E. Butler (Waterloo North) moves second reading of Bill No. Pr4, An Act respecting the city of Waterloo.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I want to express some views in connection with Bill No. Pr4 that I expressed in committee.

The municipality of Waterloo, the city of Waterloo, is a very advanced municipality to my knowledge. I had occasion a few years ago to meet with its council and discuss with it some of its planning aspirations and the methods by which it proposed to develop the municipality. The members come forward, in my opinion, with a very intelligent idea as to how to benefit that municipality insofar as the co-ordination of activities it carries on—the community centres, parks and that sort of thing. I suggested to the hon. Minister in committee and I suggest now to you, sir, that it would make much sense that when a municipality comes forward with an idea such as this and the department says this makes good sense, that this sort of suggestion could and should be incorporated into the general statutes and should be made available to all of the municipalities of Ontario. If there is reason for the city of Waterloo to progress in this manner, there is reason for certain co-ordination of various statutes—and I think there is. Surely these facilities should be made available to all of the municipalities in Ontario.

We get ourselves into a maze of confusion because of the number of things that we allow to go through this House in the form of private bills and where individual municipalities have evolved better methods of arranging municipal affairs, then I think the advantages of these ideas should be made available to all the municipalities.

I submit to you, sir, that when the responsible hon. Minister comes to the committee and says: I have no objection to this, or I have no objection to it as a pilot matter; which I think were his exact words, that there should be some method whereby these advantages, if there are any in this bill, and

I suggest that there are, be made available to all the municipalities.

I have no intention of trying to oppose this bill, but I would think that there should be some recognizable pattern as to how we deal with private Acts and every time the private bills committee meets, these same problems come up and keep on coming up and will continue to come up until we get some real leadership in these matters from the government, which is presently lacking.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF LONDON

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park), in the absence of Mr. J. H. White (London South), moves second reading of Bill No. Pr5, An Act respecting the board of education of the city of London.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWN OF SMITH'S FALLS

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark) moves second reading of Bill No. Pr8, An Act respecting the town of Smith's Falls.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this bill, I raised certain objections at the committee stage and I wish also to raise those objections here.

This bill is the result of an agreement having been made between the Hershey Chocolate Company—which instituted an industry in Smith's Falls—and the corporation. Now since the time the agreement was made, in whatever form it may have been made, legislation has been passed in order to protect people from this kind of fixed assessment agreement. In questioning the officials who were at our committee, we find that this bill in effect gives a tax concession to the company concerned of over $60,000 a year for five years or a total of $310,000 from the people of that town. I notice in looking up the population figures there are about 9,300 people, which in effect means a tax rebate of about $165 per family of five for the Hershey Company over that period.

Now if this is needed, that is one thing. It seems to me that since provincial legislation has been passed then that legislation ought to protect the people from the kind of fixed assessment which is outlined in this bill.

I quite realize that the people of Smith's Falls are anxious to have this industry. My experience of industries is that generally they decide where they want to go, and then they try to find out what concessions they can get. I have been assured this is not the case here. I do not know. There are government agencies, if companies are in need, which can supply loan funds for helping them get established, and it seems to me that is where this company ought to go.

If, as a matter of fact, this is true, then they should seek these loan funds. But on looking over the statement of this company—and I have a copy of their financial standing here—I find that in the last few years the company has shown an average profit as a percentage of net worth of well over 18 per cent since 1956 and it has been over 20 per cent during the last two years for which reports are available. Since 1956 the company net worth has risen from $71 million to $100 million in 1961.

Now, it just does not seem that the good people of Smith's Falls should be assessed about $33 per head, which is what it would amount to, in order to assist a company of this stature, one of the strong companies on this continent. So, Mr. Speaker, I object to, and will oppose, this bill. It seems to me that if the House does think it ought to pass, then there should be some arrangement by which the people of Smith's Falls can recoup this amount of $310,000 at a later time, and certainly they should be represented on the board of directors over this period.

I have also checked as far as labour conditions are concerned. One of the hon. members, I think it was the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), asked a question in committee about the labour conditions in the plant and we were assured by the officials there—I have forgotten just who it was assured us, I think it was the manager of the plant—that there was a union within the plant. He mentioned two, stationary engineers, which accounts for just a very few people; and he also said that the United Packing House Workers were being established there.

Now I checked with the United Packing House Workers, Mr. Speaker, and the information I have is that the production unit in that plant a couple of weeks ago amounted to only 40 to 50 men. I cannot vouch for the accuracy of this.

I also found that the reports are coming in that many of the milk contracts have been cancelled because of the drop in production here. But the significant thing in all this is that there is not a union in this plant. It was certified — United Packing House Workers have been certified—but up until this time they have been unable to get the company to bargain in good faith, and so they have no contract at this time.

Now I think in view of these situations, and in view of the information which was given us, this bill should be turned down by this House.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I want to direct some remarks about the general principle of fixed assessments. It is only a few years ago now since the fixed assessment sections of The Municipal Act were removed. I would think the things that went through the government's mind at the time they introduced this amendment to The Municipal Act, removing the provisions for fixed assessments, were such things as what had happened in Eastview where there were certain heavy criticisms about the abuse of the fixed assessment sections there, as well as the very strong representations that were received from the Ontario association of mayors and reeves objecting to fixed assessments as well.

In any event, the government did come to the conclusion that there should no longer be any fixed assessment. But it did not take too long, Mr. Speaker, before some municipalities began to come before this House, in the private bills committee, and argue that the provisions of the statute, on which the ink was hardly dry, should not be applied to them. One came from up north, from Kapuskasing, and one came from Wallaceburg. At the time the bill came from Kapuskasing and the bill came from Wallaceburg I took strong exception to those bills being brought forward on the basis that if the door was opened there was really no point in removing from The Municipal Act the provisions allowing fixed assessments under certain circumstances.

Well, for better or for worse, the majority of the committee, and subsequently the majority of the House, came to the conclusion on those two occasions, sir, that there had been negotiations between the municipality concerned and the industry prior to the government's change in its legislation. And on that basis those Acts were allowed to go forward.

I recall very well at the time the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Gomme) joined with me and others in opposing the bill relating to the industry in Kapuskasing and the bill relating to the industry in Wallaceburg, because he drew to the attention of the committee at that time that there was in the town of Smith's Falls, a town in his constituency, the Hershey Chocolate Company of Canada Limited. It had found itself in an exactly similar position. It had been told by the local council—and I presume by the hon. member as well—that because the statute had been amended, it was not entitled to get a fixed assessment. I think the hon. member for Lanark took exactly the right approach at that time.

The law had been changed for the province of Ontario, it had been changed for those industries in Kapuskasing, it had been changed for those industries in Wallaceburg, and it had been changed for those industries in Smith's Falls. However, the government in its wisdom at that time decided that the Kapuskasing bill should go through and that the Wallaceburg bill should go through and now we have the Smith's Falls bill that is being urged to go through. I would suspect that the hon. government members are going to support it and I would suspect if that happens it will probably go through this House this afternoon.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is a real danger in this sort of procedure. If in the wisdom of this Legislature certain steps have been taken, then why should they be varied because of circumstances which have arisen subsequent to that decision? On the other hand, since it is reasonable for Kapuskasing and since it was reasonable for Wallaceburg and since apparently the circumstances are somewhat similar in the case of Smith's Falls, then is it reasonable or fair to deny Smith's Falls and Hershey Chocolate what was given to Kapuskasing and Wallaceburg? We get into this trouble all the time.

There is another private bill on the order paper—it has not yet come before the standing committee on private bills—in which there is another request for fixed assessment. I do not know what the circumstances are surrounding that request, but if they are the same as in the three bills I have mentioned—the two passed by a previous Legislature and this bill—then there is no reason why that one should not be granted. If they are different, if there was no previous arrangement, then there is no apparent excuse to allow that one to go through.

But, Mr. Speaker, as I said in the committee a year ago and as I said in the committee just a few days ago, the door having been opened, we are just wasting our time in trying to put absolute prohibitions or absolute restrictions in The Municipal Act in any fashion. I think it is high time again that the government was consistent in its approach to these matters. There is an importance in eliminating this type of competition between municipalities, in which they bargain one industry out of municipality X into municipality Y because they can give them greater concessions.

There is good sense, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, in the government having some plan to assist and encourage the location of industries in areas that need them. The area of northern Ontario, which desperately needs new industry, should be provided with encouragement out of Queen's Park—not by the municipal council but out of Queen's Park—to encourage new industries to come into sections of northern Ontario that so desperately need development.

This should be done at the expense of all of the people of Ontario, not just at the expense of the local taxpayers, who perhaps do not understand what they are being asked to vote for. Where there are depressed areas—and Cornwall has been mentioned as a depressed area, or Windsor has been mentioned on occasion as an area that needs further encouragement—where there are areas like this, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of all of the people of Ontario to do something about relieving this depression. This whole principle of fixed assessment is a bad principle. The government recognized this little more than a year ago and I do not know why the government is prepared to support a series of bills that go against the principle that it recognized such a short time ago.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Downsview has pointed out the fact that I opposed the two bills last year. I want it clearly understood, sir, that my reason for this was that when these bills were presented it gave the councils of those municipalities the power to grant fixed assessments. I think the hon. members of the committee will recall—and I stated my reason—that if the vote was given to the people who were qualified to vote in the riding to pass on the fixed assessment, that I would not be opposed to it.

First of all, in speaking to the bill of the town of Smith's Falls, I might say that in 1960 the Smith's Falls Chamber of Commerce and the corporation of the town entered into an agreement or offer to make a proposition or some such thing to a company which was investigating the possibility of establishing in the town. It was a common practice that a fixed assessment would be offered and it would only be effective if it was passed by the qualified electors. In that agreement the town offered to put to the people a vote on an assessment of ten per cent for ten years, which in effect would have been a great asset to any company. These people at that time did not know the company that was coming. In September 1960 an agreement was entered into with the Hershey Chocolate Company. By this time of course the town knew the corporation that was coming, but it was not till March 29, 1961 that the amendment was made to the Act doing away with fixed assessment.

But I point out that within two weeks there was the sod-turning of this plant, and at that time the company had spent $127,000 in clearing the property, on site improvement, and the plans for the plant which it would build.

As the events have been pointed out, it is true there were two bills of a similar nature passed last year. Naturally the citizens of the town of Smith's Falls had entered into this agreement and they felt that they had their honour to uphold and they felt they were duty bound to do whatever was possible to institute a fixed assessment for this company. As a result of that, they presented this private bill, but the private bill also included the fact that it had to be passed by a vote of the people. The town fathers, in their wisdom, had the vote taken at the December election, which in effect saved the town about $1,500 in the costs of holding an election after this came before the private bills committee. The ballots clearly stated what the amount of the concession would be to the company and they also stated that it only became effective if the private bills committee and the House passed this private bill.

I might point out that the people of Smith's Falls are honourable, hard-working conscientious citizens. They went to the polls on December 2, 1963 and 84 per cent of the people of that town voted in favour of this fixed assessment. I can also say that this company has paid out over $700,000 in wages to the area. This has been a great asset to the merchants and all the business people of Smith's Falls and the surrounding area.

Again I say this agreement was entered into before the change of legislation. The people have voted on it, they have expressed their wish. I would urge the hon. members of this House to vote in favour of this bill, so that this municipality can fulfill an agreement which it entered into and thus have its name cleared, and so that any further industries who come there to interview the town's officials know that whatever the town says it will do will be done.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a preposterous bill and it ought to be defeated on second reading in this House. I may say that I was not too hopeful when we were in the private bills committee that it would be defeated. At that time there were only four people who voted against it and those four were the members of the New Democratic Party who are members of that committee, Mr. Speaker. However, in listening to the hon. member for Downsview a few minutes ago, I am hoping that we might be able to line up some converts. I was not absolutely sure from his statement which side of the fence he was going to light on, but it sounded like he was leaning towards the side of defeating this bill.

Now, sir, the hon. member for Lanark made a point about the honour and the integrity of the people of Smith's Falls, which I believe is of the very highest order, Mr. Speaker, but I hope that in future negotiations they will also take cognizance of the law of this province. It is three years ago, not yesterday or last month or last year, but three years ago, that the government in its wisdom, and I agreed with it, brought in general legislation to eliminate fixed assessments. We all know, I think, why that was so. This fixed assessment racket was a real racket that big companies could play on small municipalities, getting them to bid against each other for benefits real or elusive that might be derived from a company locating a plant within their municipality. This was bad policy. It was cleaned up by general legislation three years ago.

Where have the town of Smith's Falls and the Hershey Chocolate Company been for the last three years that they felt they were under such tremendous moral obligation to honour an agreement which had been superseded by law that was none of their doing? Where have they been in the last three years? Actually, the general law of the province was changed approximately six months after the agreement was entered into. As far as I can see the agreement was then washed out by virtue of the general law. If they wanted to retain it, if they considered it essential to do so, they certainly could have been in here at least during the succeeding session.

This is just another case, Mr. Speaker, of a huge corporation—and the Hershey Chocolate Company is certainly not a barefoot boy or a representative of barefoot boys—conning the residents of a small municipality to get special concessions from them which it does not need and which probably had no real bearing at all on its decision to locate there.

Before the committee the manager of this plant in Smith's Falls was asked a number of questions about his operations, and although it has been impossible to check his statements completely it would appear they were somewhat misleading. My friend, the hon. member for Yorkview, sir, has already indicated that the number of people being employed in this plant is apparently much smaller than the company had led the municipality to believe would be the case and substantially less than the manager told us was the case just a short time ago.

Furthermore, the manager told us in the committee that the wages being paid in this plant averaged $60 a week and on the basis of a 40-hour week, I would assume that would be $1.50 an hour. Now the information I have since received is that for the general run of production workers the wages actually are $1.15 an hour for women and $1.25 an hour for men.

The other argument used, of course, was that this is a great boon to the farmers of the community who would be able to sell milk to the plant. And no doubt it will be, but I think the lack of concern of the Hershey Chocolate Company for the farmers in the area is indicated by the fact that some of the milk contracts are being cancelled, or will be cancelled over the next six months.

This company is located there and will no doubt carry on operations in accord with the market conditions for its product. It will buy milk when it needs it, it is not doing anybody any favour, it is buying it because it needs it. It will employ people when it needs them and lay them off when it does not need them in accordance with the usual practice, and I trust that in time it will be induced to pay somewhat better wages than it is now paying. But this it will do whether or not we pass this bill. All that will happen if we pass this bill is that the residents of Smith's Falls will be called upon to give a quite unnecessary and quite large subsidy to this huge corporation.

I submit again, Mr. Speaker, that we should defeat this bill at this time.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak opposing the bill. Back in 1963 when the private bills committee had the bills concerning the towns of Wallaceburg and Hearst, my own city council was so disturbed that at that time they passed a resolution strongly opposing the bill. The situation has not changed at all today. They still oppose any type of fixed assessment.

It was in 1961 that the province originally planned on abolishing fixed assessments. The feeling was so strong then—allow me to read an editorial of that day that The Department of Municipal Affairs planned the introduction of the elimination of fixed assessments. The editorial is from the Windsor Daily Star, March 1, 1961:

The Municipal Act is to be amended to prohibit municipalities from granting fixed assessments sometimes used as a lure to attract industries.

The province might even go farther and prohibit any special concessions which result in an inequity to taxpayers. Fixed assessments are wrong in principle. They are favourable to the industry or firm involved otherwise it would not accept it.

A company is given an advantage over other firms in the municipality which are paying regular assessments and over other taxpayers generally. Other taxpayers are subsidizing the recipient of the fixed assessment perhaps over a long period of years. It is an invitation to municipalities eager for new industries to compete against each other in giving the most favourable concessions. All municipalities thus would lose out were the practice to become generally accepted.

There is another aspect to this. Municipalities engaged in such lures are likely to get loaded up with some unstable industries; an industry which requires a fixed assessment is apt to be an unsound one. An industry which does not need a fixed assessment certainly should not get it at the expense of other taxpayers.

An industry which locates in a certain municipality just because it has obtained a fixed assessment, or some other concession, might be quite willing to pull up stakes and leave it if offered even more favourable concessions somewhere else. Municipalities need to be protected against themselves in granting favours which are both inequitable and against their own best interests.

Coming as I do from an area that has not had the amount of growth that was common or general throughout the province of Ontario, this does disturb our area, sir. It puts us at an unfavourable advantage to municipalities that will come to this House and get private bills passed granting fixed assessments.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I fully agree with the views of my hon. colleague. I may say that back in 1950 when I first went on the city council of the city of Windsor, full of enthusiasm, trying to do all I could possibly do to attract new industries into the city, I went to our budget advisor that we had at that time, who had served many years in the employ of the province of Ontario—and I speak of none other than the late Mr. R. J. Moore—and I mentioned exactly what has been talked of here today, fixed assessment. Mr. Moore was strongly against it. He said: “No, this is not right, this is something that the province of Ontario has fought against for many years.” Subsequent to that I went to the managing director of the Windsor Chamber of Commerce, and again he gave me the same views: It would not be fair for the industries that we do have at the present time in the municipality, that have been paying the taxes for a number of years, that we should do this just because of the fact that we wanted to attract new industries.

I can well realize that what the hon. member for Lanark has said here this afternoon, that they put this to a vote of the people of that municipality. Certainly they voted in favour of it because it provided them with employment. But I can see that if this goes through, we are going to have municipalities fighting against each other and trying to attract industries, and they are going to use all means that they can possibly use. What we are going to have is chaos throughout the province. Therefore, I am against this type of legislation.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think in reviewing the matters incidental to this bill, that we have a few things we should just get in their proper perspective.

The point has been made that The Municipal Act was amended in 1961 and that is quite correct. Now, sir, in the case of the municipality involved in this particular bill, the representatives of the municipal council appeared before the committee on private bills this week and provided the committee with certain evidence. It was quite obvious that negotiations had been entered into long before there was a bill presented to the Legislature to amend The Municipal Act legislation respecting fixed assessments.

The next thing which had to be established after that, before any other negotiations could take place, was to establish the amount of the assessment. That, I understand, was not established until the assessment was made when the plant was completed in the year 1963. Therefore, the matter of the three years delay, approximately, is not of import but it should be borne in mind that the amount of the assessment was not known until the assessor completed his roll in the year 1963 for taxation in 1964.

The word “subsidy” has been used, and we should bear in mind that the bill provides that the assessment is for an amount of $645,000, which is 50 per cent of the actual assessment of $1,290,000. Of course this bill will not have any bearing whatsoever on the taxation for school purposes or local improvements. So that the fixed assessment relates only to the general rate of taxation in the municipality. Then it is for a period of five years only. In the past, Mr. Speaker, fixed assessments were for much longer periods of time than that.

The electors were given the opportunity to vote against this and they voted in favour of it, in large majority. The fact is that all of these municipalities, irrespective of where they are, are always looking for new industry. We find great competition, even between provinces, for new industry. I know, and the hon. members know, of certain tax inducements that are made by other provinces with respect to matters of this kind.

Considering that if the industry was not established in Smith's Falls, the citizens would not be obtaining the value that it has through the economic development of the community and its surrounding area, therefore I would suggest that in fact there is great advantage to having this plant established there, because in five years' time the plant will be paying full taxes. In the meantime it is paying all the school taxes and local improvement rates, and only the general rate of taxation is being reduced by this bill.

So I would ask that the House approve of this, considering that we are assisting in supporting a municipal council which went into a deal with a company on an equitable and fair basis in accordance with the legislation in effect at that time, and that now we are confirming the arrangements that were made a few years ago.

Mr. Speaker: As many as are in favour of the motion will please say “aye”.

As many as are opposed, will please say “nay”.

In my opinion, the “ayes” have it.

Call in the members.

The motion was carried on the following division:

YEAS	NAYS
Allan	Belanger
Apps	Braithwaite
Auld	Bryden
Bales	Bukator

YEAS

Boyer
 Brunelle
 Butler
 Carruthers
 Carton
 Cass
 Cecile
 Cowling
 Davis
 Demers
 Dunlop
 Dymond
 Eagleson
 Edwards
 Evans
 Ewen
 Gomme
 Grossman
 Guindon
 Hamilton
 Harris
 Haskett
 Henderson
 Hodgson
 (Scarborough East)
 Hodgson
 (Victoria)
 Johnston
 (Carleton)
 Kerr
 Knox
 Lawrence
 (Russell)
 Lawrence
 (St. George)
 Letherby
 Lewis
 (Humber)
 Mackenzie
 MacNaughton
 Morningstar
 McKeough
 McNeil
 Noden
 Olde
 Peck
 Pittock
 Pritchard
 Randall
 Reilly
 Reuter
 Robarts
 Roberts
 Rollins
 Root
 Rowe
 Rowntree
 Sandercock
 Simonett
 Spooner

NAYS

Davison
 Farquhar
 Freeman
 Gaunt
 Gibson
 Gisborn
 Lewis
 (Scarborough West)
 MacDonald
 Newman
 Nixon
 Oliver
 Paterson
 Racine
 Singer
 Sopha
 Spence
 Trotter
 Troy
 Whicher
 Worton
 Young—25.

YEAS

Stewart
 Villeneuve
 Wardrope
 Wells
 White
 Whitney
 Wishart
 Yakabuski
 Yaremko—67.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the ayes are 67, the nays, 25.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.
 Second reading of the bill.

RIVERDALE HOSPITAL

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park) moves second reading of Bill No. Pr9, An Act respecting the Riverdale Hospital.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF BARRIE

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre) moves second reading of Bill No. Pr26, An Act respecting the city of Barrie.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

W. F. THOMAS FOUNDATION

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin) moves second reading of Bill No. Pr27, An Act respecting the W. F. Thomas Foundation.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF PETERBOROUGH

Mr. Cowling, in the absence of Mr. K. Brown (Peterborough), moves second reading of Bill No. Pr28, An Act respecting the city of Peterborough.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: Seventeenth order: House in committee of the whole House, Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

THE RECIPROCAL ENFORCEMENT OF MAINTENANCE ORDERS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 14, An Act to amend The Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 14 reported.

THE MAGISTRATES ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 15, An Act to amend The Magistrates Act.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, on section 3, perhaps the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) would tell us why this should be so. Why should the chief magistrate, who presumably, I take it, is going to be over all magistrates in the province, also be a senior magistrate for Toronto?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I might point out that there is great logic behind that particular enactment. There cannot be two bosses in any house and if we look at the coroner system at the present time, I think the hon. member would be well answered.

Sections 3 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 15 reported.

THE DEPARTMENT OF TRAVEL AND PUBLICITY ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 20, An Act to amend The Department of Travel and Publicity Act.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 20 reported.

THE TERRITORIAL DIVISION ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 33, An Act to amend The Territorial Division Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 33 reported.

CITY OF OWEN SOUND

House in committee on Bill No. Pr2, An Act respecting the city of Owen Sound.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill No. Pr2 reported.

HURON COLLEGE

House in committee on Bill No. Pr7, An Act respecting Huron College.

Sections 1 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill No. Pr7 reported.

ROSS MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

House in committee on Bill No. Pr20, An Act respecting the Ross Memorial Hospital.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill No. Pr20 reported.

MASONIC FOUNDATION OF ONTARIO

House in committee on Bill No. Pr22, An Act to incorporate the Masonic Foundation of Ontario.

Sections 1 to 17, inclusive, agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill No. Pr22 reported.

Hon. Mr. Cass moves that the committee rise and report certain bills without amendment and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain bills without amendment and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I would like to advise the hon. members that tomorrow and Friday the order of business will be as follows: We will finish the Throne Speech debate and then carry on with estimates which have been presented today, taking those—not necessarily in this order—of the Lieutenant-Governor, the Prime Minister, the Provincial Auditor, The Department of Insurance and The Department of Labour.

Hon. Mr. Cass moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

APPENDIX 1

OPERATING GRANTS AND CAPITAL CONSTRUCTION FUNDS FOR UNIVERSITIES, FISCAL YEAR 1964-65

	Operating Grants, etc.	Capital Construction Funds	Total
	$000s	$000s	$000s
University of Toronto	18,911	6,000	24,911
for Scarborough College and Erindale College	500	5,000	5,500
for Ontario College of Education	1,900	—	1,900
Queen's University	3,450	4,250	7,700
University of Western Ontario	4,000	4,250	8,250
for Ontario College of Education	120	—	120
McMaster University	3,300	4,900	8,200
University of Ottawa	1,275	1,200	2,475
Carleton University	1,775	4,250	6,025
University of Windsor	1,575	5,200	6,775
University of Waterloo	2,450	5,000	7,450
Lakehead College of Arts, Science and Technology ..	315	800	1,115
Ontario College of Art	260	—	260
York University	1,300	8,000	9,300
Laurentian University of Sudbury	690	2,000	2,690
Osgoode Hall Law School	150	—	150
Trent University	425	500	925
Brock University	350	1,250	1,600
University of Guelph	200	1,000	1,200
Ontario Graduate Fellowships	2,000	—	2,000
Special fund available to universities for temporary accommodation	2,000	—	2,000
Scholarship, Bursary and Loan Assistance Fund	750	—	750
TOTAL	$47,696	$53,600	$101,296

ERRATUM

Tuesday, February 11, 1964

Page	Col.	Line	Correction
542	1	20	Should read: of rating the capacity of boilers, compressors

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, February 13, 1964

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Thursday, February 13, 1964

Fourth report, standing committee on private bills, Mr. Gomme	597
Estimates, Office of the Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. Robarts	598
Estimates, Department of the Prime Minister, Mr. Robarts	598
Estimates, Office of the Provincial Auditor, Mr. Allan	598
Estimates, Department of Labour, Mr. Rowntree	601
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	625

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We welcome to the Legislature today, students from Oak Park Junior High School, Toronto and Buchanan Public School, Scarborough.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark) from the standing committee on private bills presented the committee's fourth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendments:

Bill No. Pr1, An Act respecting the town of Cochrane.

Bill No. Pr11, An Act respecting Westminster College.

Your committee would recommend that the fees less the penalties and the actual cost of printing be remitted on Bill No. Pr11, An Act respecting Westminster College.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned last night, I said that the order of proceedings today would be completion of the Throne debate, and when the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) adjourned that debate he had reached a stage in his speech where I, for one, was very interested in what he was going to say next. He was dealing with certain questions of federal-provincial relations and what steps might be taken. I feel that this is a very important subject and I think it is of great interest to all hon. members of the House to hear the views anyone here may have, from whatever party.

Unfortunately, today the hon. member for Sudbury has laryngitis. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that upon other occasions we might have welcomed such an event, but on this particular occasion we extend to him sympathy and we will not call that order until next Tuesday when we will complete the debate and put the government to the test of a vote of confidence at that time.

Now just one moment. Before we call the orders of the day, the hon. Attorney General has a statement to make.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): The hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) asked me on January 16 if I would:

conduct appropriate inquiries into and report to this House on allegations that three drivers picketing in front of the Parliament buildings yesterday, after having complied with a request to move to a spot where they would not be in the way, were ordered by a police inspector to leave the area altogether and were subjected to physical violence.

In reply to the hon. member's question I stated that:

I was very pleased to answer this question in the affirmative and I had already been in touch with the chairman of the board of commissioners of police for Metropolitan Toronto requesting that there be a full inquiry and report to me.

I have now received a letter from the chairman of the board of commissioners of police outlining the action taken and I now table it for the consideration of the House.

February 10, 1964

ATTORNEY GENERAL F. M. CASS,
PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS,
TORONTO.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL:

In reply to your telephone request and your subsequent letter with respect to allegations made that three picketing taxi drivers had been submitted to rough treatment by a police inspector in front of the Parliament buildings at Queen's Park, I forward a copy of the report which I prepared and submitted to the members of the board of commissioners of police at its meeting held on February 6, 1964.

The board unanimously concurred in the opinion expressed in the last paragraph of the report, that it does not appear any further action is required in view of the circumstances outlined.

Hoping that this may be the information you desire, I am

Yours very truly,
(Signed)
CHARLES O. BICK
Commissioner.

(Enclosure)

February 6, 1964

MEMBERS,
BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF POLICE,
MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO.

GENTLEMEN:

I am in receipt of a letter from the Attorney General requesting a report on the incident which took place in front of the Parliament buildings on January 15, when three taxi drivers claimed they had received rough treatment from a police inspector.

This incident took place at a time when His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario was proceeding in a horse-drawn carriage to open the Session of the Legislature. Three taxi drivers who had been parading around Queen's Park with sandwich boards protesting the actions of the Metropolitan Licensing Commission in raising the licence renewal fees, were asked to leave the area. Following this it was claimed that the police inspector identified as Inspector George Dorkin, had sworn at them and kicked them.

Newspaper reports on Thursday, January 16, stated that the president of the Independent Cab Owners' Guild, Mr. Gordon Hunt, was demanding an apology and had "placed the matter in the hands of our solicitor, Joseph C. Cain". A member of the provincial Legislature asked for an explanation from the Honourable the Attorney General.

To this date there has been not only no complaint registered by the Independent Cab Owners' Guild or its solicitor, but in a letter received in the office of the Chief of Police on January 23, signed by Gordon Hunt, president of the Independent Cab Owners' Guild, and also by Walter Horbulyk, the undernoted is the last paragraph:

May we extend our sincere appreciation to you for the special co-operation extended to the taxi owners by the police department during our recent (protest) demonstration concerning the increased taxi licence fees. Many thanks.

Accompanied by Mr. Sadoff of the Diamond Taxi Cab Company, Mr. Frank Regan, one of the drivers involved, attended my office on January 21, and complained that he had been forcibly ejected from the location he had taken up while picketing, and during this time was kicked by Inspector George Dorkin. He further stated that no other driver could have been roughly treated in any degree since he was the last in a line leaving the area, and that he would be willing to attend in my office at a meeting with Inspector Dorkin, and any others. An appointment was made for Monday, January 27, at which time the Chief of Police, Staff Inspector Adamson, Inspector Dorkin, Mr. Frank Regan, the secretary and chairman of the commission were in attendance.

Mr. Regan detailed his version of the incident and the events leading up to the mass demonstration. He stated that he and two other taxi drivers had not joined their fellows at the CNE grounds to participate in the cavalcade of cars but had gone directly to the front of the Parliament buildings and had paraded with sandwich boards from about one o'clock. He expressed the view that he was surprised when he saw how many taxi cabs appeared, and was concerned when he saw them commence to ring the area with a moving flow of traffic. Although they had previously been advised by police on the scene that they must in no way interfere he stated that Inspector Dorkin, arriving on the scene to clear the traffic for the Lieutenant-Governor, ordered them to move, then grabbed him by the shoulder, turned him around, stepped on his heels and eventually kicked him as they were leaving the area to remove the sandwich boards. The profanity used was claimed to be "get the hell out of here" followed by "you're damned right you are" after the drivers had stated they were going to move.

Inspector Dorkin and Staff Inspector Adamson, arriving at the intersection of College Street and Queen's Park Crescent, found the Lieutenant-Governor's way blocked by a circling moving stream of taxis; had immediately taken steps to stop this, and Inspector Dorkin, hurrying to the front of the building, saw the three men with sandwich boards supporting the mass protest. Apprehensive that they might cause trouble when the Lieutenant-Governor's carriage came up to the entrance, he ordered them from the scene and when they appeared to hesitate, grabbed the sandwich board which Mr. Regan was wearing, turned them around and followed them a short distance to make sure they left. Inspector Dorkin frankly admitted turning the man about, but emphatically denied that he had either stepped on his heels, kicked or sworn at any of them.

After hearing both sides of the story, I am of the opinion that in the haste to straighten out what promised to be an extremely embarrassing situation not only to the Lieutenant-Governor, but the members of the Legislature and the guests and onlookers, Inspector Dorkin did attempt to clear out quickly a further possible source of difficulty. I do not believe that he kicked Mr. Regan or swore at him. It is quite possible that in the rush he may inadvertently have stepped on Regan's heels, and I think this did occur. I am sure however, that this was not either malicious or deliberate.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Mr. Regan expressed his thanks for the opportunity of having been heard, and shook hands with all present. In view of the fact that the president of the Taxi Cab Owners' Guild has expressed in writing his appreciation of the police action in this demonstration, it does not appear that any further action is required.

Yours very truly,
(Signed)
CHARLES O. BICK
Chairman.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Thirty-third order: House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, OFFICE OF LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR

Vote 1201 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Vote 1501 agreed to.

Vote 1502 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, OFFICE OF PROVINCIAL AUDITOR

On vote 1601:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, while we are on the vote of the provincial auditor, I wonder if someone on behalf of the government would indicate when it is intended that the public accounts committee will be called together.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I will have a statement to make about that committee either tomorrow or Monday.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman, before proceeding with these, in view of the fact that we now have a new provincial auditor, I would like to make a brief statement.

Mr. George Spence, the present provincial auditor, succeeds Harvey Cotnam, and did succeed him in this post on November 28 last. Mr. Cotnam served this province in this House for 26 years as provincial auditor in a most faithful and outstanding manner.

His tenure of office extended over the administrations of seven Prime Ministers and five Provincial Treasurers and his 26 years in office was longer than any other auditor. He will be greatly missed by his friends in this House.

Mr. Spence is a fellow of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario and has been in the public service for 25 years. He has held the post of assistant provincial auditor since 1941. I am sure we all wish him well in his new responsible position.

The provincial auditor occupies a unique position of independence and impartiality within the provincial administration. His primary duty is to audit and report on the conduct of the business of government on behalf of the elected representatives of the people and his objectivity is buttressed by the statutory provisions assuring him tenure of office.

In day-to-day operations, Mr. Chairman, the provincial auditor carries on a continuous examination of all expenditures from the consolidated revenue fund and in doing so countersigns all cheques and certifies that there are funds available and legislative authority for each such payment.

In addition, his staff is continually making audits of revenue account and records of the consolidated revenue fund. In addition to his duties in connection with the audit of the government's transactions, the provincial auditor conducts audits of such boards, commissions and Crown instrumentalities as may be required by various governing statutes and directives. The result of the operations for each fiscal year are set out in the public accounts which are prepared under his direction and delivered by him to the Lieutenant-Governor for presentation to the Assembly within the first ten days of the first session held in the following calendar year.

The auditor's report upon the accounts is appended to the balance sheet in the public accounts with reference to his formal report which takes the form of a separate publication entitled "The Provincial Auditor's Report". In his report the auditor endeavours to see that they may be readily studied and their full significance appreciated.

While he is required to report on the scope of his examination the Treasury board orders, of special warrants issued and other matters, he is also free to comment on whatever he may desire to bring to the attention of the assembly, a prerogative he has not hesitated to use and which forms a further checkpoint in our system of financial control and accountability.

The estimates of the provincial auditor show a modest increase of 7 per cent from those of the current year. As in previous years, I have informed the auditor that if more money is needed to ensure that government spending is checked as efficiently and thoroughly as possible then it would be made available. I am sure that this House would wish me to repeat this assurance, for after all he is an officer of the House and it is in the interest of all parties that his functions be performed in an entirely adequate manner.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that no hon. members of the House would begrudge the small increase in the appropriation for the provincial auditor's department. Indeed I imagine that the hon. Provincial Treasurer wishes that all departments could be conducted so economically. I am wondering, as a matter of fact, if perhaps the appropriation should not be still higher so that the functions of the auditor could be extended.

We have on previous occasions, either in the House or in the public accounts committee, discussed the proposition that the activities of the auditor, or the responsibilities of the auditor, be extended to cover all agencies of the government. It has been my impression in the past that the hon. Provincial Treasurer was inclined to agree with that point of view. I wonder if he could give us sort of a "rundown" now on the present situation; what agencies are there whose accounts are still not audited by the provincial auditor?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, a list of the boards, commissions, and other government agencies that are not audited by the provincial auditor are as follows: The accounts of the Supreme Court of Ontario, the official guardian, the public trustee—and I would like to inform the hon. members of the House that presently consideration is being given by the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) to the possibility of transferring this responsibility to the provincial auditor. These three that I have mentioned, plus the Teachers' Superannuation Commission, the Ontario Cancer Institute, the Ontario Municipal Employees' Retirement Board, the Ontario Research Foundation, the Soldiers' Aid Commission, the Workmen's Compensation Board, and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. The policy in this connection has been to gradually extend the responsibilities of the auditor to audit some of these outside boards and commissions, and these have been taken on gradually as staff was accumulated to discharge these duties.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, may I make a comment on the auditor's report, if it is in order? I would like to ask a question of the hon. Provincial Treasurer.

On page 19 of the auditor's report, there is a paragraph which says:

I again wish to stress the need for all departments to resist strongly the continuing rise in expenditures, and pressures for ever greater outlays. It is urgently required that departmental spending should be held within strict limits consistent with good government in order to achieve a surplus for debts retirement.

I was wondering whether the hon. Provincial Treasurer is going to accept the recommendation of his auditor, whom he was just praising, or is he going to continue as he suggested yesterday in his address—that he is going to spend these extra millions of dollars? What does he have an auditor for? I would like him to comment on that particular section, if he will.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I would like to advise the hon. member for Niagara Falls that we pay attention always to any comments that are made by the provincial auditor.

Mr. Bukator: My impression, Mr. Chairman, would be that the hon. Provincial Treasurer listens to his auditor and pays him, then does pretty well what he pleases.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, maybe the hon. Provincial Treasurer would say in what departments he has taken the suggestions of the auditor, and just where in this budget he has cut down spending as the provincial auditor suggests.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that there will be ample opportunity at another time to discuss the matter that has been raised by the—

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, there is no time like the present, and I would like to have the hon. Provincial Treasurer tell us now. This is the auditor's—

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I want to hear his good speech first.

Mr. Whicher: Whose speech?

Hon. Mr. Allan: The speech of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether we have here the report of the auditor for the fiscal year, 1962-63—under this comes the various departments of the province. I am wondering whether we should ask certain questions pertaining to these departments, and mentioned in this report, or whether they should be asked when the estimates of these various departments are presented?

I am looking at page 24, The Ontario Municipal Improvement Corporation Act and we have there an investment of $55,914,131. I have some questions to ask.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, if I could inform the hon. member with respect to this; this could be discussed, I think, very appropriately at the time the Provincial Treasurer's estimates are discussed.

Mr. Belanger: In other words, it would be better then if we were to discuss it under those departments when it comes up?

Hon. Mr. Allan: I would think so.

Mr. Belanger: What are we doing here this afternoon then? Are we just to say "okay" to what the hon. Provincial Treasurer wants to do—just adopt this thing—and that is it?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I think we are endeavouring to pass estimates which will provide funds for the provincial auditor to carry on his work for the coming year.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, in regard to the comments of the provincial auditor dealing with the teachers' superannuation fund. I am not going to repeat what he has written. What does the hon. Provincial Treasurer say about his comments?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I have read the comments of the provincial auditor with respect to the matter the hon. member mentions. And I would be the first to admit that this statement gives us a great deal of concern.

I would point out to the hon. members of the House that I have a committee of experts who are looking into fringe benefits with respect to the public service. I hope to have them extend their studies into our pension funds and into the teachers' superannuation pension fund. This particular situation is not an easy one to solve; or the problem that exists in connection with this situation is not an easy one to solve. The problem arises because of the very great increase in teachers' salaries over the last few years.

I would point out to the hon. members that, during the ten-year period of 1951 to 1961, the average rise in salary level was about 95 per cent for men teachers and 80 per cent for women teachers. As hon. members know, the basis of the teachers' superannuation fund, the basis of determining the pension payment, is the last ten years; that is two per cent each year for the average of their last ten years' salary. And so, as salaries have risen, pensions have increased with no contributions making up for the early payments which were at a much smaller rate. This is a very great problem and I want to assure the hon. members that we recognize it and we are giving it our most careful attention.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, that is what the hon. Provincial Treasurer said five years ago. I remember him giving the same speech: That it was a great problem, because it was brought up then, and at that time he used experts. I thought maybe today he would have a report.

Hon. Mr. Allan: No, the hon. member forgets—

Mr. Whicher: The problem presented by the auditor, whom the hon. Provincial Treasurer sticks up for, and I am sure all hon. members of the Legislature do, we expect an answer today.

Hon. Mr. Allan: And I will be delighted to give it to the hon. member as soon as I have it.

Mr. Whicher: When will that be?

Hon. Mr. Allan: As soon as I can arrange to get it. I am even more anxious than the hon. member to find the solution.

Vote 1601 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

On vote 1001:

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, in introducing and presenting the estimates for The Department of Labour for the coming year, I have some observations which I would like to make and which I hope will be of interest to you and to the hon. members of the House.

Less than one year ago, I outlined to the House a programme designed to gear the activities of The Department of Labour to the needs of our growing and changing society. I undertook to review the legislation and regulations administered by the department; to launch new programmes in a number of important areas; to create administrative machinery and recruit staff for the purpose of carrying out more effectively the vital responsibilities placed upon my department.

Today, Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to be able to give the House an accounting of the progress made toward the objectives I set for the department when my estimates were considered last year. At the same time, I propose to outline our objectives for the coming year as they relate to the 1964-65 estimates of the department.

Last April, the select committee on manpower training tabled its unanimous report. We have implemented those sections of the report that bear on The Department of Labour—the sections on apprenticeship—in the new Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act which is now before the House.

A thoroughgoing review was made of the old Factory, Shop and Office Building Act. The result of that work, which required many weeks of intensive study, stands on the order paper in the shape of the new Industrial Safety Act and the transfer of a number of provisions to The Hours of Work and Vacations With Pay Act.

Mr. Chairman, we reviewed The Industrial Standards Act and the report of Professor Bora Laskin on its scope and operation. The result is the most comprehensive reshaping of the Act since it was placed on the statute books almost 30 years ago.

The extremely complex field covered by The Operating Engineers Act was studied over many months by a technical committee appointed by my predecessor. Many of the recommendations of that committee have been incorporated into a completely rewritten Operating Engineers Act that was submitted to the House this week.

Once again, The Workmen's Compensation Act has been the subject of intensive study, and a bill making several important improvements in the Act will be presented shortly.

The legislation governing the relationships between unions and employers are the product of a gradual but steady evolution. I am sure that in general no hon. member of the House would deny its effectiveness in supporting free collective bargaining and maintaining an atmosphere of relative harmony and progress in the industrial life of this province.

On the other hand, The Labour Relations Act, by the very nature of its subject matter, and of the evolution to which I have referred, is a complicated statute. During the past year, I have undertaken a study of the Act to assess the possibilities of simplifying its procedures and expediting its operation.

Obviously, changes cannot be made lightly. Those balances which both sides recognize as ensuring fair treatment to all parties cannot be impaired. However, careful consideration has been given to the Act itself and to the viewpoints expressed by affected parties in more than a score of briefs and representations made to me personally and to the government over the past year, and I shall introduce within the next couple of weeks certain amendments which I believe will further my, and our, objectives.

During the past year, the regulations enacted under much of the legislation administered by the department have been carefully scrutinized. We have brought into operation new and modern safeguards for workers in compressed air and tunnelling operations, and in foundries.

At the last session, I undertook to introduce a comprehensive minimum wage programme, covering men as well as women, and including special provisions for construction workers as recommended by the Goldenberg report, all designed to prevent exploitation. The first stage of the programme was enforced in the Toronto-Hamilton area. I undertook, as well, to carry out complete studies of existing wage and working conditions in other parts of the province with a view to taking further steps in the minimum wage field. These are virtually concluded and I shall have more to say about our minimum wage plans in a few moments.

At the same time, Mr. Chairman, I told the House that we would establish a system providing for the payment of fair wages on government building contracts. Since October 15, when this measure took effect, we have placed schedules of fair wages in 110 contracts, providing an estimated 67,338 man-days of work.

May I turn now, Mr. Chairman, to our plans for the coming year?

At the outset, I must say that I agree wholeheartedly with the Opposition member who counselled me last year to the effect that legislation and regulations are "exercises in futility" unless they are properly enforced. The best measures mean nothing if they are not backed up with appropriate administrative machinery. It is for this reason that the 1964-65 estimates of the department call for a 15 per cent increase in spending over 1963-64. Altogether, the funds available to The Department of Labour for carrying out its vital responsibilities have increased by 30 per cent in the past two years.

Exactly two years ago, the personnel of the department totalled 386. The estimates before you today provide for a staff of 568, an increase of almost 50 per cent. The field staff, the officers who are directly involved on a day-to-day basis in the enforcement and administration of legislation, will number 236 as of April 1, 1964, which is more than a 50 per cent increase in the past two years. I do not include in this total the 14 conciliation officers whose task it is to deal with industrial disputes in all parts of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to apprenticeship: In line with the general recommendation of the select committee on manpower training that compulsory certification be applied to those trades which might benefit from it, we have introduced this measure in the barbering and airconditioning and refrigeration trades during the past year. I have already indicated to the House that compulsory certification will be extended as quickly as possible to the electrical, plumbing, steam-fitting, sheet metal and watch-making trades.

These programmes are being worked out in co-operation with, and on the basis of the advice of, representatives of employers and employees in the trades, and are designed in the main to increase the skill level of the trades to the point demanded by modern technology.

By way of explanation, I should point out to the House that under compulsory certification no person can practise in a particular trade without a certificate of qualification obtained by going through the apprenticeship system. I have also indicated that apprenticeship programmes are being offered for the first time in the following trades: (a) cooking; (b) iron working; (c) glaziers; (d) tool and die making; (e) cement finishing; (f) machinists; (g) moulders; (h) welders; (i) millwrights; (j) radio and TV repair; (k) dental technician; (l) heavy-duty repair.

These programmes will be operated on a voluntary basis and, in effect, they will assure the public that a tradesman holding a certificate in one of these trades has attained a certain level of competence.

New comprehensive regulations designed to promote higher standards in private hairdressing schools will be introduced as quickly as possible.

The private hairdressing schools constitute one route along which persons may travel to obtain certificates of qualification in the trade. The alternative route is a three-year on-the-job apprenticeship. Beginning next fall, classes will be held for the first time at the provincial institute of trades for hairdressing apprentices.

As a result of vigorous promotion and recruitment, the number of apprentices currently registered, Mr. Chairman, has reached an all-time high.

In December, alone, some 547 new apprentices were registered, almost one-quarter of the total new registration in the preceding fiscal year. Industry is showing a much greater interest in on-the-job training than ever before and the apprenticeship branch is working actively to develop training programmes in co-operation with industry.

Apprenticeship training does not occur, of course, until the individual concerned is employed. This, coupled with the research which will be done to determine the manpower needs of the trades, will assure that we do not train surplus tradesmen. On the other hand, pre-apprenticeship training is important in order to assist persons to enter employment and thereby undertake the regular apprenticeship programme.

In some of the trades, employers have been reluctant to employ persons as apprentices who had no knowledge of the particular trade. Efforts will be made to expand pre-apprenticeship training. This is now being done in the cooking and barbering trades and is proving to be most satisfactory and successful. At the same time, a system of credits for time spent in formal education will be developed and efforts will be made to secure more apprentices from the secondary school stream.

The department is also offering opportunities for tradesmen to upgrade themselves and keep abreast of present-day methods.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to conciliation: For a good many years, the topic of labour-management co-operation has been a popular subject of discussion but, sir, until fairly recently, it has been more a wish than a reality. Within the last couple of years, however, marked progress has been made in the development of a genuine atmosphere of co-operation. This has coincided with the growing number of top-level contacts between representatives of industrial management and trade unions, many of them sponsored by government in the form of seminars and conferences, such as the recent automation and social change conference and the department's Brockville area labour management workshop.

The growth of an atmosphere of co-operation does not mean that there will be no problems in reaching specific agreements in collective bargaining. Nor does it mean that strikes or lockouts will become things of the past. It does mean, though, that we can look forward to a growing understanding of the roles that can usefully be performed by labour and management in all their relationships, including those involved in increasing productivity and reducing costs and in arranging, through collective bargaining, for an ever-increasing standard of income, security and personal dignity.

In the final analysis, of course, the success or failure of collective bargaining rests with the parties. There is, I believe, a growing maturity of viewpoint in this regard on the part of both labour and management, and a recognition of the fact that The Department of Labour does not settle disputes. Disputes and strikes are only settled by the parties themselves.

The Department of Labour simply facilitates collective bargaining and the settlement of differences. Where there is no disposition on the part of either or both parties to agree, no agreement is possible.

Those who seek to make strikes and disputes into political issues are doing a disservice to both trade unions and employers, and are setting back the whole cause of free collective bargaining. I emphasize again that the responsibility for making collective bargaining work rests entirely with the parties directly affected by the particular issues. Any attempt by either party, or by third parties, to place that responsibility elsewhere is immature and irresponsible.

I am, of course, concerned that the assistance of the department provides by way of conciliation and mediation services should be both expeditious and skilful. Delays in the operation of conciliation machinery can be frustrating and provocative as far as the parties are concerned. Because collective bargaining is inevitably a long and complex process, a conciliation procedure which is anything but a mere formality may be a long process as well. Certainly, in the trend-setting cases, the parties are bound to take considerable time in negotiating complex agreements whose provisions are going to govern their relations for the next two or three years.

The number of cases handled by our conciliation officers increased 24 per cent last year over the previous year. In keeping with the trend over several years, 1964 will again see an increase in the volume of work. Moreover, negotiations will occur in 1964 in several major industries: automotive, steel, iron mining, electrical, gold and silver mining. Everything within our power will be done to facilitate the conclusion of these negotiations on an amicable and progressive basis.

I would like to tell the House that on January 28 Mr. Louis Fine retired as chief conciliation officer but has agreed to remain with the department in a consulting capacity.

Now with respect to labour standards: The section of the department whose responsibility it is to protect the workers of this province against exploitation, and to uphold standards of wages and other working conditions, is undergoing a major overhaul.

Hon. members will note that the funds provided for the labour standards branch, formerly the industry and labour board, have been virtually doubled. Provision is being made for a total field staff of 37, as compared with 12 in the last estimates, to enforce the minimum wage, hours of work and vacations with pay regulations, The Industrial Standards Act, and the fair wage on government contracts.

No longer will the department enforce these programmes on a complaint basis. Instead, spot checks and investigations of business establishments will be carried out on a regular and recurring basis throughout Ontario. This policy has already been implemented in the Toronto-Hamilton minimum wage zone. Last fall, for example, almost 3,000 eating establishments were canvassed in a special blitz; the requirements of the minimum wage and other programmes were explained to these establishments and violations were rectified. In some instances, it was necessary to institute prosecutions.

The existence of a special, fully qualified staff in the labour standards field means that other enforcement officers of the department, notably the factory inspectors, are freed to devote themselves entirely to inspecting and protecting the safety of persons in employment. With the labour standards workload removed from their shoulders, the number of man-hours—if I may use that impersonal term—which can be devoted to factory inspection is considerably increased and we have what is, in effect, a substantial expansion in the factory inspection staff.

I referred earlier to the subject of minimum wage. As I have pointed out, and as every hon. member of the House knows, on June 30, 1963, the new minimum wage programme went into effect in the Oshawa-Toronto-Hamilton area on the basis of a general order calling for $1 per hour for male employees and 85 cents per hour for female employees, scaling, with respect to the female employees, to $1 by March 31, 1964. The construction industry was covered by a minimum rate of $1.25 per hour.

I am pleased to be able to report to the House that this programme has been very satisfactory in its operation over the past seven months.

We find that the majority of employers are willing to comply with the various requirements of the orders and that violations are due in large part to lack of understanding. Collections of arrears of wages have amounted to several thousand dollars and, in some instances, it has been necessary to take court action.

It must be emphasized, of course, that the minimum wage is only a floor. It does not purport to be what is technically called a "fair wage". In Ontario, as in every other advanced jurisdiction where programmes of this sort are in operation, a minimum wage programme rests entirely on recognition of the fact that there exist pockets of exploitation, despite the operation of a system of collective bargaining covering a major segment of the work force.

A minimum wage floor, coupled with the schedules under The Industrial Standards Act, the fair wage requirements of government building contracts, and the collective agreements flowing from The Labour Relations Act, all combine to maintain wages and earnings at economic and relatively reasonable levels.

Prior to last summer, minimum wages in Ontario applied only to women. The orders enforced last June 30 constituted the first meaningful step in the direction of establishing a comprehensive programme for the whole province. At this time, I wish to advise the House that new orders are being written and that the pattern laid down in the June 30 orders will apply to the industrialized areas of the province. Our studies indicate that certain modifications will be required in this pattern for the enforcement of the orders in other less industrialized portions of Ontario. It is my intention to give the House a more detailed statement at a subsequent sitting.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, to refer briefly to the question of research. As I have indicated, the minimum wage programme is based on very extensive studies conducted over the past few months. The Department of Labour, with the co-operation of The Department of Economics and Development, established a special survey centre operating under the new Statistics Act. The centre undertook an extensive survey of wage rates paid by a cross-section of employers in all parts of Ontario. This survey was in two forms—a direct enumeration of 6,800 business operations with fewer than 15 employees, and a mail survey of approximately 4,000 larger establishments.

A sample survey of small firms has never been done before in Canada on such a large scale and by direct enumeration. The department decided to undertake this difficult operation because very little is known of the wage rates and hours of work in the smaller establishments. Nevertheless, these small enterprises are a very important part of retail trade, personal services, clothing industries and some sections of the textile industry—of industries likely to be most directly affected by legislation on wages, hours of work and working conditions.

So that the survey would be as objective and comprehensive as possible, we sought expert advice on sampling and survey methods and the designing of questionnaires. We drew on statistical and economic data provided by federal research departments and The Ontario Department of Economics and Development, to analyze the industrial structure of the province, trends of population, and developments in the labour force. It was important that the sample represent both the highly developed industrial areas and those outside the main centres of population. As you might imagine, the background analysis and development of the sampling design took a great deal of time and effort.

In the actual enumeration, we enjoyed excellent co-operation from employers across Ontario in answering the enumerators' questions and giving them access to their payrolls. I would like to take this opportunity to express our sincere thanks to the thousands of Ontario employers who assisted us in carrying out this study. Without their help, this whole programme would not have been possible.

Our surveys will provide the first complete picture not only of wage rates, but of other working conditions, including hours and vacations with pay. They provide an essential basis for the planning of future programmes by the government. But, more than that, they are bringing to light data which has not been available before and which will be invaluable to trade unions, employers and businessmen generally, in making their own plans for future courses of action. During the coming year, I expect that we will be able to publish data and analysis of our findings and thus make available to the public much valuable background information.

One of the important subjects with which our department is concerned is that of safety. Undoubtedly, the most vital of all programmes operated by the department lies in the area of safety. I am, of course, greatly concerned about the accident picture in the various industries of the province and about the fact that the vast majority of fatalities, on investigation, are attributed directly to some action or omission on the part of the deceased. In construction, where the total number of fatalities fluctuates from year to year, there is evidence of a steady downward trend in the accident frequency, yet this bears no direct relationship to the number of deaths.

As I have already indicated, we have attacked the safety problem over its entire front since January 1, 1963, with the following new legislation, amendments to existing legislation and new regulations, and I cite them: A new Boilers and Pressure Vessels Act; a new Industrial Safety Act; a new Operating Engineers Act; an amended Construction Safety Act; an amended Department of Labour Act; an amended Construction Hoists Act; new regulations covering compressed air and underground work; and new regulations covering foundries.

In the coming months, Mr. Chairman, with the bringing into force of The Industrial Safety Act, and as a continuation of this attack, we shall review or rewrite the regulations applying to: grain elevators; fire escapes; benzol and dust in factories; exits; sanitation and structural requirements; and construction safety.

Without vigorous enforcement, of course, these measures will not affect the situation. The estimates before the House provide for a total field staff of 155 to enforce and administer safety programmes. This is an increase of 40 in the past two years.

But enforcement is only one side. One of the most important aspects of this entire subject is education. Acting on recommendations from both the Labour Safety Council and the Workmen's Compensation Board, and with the concurrence of the various safety associations which operate under the aegis of the Workmen's Compensation Board, I asked the council, that is the Labour Safety Council, to undertake a study of the safety education picture in Ontario, with particular reference to the relationship between education and enforcement, and to recommend ways and means of dealing more effectively with the safety problem through the medium of education.

The amendments to The Workmen's Compensation Act, which I shall introduce shortly, will also serve to promote safety labour practices in industry and enable the board to direct more effectively, and in closer relationship, the various safety programmes.

During the past year, the following matters have been referred to the Labour Safety Council for consideration, comment and recommendations: foundry regulations; Construction Hoists Act; Loggers' Safety Act; underground regulations; ionizing radiation regulations; Industrial Safety Act; Operating Engineers Act.

I wish at this time to record our appreciation for the time and effort devoted to this cause by the council.

It will be apparent that any safety programme must enlist all of the strength and wisdom that can be brought to bear through the joint facilities of The Department of Labour, the Workmen's Compensation Board and its operations, the safety associations and the advice of the Labour Safety Council, made up as it is of well-known representatives from the field of labour and management.

My personal concern for the safety of workers in all the industries of the province prompted me to spend several days last November in northern Ontario to see at first hand the problems associated with the protection of persons engaged in logging operations. Since the passage of The Loggers' Safety Act, work has gone forward on the drafting of the regulations, and representations have been received and considered from many interested parties, the most recent being The Lumber and Sawmill Workers' Union on January 22.

Sir, I am pleased to be able to report to the House that the final draft of the regulations is being prepared jointly by my department and The Department of Lands and Forests. The Department of Lands and Forests will administer the legislation.

With respect to the engineering branch of our technical services division, that office checks all plans for factories, shops and office buildings to make sure that new construction conforms with safety requirements. In this current fiscal year, the number of plans examined will approximate 2,900, which compares with 2,517 last year and constitutes an all-time high. The total value of the projects involved in these plans is roughly $250 million, $50 million more than last year. This is indicative of sharp expansion in industry generally and a very high level of activity in the construction industry.

Under The Construction Safety Act, the direct responsibility for enforcement rests with the municipalities. Across Ontario, approximately 300 officers, appointed by the municipalities, are engaged in enforcement. The responsibility of the construction safety branch of the department is to guide and assist these officials. During the next few weeks, special training seminars will be held in eight centres with municipal inspectors.

Mr. Chairman, a word about the women's bureau: A year ago, I announced that we planned to establish a women's bureau within the department. This was done in September, with the appointment of the director of the bureau. My estimates now provide for the necessary supporting staff. The importance of these steps is readily apparent when one realizes that 30 per cent of our labour force are women and that one-third of all women over the age of 14 are in paid employment.

Through the efforts of the women's bureau a new policy guaranteeing equality of employment opportunity between men and women has been instituted in the civil service. The bureau, in co-operation with the Workmen's Compensation Board, has initiated a study of the incidence of compensable industrial accidents to working women.

Present information shows that more accidents happen to married women than to single women, while married women make up only half of the female labour force. We shall seek to determine the reasons for this situation and methods of improving it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: At the request of community groups and public and private welfare agencies, the women's bureau is examining questions relating to the demand for, supply of, and training required for homemakers and household assistants.

During the coming year, the bureau will develop contacts with industry in order to assess the contributions and the problems of women in the work force. The bureau will study the implications of traditional divisions of work between men and women in today's society. It will be actively engaged with the other branches of the department in studying and recommending measures designed to promote the welfare of women in employment throughout the province.

When at the last session, having just become Minister of Labour, I outlined to the House my objectives for the department during the next year, I made this statement:

In these days, it is imperative that The Department of Labour be outgoing . . . It will therefore be our aim, not to interfere, but to encourage, to assist and to advise . . . to keep the various areas of our industrial life under close observation so that the help that should be given, can be given, fully and effectively.

Mr. Chairman, this we have sought to do, and I have been more than encouraged by the response which this approach has engendered.

In every phase of its operations, The Department of Labour works with people. I emphasize both the word "with" and the word "people". This makes our task challenging but not necessarily predictable.

Last fall, the department co-sponsored the highly successful conference on automation and social change. In November, we invited labour, management and other interested parties to participate with us in a regional conference in Brockville to discuss problems of mutual concern. Similar conferences will be held in other parts of the province during the months ahead.

We have sought to involve persons interested in and affected by our programmes in consultations relating to the planning of improvements and the administration of these programmes. I cite as examples the series of discussions carried out by a small committee representing employers and employees in the construction industry and the special committee dealing with safety problems in the construction of Toronto's east-west subway.

We have sought during the year to take the public into our confidence with respect to our policies and programmes. We have carried out special education and publicity programmes designed to acquaint the people of Ontario with their rights and duties under the various pieces of legislation administered by the department. These efforts will continue on an accelerated basis.

Mr. Chairman, I have given you a very general report on the work done in my department in the past year, together with an outline of our plans for the coming fiscal year. This has not been by any means a complete picture of the past, the present or the future. That will come, of course, as we proceed to a detailed consideration of the estimates. They represent a substantial increase which, coupled with the enthusiasm of the staff of the department, will assist us in accomplishing the objectives for which the department exists. I ask your affirmative approval of the estimates now before the House.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few general remarks on the estimates.

I think we are all happy that something is being done about safety. It has been long overdue and it is now of course up to the hon. Minister to enforce the laws that were passed here about a year ago.

Now he has said the department is spending 30 per cent more than it was two years ago. I have not seen any prospect at the moment of the department being 30 per cent improved. But, at least, with the new funds available he certainly has the responsibility upon him to see to it that this legislation, especially in regard to safety, is enforced. There is no doubt about it, especially as pointed out in the McAndrew report, the safety legislation as it was on the books—even that which was on the books at that time and even though it was weak—even that weak legislation was not enforced. I will assure the hon. Minister through you, Mr. Chairman, that we on this side of the House are going to watch very closely how the safety programme goes on.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister in giving the report of his department ignored the most important issue that has taken place since he has become the Minister of his department and one of the most important issues facing labour and management here in the province of Ontario. It is symbolized in the way the hospital employees have been treated—it came to a head in the Trenton hospital situation. I am surprised the hon. Minister had nothing to say. Perhaps he and the whole government are embarrassed with the way this matter was handled.

But it is symbolic of what is wrong with labour-management relations, not only in the province, but in this case as the result of the leadership the government is giving, or is not giving.

The hon. Minister said in his remarks: "In the final analysis, success of collective bargaining rests with the parties. The Labour Department simply facilitates—" And then he went on to say: "We should not make political issues out of these things."

I believe that was the content of his remarks.

Well, this is true to a point, Mr. Chairman. The success of labour negotiations does rest with the parties, but the hon. Minister's view leaves no role for the government in case these negotiations break down, or some party refuses to bargain as they should. I know there is a law where a company can be prosecuted for refusing to bargain in good faith, but this does not always work for the protection of the unions, and more especially for the public.

This is one of the big issues of our times, Mr. Chairman, it is this: there are in many cases strong unions that can take care of themselves, and there are strong powerful companies that can take care of themselves and if these two come to an impasse, it is more or less "the public be darned".

The public are not going to take this any more. I say to the hon. Minister through you, Mr. Chairman, it is time The Department of Labour saw to it that more leadership was given in protecting the public.

Again this is all symbolized in the matter of the hospital employees. I just want to mention a few of the things, because here we have a good example. The hon. Minister talked about good faith in bargaining and yet we have a situation here where the government, another department of the government, was responsible in interfering to a very great extent—and it is still interfering—with good faith in bargaining between a union and in this case the hospital boards.

The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) the other day got up and gave a statement, trying to answer my charges. I know, sir, that the hon. Minister of Labour has not even tried to. Even in the answer of the hon. Minister of Health—and I want to assure you, Mr. Chairman, this is not a health matter, it has to do with employees in a hospital and more specifically has to do with section 32 of the recommendations of the select committee on labour that came out in 1958.

We have had here a situation in our hospitals where the employees have been unable to bargain. They have been unable to bargain because I claim—and I believe rightly and I think the conciliation report bears me out—because the hospital board had just said: "We refuse to bargain" or bring up such ridiculous matters and items that it makes it impossible to bargain. It is with this situation that the hon. Minister has not come to grips. How could the hon. Minister of Labour expect private firms to negotiate in good faith when this very government itself is probably the worst offender of good faith in bargaining relations?

I went into some detail the other day in pointing out how the hon. Minister of Labour has promised the building employees services union that if a certain strike in Trenton was not settled by the time the Legislature was called, he would bring in special legislation.

Of course, the strike was called off in Trenton. They expected this special legislation passed October 29. When it did not come through then the strike went on.

It has put the hon. Minister of Labour in an embarrassing situation. He was not present in the House at the time I was talking, but it has done two things, which I will relate to the hon. Minister of Labour. Some of the men in the union believe that they were deliberately tricked by the hon. Minister. And I said before that I do not believe he did that.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I take exception to those remarks because there was no element of trickery. Now this is a matter of personal privilege. This was dealt with in the House, Mr. Chairman, when a complete and full statement was made.

The other point I would like—

Mr. Trotter: I got a statement—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: —to mention, Mr. Chairman, is that there is a committee, appointed under The Public Inquiries Act with judicial powers, presently sitting on this subject.

Mr. Trotter: Oh, nonsense! The hon. Minister cannot—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I was just pointing out that this was before the House—

Mr. Trotter: No, do not hide behind that. The hon. Minister should not try to hide behind that. What went on in Trenton was a shame and the hon. Minister must not try to hide behind that.

I am saying this, Mr. Chairman, that these employees, many of them, think that they were tricked by the hon. Minister of Labour, I am not saying that they were tricked. But certainly he has given this impression to the employees and he is going to have a difficult time in the future trying to impress the rank and file of labour that they can deal with him in good faith.

I am sure what really happened is that this government here deliberately pulled the carpet from under the hon. Minister of Labour. His big problem today is that the mossback views of the hon. Minister of Health on labour hang like an albatross around his neck. Certainly even in the hon. Minister's statement, they were borne out. The hon. Minister of Health came into the House and he tried to give a statement; excusing, saying that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission had done nothing to interfere.

Just to give you an example how the Ontario Hospital Services Commission interferes with the bargaining relations with employees in the hospitals: as long ago as March of 1961 the OHSC sent out a letter telling all the hospitals that they could not allow in their expenses anything more, in the cost for premiums for hospitalization for employees more than 50 per cent of the cost of a premium for a single person. And the same held for PSI.

In other words, even if a union wanted to come to a hospital board and bargain and say: "We want 100 per cent coverage"—just like any other employees are free to bargain—the Ontario Hospital Services Commission said: "No, the hospital cannot grant that".

I say to you that if the hon. Minister of Labour was not aware that such a regulation or letter was in force, I think he had better see the hon. Minister of Health to see if something cannot be done for these employees in the hospitals.

To give you another example of how the OHSC is used, as I say, as an arm to break a strike: the hospital in Trenton was promised funds over its budget, if it needed, to fight the strike. The hon. Minister of Health came into this House and said: "No, all we wanted to do was appoint an inspector, all we wanted to do was see that the patients were taken care of and that the hospital was in good shape."

Well, you know, the hon. Minister of Health should read that good Tory paper, the Toronto Telegram, because the hon. Minister of Health seems to think that everything was well at the hospital even as to standards. In an article by Ronald Lawrence in the Toronto Telegram on December 3, 1963, he went on at some length dealing with the staff accusing the hospital of abuse and filth.

Again, when there was supposed to be an inspector from The Department of Health to look over the hospital to see that the patients were being properly served, that very same man, that inspector, when interviewed by this reporter, Ronald Lawrence, said: "I'm not in there to look around". He was just going down to check on the strike.

I say that this is interference by government in a strike, an important strike, and it is in bad faith. I just want to give one quotation from a conciliation board that was appointed by this government. As the hon. Minister of Labour may know, Trevor R.

Smith was the chairman and he had gone on to tell of the success he had dealing with other hospital boards, and he says this about that hospital:

The chairman found the attitude of the hospital to be one of non co-operation and immediately prior to the final breakdown at mediation attempts, the chairman had succeeded in bringing together the counsel for the hospital, the international vice-president of the union and himself in a room apart with a view to solving language difficulties. The union had brought a secretary to Trenton to be present should any typing be required.

The chairman suggested an amended clause in a section in dispute and both representatives agreed that the amendment would be successful. And then the union committee welcomed the fact that one more hurdle had been overcome. The hospital board seemed to panic at the prospect of an agreement coming closer.

And then they concluded

It is therefore the duty of this board to report that any and all attempts to mediate were met by the union with a desire to compromise and adjust, while the attempts to mediate were met by the hospital with an unwillingness to assist.

Well now, this is important to the public and is certainly important to labour relations here in the province of Ontario, for this reason. There are instances where it would be disastrous to the public to have a strike. And this puts labour in a most difficult position, because the only really strong weapon the labour union has is its right to strike. If it cannot hold back its labour, its main gun, its main cannon, is plugged.

And here is a union, this particular union, which has come forward and said: "We realize we are dealing in a most peculiar industry, we are willing to give up our right to strike, we will accept section 32 of the select committee on labour." And as the hon. members here will recall, that the section is as follows:

The committee is of the opinion that any interruption of hospital service involving the care of sick people is undesirable.

And it goes on and says

Matters of dispute of this kind should be referred to a board of conciliation and in order to ensure that there shall be no stoppage of work, the report of such board of conciliation shall be accepted as final and binding by both parties.

Well now, there are many phases in industrial relations that are with us now and will probably be in the future in which we are going to say that strikes are undesirable from the public point of view. A labour union may have a legitimate claim, but it would not be fair to the public to cause chaos. The company may have a legitimate claim against the union, but it would not be fair to the public to strike. There is going to have to be a sphere where the decision of arbitration boards are going to have to be accepted as final. But in order to bring this about, in order to get co-operation of labour, labour is going to have to be able to trust, especially The Department of Labour and the government in power, because this is something that is needed. Here you have a situation where the government had a tremendous opportunity with a union going out of its way to co-operate.

When I read the different reports that have gone on pertaining to the strike in Trenton, time and time again the various officers concerned report on the co-operation of a union. And so what happens? They were undoubtedly double-crossed.

That is why I said the hon. Minister missed his opportunity. And possibly had he said to the Cabinet: "If you are going to reverse my decision, I quit"; that would have been the thing for him to do. But instead of that, he has had to cover up for a very Tory administration and, unfortunately, I feel that this instance has set back labour-management relations a number of years, simply because rank-and-file labour in the union feel they have been double-crossed. Who are they to believe? Why should they give up the one strong weapon that they have?

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister of Health tried to point out he was in no way interfering nor the hospital giving any extra benefits to strike breakers. I had alleged that the strike breakers were being paid by this hospital in Trenton, $30 to $40 a month more than those going on strike, and he said this was not true. But they were hiring the new people who came in, and they were hiring them at the top price. The scale of wages starts at the hospital at $130 a month, and finally reaches $170. If you wanted a job to help break that strike, they did not hire you at $130 a month, they hired you at $170. You went in at the top, and this is a fact. They can tell you this.

To give another example, they had registered nurses who were paid $1.75 an hour doing the work of nurses' aides. All these things helped, of course, to break the strike, and the OHSC could have stopped it if they wished.

But then the hon. Minister of Health came in and said that now the strike was over they were going to pay off those who had been hired since the strike started; and this is what they got.

In lieu of notice to these employees who were engaged at the time the strike commenced—now I am reading from the hon. Minister of Health's statement:

—the hospital has made them an accepted offer to pay to each, on the termination of their employment, a severance pay equivalent to two weeks' salary plus two days' vacation pay per month of work.

You know that is like 24 days' holiday per year. The union, when bargaining, cannot get three weeks' holidays for those people who have worked at that hospital five years, but be one of the scab labour and you get 24 days' holidays. This is being done through the OHSC.

I know some like to say that the hospitals are private corporations. All right, they have a charter and all this type of thing and, technically, it might be quite private, but a hospital is, in essence, a public institution. It is supported by gifts of the people. It gets grants from government. It is, in essence, a public utility and this public utility in this instance is not only being used as a strike-breaking weapon but, what is worse still, and this is why I re-emphasize this entire matter again, it is the principle of the thing, that where faith is needed so much today in good government policy we find government itself the worst offender. It is time they cleaned themselves up over there to see to it that, not just necessarily in the new laws—perhaps in bringing in section 33 of the select committee of labour relations—they at least show good faith.

That is what the government over there lacks. The hon. Minister of Labour has either become the willing victim, or has stepped into the trap, for he has become the symbol of the bad faith of the government in labour relations here in the province of Ontario today.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to mention two or three items very briefly, and one is this: The hon. Minister, I know, is very pleased about his dollar per hour minimum wage. We in this party said in the last House, and said during the campaign and say again, that we believe there should be $1.25 per hour across the board for both men and women, equal pay for equal work; because the way that the hon. Minister of Labour began the special minimum wage law they were disobeying their own Bill of Rights. They treated women in a secondary capacity with their 85 cents an hour. Now they say that they are working on improving that, but they are not too speedy.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You did not listen to what I said.

Mr. Trotter: I know you are working on it—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: March 31.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, I know but when we were in a committee one time it was going to be six months, and it is well over six months. I remember that quite well, when this was going to be done—in the committee, six months. I do not know how many months. It is well over six. But you can expect that they will sort of milk the announcement and bring it through eventually, but there is still a long way to go and it is pretty difficult for someone even today to live on $1 per hour.

There is another thing of which the worker is a victim, and I think that it is up to the government to do something. I know that the government feels that maybe they should sit back and just let these companies and unions bargain; but this is the problem and it has been brought up before and I will just repeat it again to let you know we have not forgotten about it. There are really two problems in one.

One is the question of these companies which change their ownership. You know, if you really want to break a union contract legally, it is quite easy to do so, simply by creating a new company, pulling a few legal switches; and you can break the contract with the new ownership of the company. The company is now owned by somebody else. It is time that we cleaned this up; that if a company changes hands, if a business is bought over by a new company, that new company should be bound by the collective agreement. This is a great need in our law, that the change should be made.

The other is, as we mentioned before, the runaway companies. Just get a few miles out of the zone. This is one of the weaknesses of our Acts. We draw up The Industrial Standards Act which only comes within a certain area. It is within a certain zone, and if a company decides it wants to get from under that Act it just moves out of the zone.

We have had that happen in the Toronto area in the last year in a fairly large way, one company especially, and the only way we are going to stop that is by making our Acts cover all of the province, certainly where industry is in Ontario. Today there is not much difference between the Markham area and this city we are now in, but it is still possible, if you want to get out of an agreement or get from under certain Acts, to move your factory from the east end of Toronto up to Markham and flout the workers in the face, no matter how many years they have been working for you. It is a situation that people have to live with.

In my own riding, Mr. Chairman, the Gutta Percha plant had operated for years. I know of people, of individuals, who had worked there for 40 years when that company was bought up by another, larger firm. Gutta Percha was closed down and the people who had worked there for 40 years had no pension, no rights, no nothing; and certainly, if government is going to be respected by the workers, it is up to us that we see to it that there is protection given to the worker against this happening to these firms.

I do wish, Mr. Chairman, that the government, if it is going to spend huge sums of money on advertising such as putting the face of various animals from the zoo on billboards, spend its money possibly in encouraging people, or starting some programme of encouraging employers to hire people over the age of 40. This is a tremendous problem with us, and this government is really doing nothing.

I know they give these patronage contracts out to advertise their trade crusade; maybe they could, now the election is over, pass out their patronage. I do not approve of the patronage, but seeing they are doing it they might do some public good if they gave some of their advertising and printing contracts out to do work that seeks to encourage people to employ those over the age of 40; because I have more people call at my office looking for jobs and saying, "I can't get work because I'm over 40." The provincial government here is not very helpful in that matter. It needs this type of thing, Mr. Chairman; this government has got a long way to go.

Finally, I would just like to say one thing about the construction industry, and safety in the construction industry. I think one of the two weaknesses in construction safety is this: The local safety officers are employed by local councils, and in these small municipalities a local safety officer is subject, can be subject, to much more pressure than if he was a man who was employed directly from Queen's Park. Today, to be a safety officer,

I say, takes considerable training, and I think that this Department of Labour, Mr. Chairman, can do that training and do the supervising and the hiring of these men far better than the local municipalities. What happens when one of the contractors is a friend of the local reeve or the local mayor? It is pretty hard to enforce regulations, then. True, the law might be there, but in practice it is hard to enforce regulations. Well, if the province—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You do not have much faith in the local councils.

Mr. Trotter: Well, if the province of Ontario had had a bit more authority in that respect, I think it would cut down the accidents in some of these areas. And then, too, the construction safety association; I think it must have been collecting dues somewhere in the area of $800,000—maybe it is more—from its members. I believe each of the companies kicks in about 50 cents for every $100 of wages it pays.

But this construction safety association is entirely oriented towards the employers, and if the government needed money to enforce the safety regulations this is one way to get it. Instead of the construction safety association paying their fees—I believe about two per cent of their assessment into the association goes to the safety field. If this money was paid into a safety fund operated by the government, much of the needed money would be obtained to finance what I believe is needed, and that is stronger and more thorough inspections. The only way you are going to do it is going to require money, centralization and training. But it is up to the department to do it and, with the energy that the department is showing in this line recently, I believe it can do it.

But it is the enforcement—you have got the legislation. I would suggest that if the construction safety association was paid in the form of some kind of assessment to the government, then those funds could be used far better by the present administration than by a group which is entirely oriented toward the employers. With that I sit down. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister referred in his early remarks to the fine service given to this province in the labour relations field by the chief conciliation officer in The Department of Labour of Ontario. I think that it is appropriate that I would bring to the attention of the House the fact that Mr. Fine is with us today, sitting to the right of the Speaker's chair. I do this, sir, because I have had the opportunity for many years to work with Mr. Fine in the labour relations field. I have always felt, in several sets of negotiations, that he was most fair and stern in his methods of bringing the parties together. He had a special technique of bringing the parties together when situations seemed almost impossible. I am sure that he has made a great contribution to the field of labour relations in this province and his record is going to be hard to equal.

Mr. Chairman, I have had the opportunity in the past eight years to rise in the House during The Department of Labour estimates and offer criticism to the Minister and to the government for their failure to give the kind of attention to the labour problems in this province that I felt should be given. I feel that today the criticisms are still just as valid, although one could not say that they were compounded because we have had some moves made by the hon. Minister for which we congratulate him; I am not going to repeat the criticisms of the past—it is something like flogging a dead horse—so I will deal with just a few items that I think are of importance in this field today.

Of course, we were happy to see a move made in regard to The Industrial Safety Act, The Industrial Standards Act, and now The Operating Engineers Act. One cannot say how happy we are with them because this type of Act and legislation can only be really dealt with as to their effectiveness in the due process of time, depending on the administration and enforcement. But we must say that the reasons we have these amendments to these particular Acts before us, of course, were developed by what one might consider crisis in regard to the problem.

Certainly, we all know that the problem of construction, and industrial workers being injured and maimed in the industry, made the public rise up and demand some attention in these fields; and I am sure that I, our party, and all hon. members hope, that the legislation will do the job it was intended to do—that is, protect the workers in their line of work so that they can work and enjoy the fruits of their labours in good health.

Mr. Chairman, I have said more than once in this House that I did not always want to deal with the particular happenings in the province in regard to the trade union movement, but I would like to deal with what I consider one of the major failures of the government of the day—and I feel that it is a failure of the present hon. Minister—and that is to give full recognition to the organizing of the unorganized into unions of their choice. When I say this, the hon. Minister might say that he agrees with me, or he has done this, but I think we have to make it a little more plain. We have to go on record as a government, sir, as members of the Legislature, that we encourage the unorganized to get into unions of their choice so that they can collectively bargain with the employer for their wages and their conditions. And I think the reason we have not got this attitude, this straightforward approach, this belief from the government, is in their continued refusal to encroach at any time in the least way on the managerial, or the so-called managerial, rights of the industry.

Some of the biggest problems we are having, without getting into details of happenings in regard to collective agreements, is the organizing of the unorganized, the obstacles that are in the way, the problems we find when they are certified, the failure to bargain in good faith. And I would remind the House that I dealt with this subject, bargaining in good faith, at some length in the last session of the House and hoped that we might have received from the government a move in this direction.

In clarification of what we mean, a definition of what we mean by "bargaining in good faith", I would suggest that the hon. Minister look at the clause we have in The Labour Relations Act at the present time which states that the union and management must bargain in good faith and make every reasonable effort to bring about a settlement.

I would raise this question because we had a case in the courts in Hamilton between the glassworkers' union and the glass company, where the office workers were certified and the company just refused to bargain in what we term is good faith.

The union obtained the right to prosecute in the magistrate's court and their case was thrown out because, I feel sure, of a lack of a definition and a lack of the magistrate being able to make up his mind what was meant by "bargaining in good faith". They appealed and took it to the county court and, I believe, they still have the matter before the court. It has been adjourned. The judge did make a public statement which accentuates what I would like to put before the House inasmuch as the clause in The Labour Relations Act cannot be separated.

What we have found in the past is that the clause itself, section 12, is used in two parts. All management looks at is the portion that says the parties shall bargain in good faith. That is where they stop, and they can give the flimsiest argument as to proof that they have bargained in good faith.

The judge said in his brief comments that the two sections, bargaining in good faith and making every reasonable effort to bring about a settlement, were indivisible. He had to look at it in this light and I am hoping that something will come out of it. But I feel that the hon. Minister should try to bring in some definition that could be used in a much better manner in regard to this problem.

I would make another suggestion with regard to the Act, and that is with regard to section 50 which provides that an employer shall not discharge an employee for union activities. At the present time when this section is used, it is my understanding, they get the right to prosecute and go before the courts and charge management with unfair dismissal. The onus is upon the union to prove that management did dismiss them without just cause and did dismiss them for union activities.

I think that we should just reverse the intent of the section and have implied there that the onus should be upon the management to prove that they did not discharge them for union activities. I feel that we would have more success, not in cases in the courts, but I think it would deter management from dismissing employees when they are dealing in union activities. If they had some onus on themselves they would cease doing it and we would have that problem cleared up.

Mr. Chairman, one of the problems we are facing today is, as I have mentioned, the problem of the union getting a contract once they are certified. I find that this is in the area where there are anti-union, hard-headed employers. I have suggestions to make that may get us over this first hump, that is where they will sit down and recognize them and the bargaining will proceed in an orderly fashion to the successful bringing about of a collective agreement. I think that we should put into The Labour Relations Act some model legislation.

First, I would say, high on the priority list, and I would say that this is one of the areas that management balk at most strongly if they do not wish to recognize the unions, and that is union security. Certainly the demand for it, the reason, has been well presented to this government, particularly by the select committee studying labour matters in this province, and by the unions. It is recognized, strongly recognized, by the type of employer who believes in his employee having a union.

Most of the reasonable employers in the country do not hesitate, as soon as the union is recognized and certified. These things are given without argument and taken for granted. First they get the arbitration clause, which is mandatory; they get seniority clauses; then they get their union security clause and then they sit down to the real fight of deciding what kind of wages and what kind of fringe benefits they are going to receive.

But when we find an anti-union employer, he balks from the start right on the very fundamentals which should be allowed, that is union security. Certainly if they are going to recognize them as certified they should agree at least that they will help the union run its financial affairs in an orderly manner. There seems to be no excuse that they should say: No, we will not entertain union security.

I would refer to the statements of the Minister for Natural Resources in Quebec, hon. René Levesque. I am sure that the hon. Minister of Labour himself read the letter from the president of the Ontario Federation of Labour pointing this out—the support for a union security clause. Of course, when we talk about government implementing a union security clause, I think we mean as a minimum the voluntary irrevocable check-off so that the unions can collect their dues in an orderly manner and carry on their financial administration properly. Hon. Mr. Levesque says this:

For a long time this security in the form of a voluntary check-off has been admitted in all big industries except the non-ferrous mines which find themselves in the orbit of the powerful empire of Noranda Mines. There, no matter what the length or cost of numerous conflicts and the permanent uneasiness which result, union security has always been systematically refused.

I would put on record what he stated at another time and which was reproduced in the letter to the hon. Minister from the president of the Ontario Federation of Labour, and I quote Mr. Levesque:

I believe that I would be betraying the workers of Quebec, and even the programme of this government, if I did not say that such an attitude of management opposition to voluntary check-off is socially retrograde, economically dangerous and one that one way or another must be ended.

Now I was a little disappointed not to hear the hon. Minister refer to some of the legislation that he himself had part in recommending in the report of the labour committee some years ago, because I think this is fundamental to clearing up the real problem of getting collective bargaining on the way in the individual shops. If we had a model clause covering seniority, a model clause covering a minimum of union security, then I do not think we would have the continual refusal of employers to sit down and bargain in good faith once the union has been certified in a plant.

Another point I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that—I have raised it before—of the lack of publicity put out by this department in regard to the functions of the department. This indicates to me the lack of the attitude that the government has to giving recognition to the trade union movement.

We have it in the farm groups, and I refer in particular to the magazine called the Junior 4-H Association. It is a splendid magazine, I congratulate the government for its distribution. It is helpful. The hon. Minister invariably has his picture in it—well, once or twice—to get a little bit of publicity from it. What it says to the youth in our farm areas is that the government believes in the education of our youth in regard to the farm problems and that they will do everything they can to see that development is in an orderly manner. I would suggest that the working force across this province deserves the same attention. And the government should put out some literature and give encouragement to the unorganized, tell them about the many good contracts in the province, the numerous number of contracts that are arrived at in peaceful terms, and not let us continually live with the idea in this province that the trade union movement is something not desirable.

So I would say again, Mr. Chairman, that we have to recognize that it has never been disputed that the free democratic trade union movement in this province, in this nation, across the world, in my opinion, has made the greatest contribution to the orderly distribution of the wealth of production. And that if we want this to continue, it is about time that we make sure that our attitude is correct, and at least have it on record, that we do agree and encourage the organizing of the unorganized into unions of their choice.

I am sure that my hon. colleagues will deal with many of the particular items in the estimates quite forcibly. I think that they need to be dealt with. I will deal with some others myself. I would just make one other remark, and the subject was covered at quite some length by the hon. member for Parkdale, in regard to the Trenton Hospital situation.

I was quite interested in that problem; I felt at the time that the hon. Minister, in his failure to keep faith with what appeared to be an obvious promise and commitment, delayed the settlement of that particular strike to the extent that it could have been settled in a couple of weeks rather than going on for two-and-a-half months. I want to go on record as saying that I do not agree with the broad application of compulsory arbitration; I believe that, in regard to compulsory arbitration, we have to look at the particular situation and its merits at a particular time and make up our minds at that time. But in this case when the unions themselves, the leadership with the approval of the union, felt that it should avoid a strike that almost seemed inevitable, it requested compulsory arbitration, and was promised just that by the hon. Minister, and it was reneged upon.

I do think that the hon. Minister was responsible for the length of that strike. I feel, at the time it was raised in this House, when the hon. Minister had in mind the establishment of the Bennett committee to study the feasibility of compulsory arbitration, he could have at least been repentant, repented his mistakes, admitted it, and said to this committee immediately, "Deal with that situation right now". And I think that we could have saved some hardships and sacrifice of the people who were on the picket line at that time.

Thank you for the opportunity of saying a few remarks on general terms, and I will deal with the estimates as we go through them.

On vote 1001:

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister when he intends to extend the minimum wage law of $1.25 an hour to the community from which I come—that is, the city of Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I indicated in my opening remarks that I would be making a statement with respect to minimum wage during the present session of the Legislature, at which time the results of the survey which I described in some detail will be given, plus the future application of the legislation.

Mr. Newman: We will hear it some time this session?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There will be an announcement. As a matter of fact, I already indicated with rather, what I thought were, carefully selected words and said that there would certainly be an extension of the programme in certain industrialized areas.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister of Labour—there is probably good reason for this, but it does not seem logical—about item 5, assistance to amateur sports, $70,000. We have set up, in The Department of Education, a youth commission of $50,000. It would seem to me there could be a duplication or overlapping of spending. I cannot see the relation of amateur sports, giving hockey sticks to hockey clubs throughout the province and putting it in The Department of Labour. It would seem to me this might be another gimmick—a public relations gimmick—of The Department of Labour.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister the thinking in putting it in that department.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, it is not a gimmick, Mr. Chairman, at all. And with respect to The Department of Education, the funds are for an entirely different purpose to any such item that education might have in its estimates. I suppose that when the Legislature determined that some control should be exerted over professional boxing and wrestling, both with respect to the promoters and the managers and the participants, it had to determine that it was going to be put in some department. It is now in The Department of Labour. And when a programme of assisting pure amateur sport was developed, having in mind equipment primarily directed to the smaller age groups, beginners and that sort of thing in areas where sponsorship or support was not readily available, that this was added—and I think appropriately so—as a responsibility of the athletic commissioner in The Department of Labour.

Quite frankly, with respect to this—quite the largest portion of the money is spent on hockey, some $16,000; baseball next with $10,000; softball, $9,800; lacrosse, which seems to be still popular, $8,200; soccer, track and field, and basketball being in the order of about $1,000 apiece; and all other sports, badminton and so on, totalling about $3,500.

Then, included in the $70,000, were certain grants to the British Empire Games, the Olympics, the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, on this same item last year, I had a group in Hamilton come to me. They were starting up a basketball league for young girls. They wanted to know if they could get some assistance. I suggested they try The Department of Labour. They ended up getting 12 basketballs. This is a very large league in the city of Hamilton.

I am wondering if the time has not come when we should try to promote amateur sport among the younger group a little more than we are. This group had to go out and gather money from the community to carry on this, where I think, if they had got a little more assistance from the commission, it would have been a lot better. I think the time has come when we have got to try to build our amateur sports and see if we cannot help out these smaller groups a little more than we are at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is something I would be glad to take under advisement.

Mr. Davison: I assume the Workmen's Compensation Board will be discussed under item 7?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, well, certainly not under this item.

Mr. Davison: Well, are we going to have an opportunity under the department of discussing it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: As far as I am concerned, yes.

Mr. Davison: At what time; at the end? Can we discuss it now?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is going to be legislation and there is going to be an amendment.

Mr. Davison: Well certainly, why not! But why was the legislation not brought in so we could have an opportunity to discuss it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I said there would be an opportunity, now when would you like to have it?

Mr. Davison: We are all—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Well when do you—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We are all very co-operative.

Mr. Davison: Tell us where, at the end?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is good. I think that would be a good place, at the end.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Where has the athletic commission disappeared to?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is in the main vote, main office.

Mr. MacDonald: You mean the athletic commissioner now is not a separate branch, it is just part of the main office?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, he reports. The commissioner, I think under the legislation creating the office, is the commissioner who bears that title and reports to the Minister.

Mr. MacDonald: So any discussion of that comes under the main office, and I have it clear now that the workmen's compensation board is the last item on the estimates?

Mr. Davison: Well, the Chairman has not explained, are we going to have an opportunity to discuss that as the last item?

Mr. Chairman: The Minister has made that statement.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am having a little difficulty sorting the procedure out here and attempting to keep in order in the new and regularized and rationalized approach to business in this House, of which I approve.

I think, Mr. Chairman, under the first item, the head office, is the appropriate place to ask a question of the hon. Minister with regard to what further legislation the hon. Minister is contemplating this year.

Now, my colleague, the hon. member for Wentworth East discussed the whole question of the check-off. I noticed the hon. Minister sitting there with even more than his normal benign appearance, but I could not quite detect from that appearance whether or not there was check-off in the mill this year or not. So, my first question in this connection is, can we anticipate legislation for a voluntary revocable check-off this year in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, first I think I should say that flattery will get you nowhere.

Mr. MacDonald: Well I have not yet discovered what gets me anywhere, so I am just trying that for the moment.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think you do very well. Let me answer that question by reviewing, and I think in all fairness I would want to tell you what remaining legislation is coming in our programme.

There will be an amending Act to the present Labour Relations Act. If that subject were going to be advanced in legislation, that would be the place where it would be found.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): We can figure that out too.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But you would not expect me to announce at this moment what is going to be in the Act.

Mr. MacDonald: We have been waiting for 14 years.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, but while that item, the compensation board, will come under the estimates, the actual legislation, I think, will have to come under the bills when they are advanced.

Then there is an Act with respect to hours of work and vacations with pay which we will be advancing.

There is an Act dealing with—

Mr. Bryden: May I just ask on the hours of work and vacations with pay bill, is that in addition to the bill that is now on the order paper, or are you referring to that bill?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am referring to that bill.

There is The Workmen's Compensation Act, there will be some amendments to that, of what I regard as of major nature.

We have got the operating engineers before us! Oh yes, there may be some tidying up to do there on construction safety.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister, perhaps legitimately, is being a little reticent at the moment to let us know what is going to be in what could be an all-inclusive series of amendments in The Labour Relations Act. But may I, Mr. Chairman, just make a plea here, since this is the appropriate place apparently to deal with it, that we are at least ten or 15 years late on check-off legislation in the province of Ontario. My hon. colleague from Wentworth East pointed to this as being one answer in the very complex problem of getting a first contract, without appearing to intervene from the outside. The considered view of people in the field of labour-management relationships today is if you laid down in a model Act certain requirements, then if you have a company like the Hershey Chocolate Company—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You mean a model clause.

Mr. MacDonald: A model clause, right. If you had a company like the Hershey Chocolate Company which apparently is not willing to sign a contract, or if you have a company like the board of management in the Trenton Hospital, or the board of management of the Toronto General Hospital, which after two or three conciliation board reports has still refused to accept the unanimous conciliation board reports for check-off, you would be able to cope with these few—these relatively few intransigent—recalcitrant management types, who are really causing a disproportionate share of the problems in labour-management relationships. You would also meet the problem of the first signing of a contract.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I would draw to the attention of the government that it is falling behind our sister province, the province of Quebec. Indeed, we are both away behind. I think I am correct in saying that six other provinces before Quebec contemplated it, had check-off legislation. So I would judge if Quebec gets into line that we, along with P.E.I. and Newfoundland, have not got the legislation.

Now if the hon. Minister is proud of that and wants to boast about being in the vanguard, I think he better pause and reflect for a moment.

Since the hon. Minister has indicated what legislation is scheduled for this year and one or two other points are not included, I would like to raise them. I have had representations, as I do from quite a number of unions in the province, with regard to legislation. In one instance, namely, the northern Ontario district council of the lumber and sawmill workers, they have indicated to me that they have made representations to the hon. Minister of Labour and to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) and that they had given them an assurance that they would not seek publicity and try to, if I may lapse into the vernacular, kick up any dust on some of these issues, if the government was going to move. Now I conclude from what the hon. Minister said that the government is not going to move on two or three points that they place considerable importance on, and I want to just dwell upon them briefly, Mr. Chairman.

The first one is a very old issue.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think it is only fair that I should say this to you, that we have had some very important meetings with respect to the lumber and sawmill member branch of the carpenters' union, and there are four departments of government concerned with the matters which concern them. There are health, lands and forests, labour and The Attorney General's Department. With respect to labour relations and certain operational matters, the two departments concerned are lands and forests and labour.

The last meeting our officials had with that group I think was January 22, was it not, about two weeks ago? With respect to lands and forests, my understanding is that the meetings are still continuing. The point I want to make is that the atmosphere in which these discussions are being held and conducted is one of extreme co-operation and there has been a very frank, and if I may just say a very helpful, exchange of views on both sides.

I understand that the lumber and sawmill people are continuing their discussions with lands and forests. I hope it will follow, you see, if there are certain changes to be made in our labour relations legislation which concern them, that they would be made in advance under the amendment to The Labour Relations Act. I put that to you, because it put me—I do not want to hinder the debate but I think it is only fair to tell you what the position is. We are very much encouraged by the nature, the atmosphere of these discussions.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. Well, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the hon. Minister bringing me up to date on the state of the negotiations, and I certainly do not want to intervene if finally we are going to get some answers on these long-standing problems.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Just so that the House, particularly with many new hon. members, might be at least acquainted with the nature of the problem, let me touch on them very briefly.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, do not say anything that might affect the outcome of the negotiations which are going along so nicely.

Mr. MacDonald: I will not say anything provocative. I shall just relate the nature of the problem. The first one is a simple proposition that, when a licenceholder is granted limits that, in the past, he has excluded trade unionists from going on and, in effect, realizing the rights that the workers have under The Labour Relations Act, this became a private domain, in effect, of the licenceholder. The contention of the union was that this was really a violation of rights under The Labour Relations Act and it asked for some sort of a change in the law, so that if a vacuum cleaner salesman, or an insurance salesman, or somebody else wants to go in and pursue the philosophy of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) and find the tattered individuals of society and brainwash them so that they will buy, they have the right to do it. But had a trade unionist organizer the right to go in? No, he was barred. The gate came down.

I think the hon. Minister—if I may recall some of our joint efforts in the past—he and I sat on a committee some seven years ago in which I believe we recommended unanimously, in this instance under the chairmanship of the late James Maloney, the proposal that this kind of thing should end. So at this stage, seven years later, I do not want to spoil the possibility of achieving success on it but I just want to rather underline for the hon. Minister at this point that I think we should not let the seven years become eight, nine, ten or 25.

A second point—and I can quite see where it is going to require joint negotiations between the hon. Ministers of Lands and Forests and Labour—is that there has been a practice of an employer in licensed limits suddenly ceasing to treat his employee group as a collective group and treat them as individuals, with individual contracts. Thereby he got out once again from under the obligations or rights of The Labour Relations Act that the employees might seek.

Mr. Bryden: As, for example, Ontario Hydro.

Mr. MacDonald: My hon. colleague has just stolen one or two words from me that I wanted to underline. The most shocking aspect of this is that the one employer in this province which has been most blatant in its exercise of this violation of The Labour Relations Act has been Ontario Hydro.

I think the time has come for The Department of Labour to so clarify the Act that no employer, and particularly the Ontario Hydro, can continue to do this kind of thing.

The third one—and this is something they had to deal with two or three years ago—is a strike—in fact I think it is six or seven years ago—up in northwestern Ontario; and this is the practice of an employer in the woods industry treating some people as an employee and some people on contract because, for example, he happens to own a truck. The man cannot work unless he has a truck any more than, for example, a carpenter can work if he has not got his tool kit. But a carpenter can be one of a collective bargaining unit. The truck driver is treated as an individual on an individual contract basis, and the union has made some kind of representations for ending this kind of thing.

As they rather delightfully put it, they are now a little tired of trying to organize these ghosts; because you go in and organize them, then you suddenly find the company says: "Oh, they are not employees of ours at all. We just happen to have a contract with them."

These are three areas of problems which, I submit to the hon. Minister—and I have tried to do it as unprovocatively as possible—we have been living with. We have had representations of difficulties, of tensions—indeed the tension even reached the point, along with other factors, of extreme violence last year. I think there is a serious obligation on the government to face up to these issues and settle them. I will leave the matter rest there for the moment, in the hope that either one of the hon. Ministers involved will have some action before this session is over.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to make a few points, not at any great lengths, but I had hoped that we would have heard something about section 89 today.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The Labour Relations Act?

Mr. Singer: Yes, The Labour Relations Act. There have been representations made over many years—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think the right time for that item is under—we are dealing with the money matters.

Mr. Singer: We are dealing with The Department of Labour, Mr. Chairman. We are dealing with The Department of Labour and if the hon. Minister of Labour is not prepared to comment on section 89 here, then if he brings in amendments to the Act that do not deal with section 89, I am sure he is not going to suggest that it would be in order to discuss section 89 under an amendment to section 96. And if he were going to remove section 89, as has been so earnestly solicited down through the years by those of us on this side, and by the NDP and by labour unions across Ontario, the hon. Minister would have risen with great glee before the orders of the day, with a piece of paper in his hand, and told us what an enlightened person he was and how finally he was going to bow to the pressure and take section 89 out of the Act.

I would hope that section 89 would come out of the Act; I would have hoped that this government would have been sufficiently interested to allow municipal employees to bargain the same as any other employee.

An hon. member: Well taken.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You should put your sentences a little differently about what you would have thought and the way you put your verbs and so on, because you do not know yet what is going to be in that legislation.

Mr. Bryden: Well, as long as you are so coy, we have to make the best assumptions we can.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have had the privilege of knowing the hon. Minister for a number of years and I think I know him well enough that, if they had any intention of repealing section 89, he would have come in with all flags waving and all drums booming out to announce that he was introducing this great reform because he was such an enlightened Minister. Now, we have not heard it and, if I am wrong, and I hope I am wrong, Mr. Chairman, then I will apologize and I will be delighted with the hon. Minister's change of heart and the government's change of heart.

But for what it is worth again, Mr. Chairman, and over many years this has been said—it was said unanimously by the select committee on labour, and said by anyone almost except the government who has any real concern about bargaining and labour relations—section 89 should be removed. And the absence of any mention of section 89 is a pretty strong indication to me at least that there is no action contemplated at this time. I hope I am wrong.

The second point I wanted to make was this Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Parkdale touched on the labour negotiations concerning the hospitals at Trenton and other places in the province. And, Mr. Chairman, while the hon. Minister of Health is in his seat, and the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) is in his seat, and the hon. Minister of Labour is here as well, I think that perhaps a few additional remarks could be made with regard to this very serious problem.

Those people who have had dealings with the hospital services commission recognize full well that the hospital services commission in fact runs the hospitals of the province of Ontario, that the board sits there subject to the pleasure and subject to the direction of the hospital services commission.

Certainly the salaries that are paid to all classes of employees in hospitals have to be approved in advance by the hospital services commission, and certainly, when trouble arises such as the trouble that arose at Trenton, without the approval, knowledge, blessing, without the consent of the hospital services commission, there could be no change in the wages; so I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister will wonder with us, why they go through the façade of negotiations in Trenton or in Windsor or in all the other places when, in fact, the negotiations could and should really go on in the Cabinet room between the hon. Minister of Labour and the hon. Minister of Health, because these are the people who make all of these decisions.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Not at all. I am a member of the hospital board and it is a completely independent body; and one of the things these people insist on, as I understand the situation, is their independence as governors or members of a board of a hospital and they will not be told what to do.

Mr. Singer: I see. All right.

Mr. Bryden: It is time they learned.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: If you do not understand that, I think I had better make it clear, but this is the way it is. Now my concern, as Minister of Labour, with the present matter had its origin in the inability of the parties represented by organized and certified bargaining agents, and by the board of governors as the employers, in being able to come to an agreement. So that put them, as far as we were concerned in The Department of Labour, in the same position as an ordinary employer—any other employer and organized labour—and we were concerned that the bargaining continue to get a result; and, let us be frank, being concerned with the fact that it was a hospital, and all of the collateral matters that go with that type of situation.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am most interested to hear the hon. Minister's remarks and I am most interested to hear the assertion of independence that these boards have. I have a file and I intended to produce it—I do not have it here with me this afternoon—I intended to produce it and talk about it at the time the hon. Minister of Health's estimates come before us, of an exchange of correspondence along the lines I have been talking about.

When you see in the correspondence directions from the hospital commission that you cannot move an office from one part of a floor of a hospital to another until plans have been submitted and inspections have been made and a stamp of approval has been given by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, I wonder where is this independence? When you see the demand for schedules of wages and approvals and the strict strictures that are attached to these; and the warnings that emanate from the hospital commission, I wonder again where is the independence?

As I say, Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that I do not have these letters with me, but I undertake that I will have them with me when the hon. Minister of Health's estimates come forward, and will elaborate on it.

But the point I wanted to make this afternoon was that to my mind, and it is borne out by these letters that I have in my possession, to my mind the Ontario Hospital Services Commission is, in fact, the boss. And when there is this type of a dispute, the dispute can and should have been settled as a matter of government policy. The hon. Minister of Health and the hon. Minister of Labour should have been able to get together and say this.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That was not the position of a certain hospital board.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, if that was not the position of a certain hospital board, it is surprising to me that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission did not take the same attitude in Trenton that it takes in other places. And if it did not take it in Trenton, then Trenton is being given unique and unusual treatment, and many of the other hospitals in Ontario are not being accorded the same treatment.

Let us face it. We have a very serious problem in manning our hospitals and it is a governmental responsibility to see that these things are done properly. And part of that responsibility evolves on the hon. Minister of Health. Part of it is the hon. Minister of Labour's, and I would think that between the two hon. gentlemen, rather than talk about arbitrary employers or arbitrary employees or inability to get together or waving the magic wand, imagined though it was, of compulsory arbitration, the solution lay in the Cabinet caucus room. That is not where the solution came from. To the disturbance of the people of Ontario, this myth was carried on.

Now the third point I wanted to make is by way of a request for further information. In these estimates I notice under number four, that for advertising investigations and conferences, the hon. Minister asks for $140,000. Last year, I think, he spent some $38,000—that is the year which the public accounts cover, the year ending March 31, 1963, there was some $38,000 spent. There was $4,000-odd to Fleming, Smoke and Burgess, who, I presume, are a firm of solicitors; $3,000-odd to James Lovick, a firm of advertising people; The Department of Public Works, $5,400; miscellaneous, $25,000; coming to $38,000.

Well, this year it would seem that we are going to jump from $38,000 to $140,000. I was wondering what additional in advertising, investigations and conferences warrant what seems to be the increased expenditure in this particular branch, multiplying it about five times.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The figures for the year we are presently ending, coming up to March 31, 1964, will, for the same items, be about $120,000; and the figure we are asking for is $140,000.

Now these amounts have to do with the dissemination of information and telling people about what their rights are and getting the message of the department, the facilities, to the people of the province. This will be done through certain conferences. There are certain areas where conferences are desirable and play a proper function.

There is $30,000 set aside for—just a minute; oh, here we are—they fall, generally, under these headings: conferences and workshops, exhibitions and displays, publications and brochures, monthly bulletins, speeches, statements, press releases, advertising, direct mail programmes, films and photographs; and even answering queries.

Mr. Singer: Well, we labour under a difficulty in an item such as this, Mr. Chairman, when the only accounts that we have are in this book that reflects accounts that are a year old. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) said earlier today that he was going to have an announcement to make in so far as the public accounts committee is concerned. I suppose that this would really be the place to get into this sort of question.

• But I think it would be of very substantial interest to be able to debate or to argue in committee, or to investigate in committee, how an item of $140,000 is arrived at, who gets the contract, what is being done and so on. It is almost impossible, from an exchange of information across the floor at this time, to discuss the matter intelligently. I would hope that this would be the sort of thing that would be brought before the public accounts committee, so that we can have an opportunity to properly get into it.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, in the 1962-63 season, the Windsor Bulldogs won the Allan Cup. As a result, they were the team chosen to represent Canada in European competition this past year. Did the Windsor Bulldogs hockey team make a request for assistance from The Department of Labour, and if they did, why was it turned down?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Could I answer that in just a moment?

Mr. Newman: Well then, while they are looking up the answer for that, Mr. Chairman, I notice also that the equipment that is supplied to the various amateur groups comes from half a dozen different suppliers. Has the hon. Minister considered purchasing that equipment in the municipality from which the request is received and in this way assist the small businessman to meet his obligations to the community?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I would like to be able to say that we could assist in that manner, but we have a duty as a government and as a department to purchase this equipment at the most advantageous prices we can. To get the equipment through the channel suggested by the hon. member would cost us about double.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, then is the equipment put out for tender; are tenders called for this equipment?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, but I make my own inquiries, as the Minister, as to what the going wholesale prices are, from time to time, and the athletic commissioner and the purchasing office of the department check these matters continuously to see that the prices are desirable.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, then unless there are actual tenders requested of various companies, there is no reason for the hon. Minister making the statement that it is purchased at its lowest possible figure. Referring—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Was the question of the hon. member directed as to why we did not purchase at retail levels within the municipality?

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I had made that suggestion and the hon. Minister gave me a satisfactory answer, stating that he could purchase it cheaper by purchasing it through wholesale houses. Then I made the suggestion that if tenders were requested then equipment could be purchased still cheaper than it is at the present moment. I think it has some merit.

Mr. Chairman, referring to the mad monsters of the roped ring, the so-called wrestlers, they are televised quite often throughout the various parts of Ontario. Now, when they put on a performance or a bit of entertainment, must they obtain a licence or permit from the department for each one of these television appearances?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We have no control or jurisdiction in the field of broadcasting, either radio or television.

Mr. Newman: Well—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But we do license and have supervision over the very holding of the event.

Mr. Newman: Well, this is just what I am getting at, Mr. Chairman. The event is held in a studio.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Usually.

Mr. Newman: The public is invited to this, this is on display to the public, and as a result I think there should be some licences required.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Is the hon. member suggesting that there are wrestling bouts or fighting matches which are held inside a radio studio, with some paid performers who would normally come under our athletic commissioner? There is no audience when they are broadcasting.

Mr. Newman: Yes, there is, and there are performances to which the public is invited and at which, naturally, entertainment is provided to some people—quite interesting entertainment. I think the hon. Minister should have his department look into the televising of wrestling. Possibly there are some fees that can be obtained, likewise some controls that could be enforced, because some of the entertainment at the time it is put on certainly is not in the best interest of the youngsters who have the opportunity of viewing it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: With respect to the Windsor Bulldogs, I was aware, as a matter of fact, that a request for a grant was made to me through my office and it was also referred to the Treasury board, and I was unable or could not see my way clear to recommend or endorse the application. The tour for which funds were requested was an exhibition tour to Russia and was not a championship tour.

Mr. Newman: The answer is quite satisfactory, Mr. Chairman.

Would associations which run coaching clinics be eligible for grants under this vote?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Does the hon. member mean professional coaching clinics, where you pay a fee to go?

Mr. Newman: No, Mr. Chairman, the Windsor and Detroit coaches association are contemplating a coaching clinic in the various secondary and primary school activities, football, basketball, track and field, and so on, and are interested in bringing in the top coaching talent throughout various parts of the midwest. Now, it is quite an expensive proposition for the organization to conduct this clinic, and naturally it would like assistance from the provincial and/or the federal government in holding this clinic.

It is to the betterment of not only the coaches and athletes in the local area but also those who would come from quite a distance to attend this school. It would be in the summer period so that it would not interfere with any of the normal school activities. Would this department make a grant to such an association if it put in a request?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, I would not recommend a grant for the purposes the hon. member has described.

Mr. Newman: Apparently this department is not interested in physical fitness. So when the hon. Ministers get up here and tell us that they are keenly interested in physical fitness, they are simply "whistling Dixie".

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member is talking about a programme within the school system in the Windsor district?

Mr. Newman: No, not within the school system at all, Mr. Chairman—a programme to which anyone who is interested in amateur sports could come down and, possibly for a very nominal fee, partake of the expert opinion of outstanding coaches in the midwest.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, the government is not in a position to do everything for everybody. I would think that I would have a hard time recommending assistance of that nature, and yet no one appreciates or wants to see physical fitness develop more than I. I think there comes a place and a time when you get the most out of things that you try to develop and help yourself on.

Mr. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, may I end then in making a request to The Department of Public Works and to the hon. Minister (Mr. Connell), that in the refurbishing of the building they put in facilities for the physical activity of the hon. members? Some type of gymnasium?

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Go to the "Y"; it is real handy to here.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, "Y" is this going on?

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville brings up a point that we brought up last year in the House. We contended then that this branch should be under The Department of Education. You, as the hon. Minister, would not recommend granting money to these clinics but The Department of Education does. The Department of Education, under the Ontario fitness programme, is already giving grants to clinics.

We, in the Canadian Legion, in our sports training plan, have had money from this department in holding track and field clinics. So I suggest you can leave the wrestlers and so-called boxing to the Ontario athletic commission, but let any grants to amateur sport go to another group altogether.

We have a very fine community programmes branch in The Department of Education. We had last year an amount for fitness, and I notice it again in the estimates—$100,000 for their fitness programme—so I suggest that, as my friend, the hon. member for Grey North, has said: It should be under The Department of Education. Already there is one in The Department of Education, a youth service division, so that particular department is much better than The Department of Labour. So I suggest that, before 1965 comes around, you get together and change that.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to return for a moment to item No. 4—advertising, investigations, and conferences—and ask the hon. Minister: Does that item cover the activities of the type described in all branches of the department or are there any other branches that carry on similar activities of their own, as for example the human rights commission? Is its activities in the field of education and advertising covered by that vote?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Part of the answer to that is that the human rights commission has a separate vote of its own. The item to which I have made reference here has to do with conferences such as labour-management, workshops and matters of that kind. It really affects the department in a broader general way, more than specific.

Mr. Bryden: Well, would it cover other branches, as, for example, safety, and the various branches concerned with that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. Bryden: It would cover all of those, would it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. Belanger: I presume, Mr. Chairman, that under this vote 1001, on page 25 of this public accounts book, we have the revenues of The Department of Labour. I have some questions to ask about revenues. Would that come under this vote, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Revenues for what?

Mr. Belanger: Revenues of The Department of Labour. Your department.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I know, but which revenues?

Mr. Belanger: Are you aware that on page 25 of the public accounts you have, under The Department of Labour statement No. 14, revenues to the amount for the year ending March 31, 1963, revenues amounting to $1,212,453.51?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. Belanger: All right, now I want to ask questions about these revenues. Does it come under this vote?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, just the part which is under vote 1001, which is main office, which we are on now.

Mr. Belanger: All right. Thank you very much. Now that we have got that clarified we can go ahead.

I was very interested in your remarks stating that you are going to have more apprenticeship courses, more than you have at the present time. Now, under the apprenticeship branch you had fees, and I am wondering what are the fees that you are going to charge to these people that will want to take this apprenticeship that you announced this afternoon?

Would he tell me that, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Would he repeat the question, please?

Mr. Bryden: He must be hanging on every word of yours.

Mr. Belanger: The hon. Minister announced this afternoon, various new apprenticeships under his department. I am interested in the fees that are going to be charged for these courses. What will they be?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There would be fees for a certificate of qualification; for instance, on graduation, a motor mechanic's certificate. There would be, for instance, an operating engineer's certificate, and the annual renewals and matters of that type.

Mr. Belanger: Well, what is the fee for taking a course, for instance?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Most of the apprenticeship programme comes under the federal-provincial agreement. That agreement involves payment partly by the province, partly by the federal government and also includes payment to the trainees, in some instances.

Mr. Belanger: Thank you.

Now, I have another question that comes under the revenues, the sale of vacations with pay stamp books. When they make application for this, does that have to be made to the Toronto office or can it be made to the labour offices in various municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, it would be made, in the hon. member's case, to the local Department of Labour office in Windsor.

Mr. Belanger: Thank you very much.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, a year ago when The Minimum Wage Act came into existence, the hon. Minister of Labour made a statement to this House that the first area that would be affected with minimum wages would be from Oshawa to Niagara Falls. A short while after that, his bill did come into effect and it came from Oshawa, not from but including Oshawa, to Hamilton and it quit there. Now, this was supposed to have been the horseshoe which would be the experiment at that time.

An hon. member: Half of it.

Mr. Bukator: Hardly half the horseshoe, or maybe just a little more.

Now then, at that time it was argued in this House that the hon. Minister had more power than one man should have, because he could set the date and the time when this Act would come into existence. Then it was argued that if that was the case, that at least there should be a schedule attached to that bill, indicating when and where this particular Minimum Wage Act would take effect.

Now, that was not a part of the bill and you have the authority, sir, to apply it when and if you felt that you should. Now there appears to have been an election sometime back last year, and the people of the province decided you were on the right track, at least they gave you a good majority. The hon. Prime Minister of the province was in my riding, Mr. Chairman, and we were glad to see him there, and there was a nice little bit of an article in the paper indicating that the minimum wages were in effect. Now then, that is why you did not win Niagara Falls, because the wages were not in effect in Niagara Falls and we do not know when they will come into effect, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Is that the only reason?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bukator: I believed, and the people of that area felt, that they were included at that time. And I might say that I did not speak on the bill at that time because I felt that if—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: You were worrying about that election, were you?

Mr. Bukator: At that time there was no election called. In June you did not know yourself when the election would come about, so I was not concerned.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Guess we picked the right date though.

Mr. Bukator: At least the vote indicated in my riding that you did not bother them too much with what you had to say in that area, Mr. Prime Minister.

But that is getting a little bit political and I want to get back to what the people of this province are entitled to.

When is this great bill of yours going to take in at least the balance of that horseshoe that you, sir, made the statement about covering? Now you did make a statement not too long ago that you would make a statement on that to one of my hon. colleagues. Will it be during this session? Will it be next year, or before the next election?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have already said twice today that my statement would be made this session.

Mr. Bukator: That is a remarkable concession. At least it will be in this session. I wanted to make this clear because, when I go back to my riding, I would like to say to the people of that riding that the hon. Minister did say that during this session it might—

An hon. member: He did; three times this afternoon.

Mr. Bukator: I think the good Lord himself asked Peter if he loved him, and he asked him three times.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, may I say to the hon. member that there were very valid and substantial reasons for drawing the line of the initial area where I did, on the far side of the city of Hamilton.

Mr. Bukator: You see, that is where we disagree.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, that would be all right with me.

Mr. Bukator: Quite all right; then I have a right to pursue this a little further.

We have a summer resort area and there are people in that area hired for very little money during the summer months. They were deprived of the increase in their wages last year and it was only 85 cents for the ladies and, I think, $1 for the men. I do not believe that another season should pass without this bill taking effect, at least, in the industrial and commercial areas such as Niagara Falls, Fort Erie, Crystal Beach and, yes, Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member could not have been listening. I have already said that twice.

Mr. Bukator: Yes, you did. You said, a year ago, that you, in your own sweet time, would bring it about. And you deprived the people of this province for one year and, no doubt—I hope I am wrong—it could be another year.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): They are happy up there and they are still working.

Mr. Bukator: I think the hon. Minister of Mines should go about digging his diamonds.

I think he has his work cut out for him in that department, because certainly not too much is going on in that particular area. But let us get back to The Minimum Wage Act.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member may be sorry for saying that in a day or two—his references are, as usual, more critical than constructive.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not mind letting the debate go on indefinitely, but we are on vote 1001.

Mr. Bukator: That is exactly it, 1001, item 7, in the public accounts.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Minimum wages comes under labour standards.

Mr. Bukator: Not the way I see it here. It says: Minimum wages—1001, item 7, page 10. And the wages are at least put in there. If you only set aside $18,000 in that particular item, you are not going to do too much in another year, and that is a prediction.

I can assure the hon. members of the government, when they come into Niagara Falls they should at least be prepared to answer that.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, after that excursion into vote 1004, I would like to return to vote 1001.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, may I move that the committee rise and report progress?

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report that it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning we will proceed with these estimates.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Friday, February 14, 1964

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Friday, February 14, 1964

Presenting reports, Mr. Yaremko	629
Estimates, Department of Labour, continued, Mr. Rowntree	629
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	655

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1964

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We welcome to the Legislature in the west gallery students from the Islington Public School and the Hollywood Public School, Willowdale, and in the east gallery the Alexander Muir School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, with your permission just before the orders of the day, this is St. Valentine's Day and I took the liberty on behalf of all the male hon. members of the House in arranging a little token of our esteem for the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard).

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. The 17th report of the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario for the 12-month fiscal period ending on March 31, 1963.

2. The report of the Registrar-General relating to the registration of births, marriages and deaths in the province of Ontario for the year ending December 31, 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Thirty-third order: House in committee of supply. Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR (continued)

On vote 1001:

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, yesterday when the House rose we were debating and discussing various matters under vote 1001. Some of them, of course, were not directly attributable to that particular vote, but the debate had covered a wide range of subjects covering other items of our estimates as well. I think there were some questions being asked when the House rose.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, before we leave vote 1001, I have a question on the order paper which I think relates to this vote. Unfortunately, one of the practices the new administration has taken over from the old administration, is to fail to answer questions put on the order paper by members until it is too late for the information to be of any use to them.

However, I think the hon. Minister of Labour has had adequate notice of this question since it has been on the order paper almost since the opening of the session. It is question four on page eight, as follows:

1. Has the foundation on automation and employment been established?

2. If so, (a) when was it established? (b) who is its director or other principal officer? (c) what is its address?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: At the conclusion of the conference on automation and employment last September, the government declared its intentions in the final statement which was made at the closing of the conference. These were to appoint a steering committee, and to establish the basis and to recommend the procedures for the immediate future for the foundation. That steering committee under the chairmanship of Professor Arthur Porter has met regularly. I understand that its report is nearing completion and it should be available almost any time. It is the intention of the government to move the matter right along.

Mr. Bryden: I assume then that the answer to question one is no, and therefore question two is covered by the first answer. Mr. Chairman, it would seem to me that the attitude of the government to the problem of automation is, shall we say, a rather easy going one.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): You are quite wrong, quite wrong.

Mr. Bryden: We have had a couple of conferences and that is all—

An hon. member: Who is we?

Mr. Bryden: We are going to establish, at least the government—let me put it this way, I would not want to associate myself with the government's lack of action—the government has sponsored a couple of conferences and some time or other it is going to set up a foundation. I think the foundation would have a real function to perform. I think this is one of many attacks that can be made upon the problem, but it is approximately five months since the conference in Toronto was held and the steering committee, or whatever it is called, was set up. I would have thought that by now we would have had some action in setting up this foundation.

The hon. Minister in answering questions on matters of policy shows real ministerial discretion, in other words he does not tell you anything. Heaven knows when it will be set up. I think the government has really fallen down on the job that it has not—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We have not.

Mr. Bryden: —and the hon. Prime Minister seems very sensitive on this issue—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am.

Mr. Bryden: —and I can understand it, because you certainly have not produced very much yet, except two conferences. Conferences are very good but in themselves they will solve no problems. We have had two conferences and a number of complacent speeches in this House and that has been the government's answer to the very acute problems of automation. I will not belabour the point, Mr. Chairman, I think the facts speak for themselves.

Vote 1001 agreed to.

On vote 1002:

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, on vote 1002, I notice that this year the expenses are not quite as high as last year under The Apprenticeship Act, under which I presume the department is going to be carrying on a more extensive programme. I wonder why the hon. Minister has cut down on the expenses of the department.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The figure for the coming year is some $5,000 less and it does not reflect against an item of some $285,000. It does not reflect any lessening of the department's interest in this subject at all. It also does involve an adjustment of some $50,000 for which I do not have the explanation. The net result is that we are progressing forward and the actual amount spent directly is increased and will be over last year.

Mr. Davison: Under this vote 1002, I see salaries are cut by roughly $5,000. Does that mean one person is laid off as far as salaries go? And then, under section 7, "Development of Apprenticeship Training," there is $12,000 cut off altogether.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The first item with respect to salaries is not factual. The fact is that the present figure being advanced is a more accurate figure against our experience last year of the actual dollar amounts required.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, the select committee on manpower training recommended that the government make a definite decision as to where the responsibility of the apprenticeship branch should fall. The government has decided to leave it under The Department of Labour, rather than transferring it to The Department of Education. I believe that the recommendation was that something definite be done—inevitably something definite has been done—so there will be no thought that The Department of Education has jurisdiction here. But it seems to me that in the local areas where the officials responsible for education are already administering very expensive and extensive facilities for industrial training, there has to be a very close association between these two authorities. I would like the hon. Minister to explain how this association and co-operation between the two authorities is maintained.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Firstly, it is my own view that for the time being, at least, the apprenticeship programme should be the direct responsibility of The Department of Labour. As to what the future holds, I do not think that any of us can foresee that. If circumstances change and indications are that more effective administration of this branch could be achieved by transferring it to The Department of Education, then the government would certainly be open to a further review of the matter.

As to the liaison between the two departments, this a very active and a very real matter, from the ministerial level down, particularly having in mind, Mr. Chairman, the observations which the hon. member for Brant has made that the actual operation of certain schools and so on comes under The Department of Education. The information and the intelligence, if I may use that word in its—in the sense—the intelligence factor, there is a complete exchange of information between the two departments in order that we can be abreast of all developments, needs and requirements.

Mr. Nixon: Just to take this one step further, Mr. Chairman, I would like to recall to the hon. Minister that the committee's report stressed that there was a body of opinion which felt that this work should be in the ministry of labour and a body which felt that it should be in the ministry of education. But they felt the important thing was that a definite decision be made.

I would think that the definiteness would have something to do with a decision that is going to last for a period of time. If there is any thought that perhaps the administration might be better done in the other department, as the hon. Minister implies—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, Mr. Chairman, I did not mean to imply that at all. I think the hon. member misunderstood my comments.

I said that the decision has been taken, but I think the hon. member would want it to be open-minded, on something that is unknown to us now. If some further evidence or information became available this government would certainly reconsider—

Mr. Nixon: I am sure that is so, Mr. Chairman.

But the importance of maintaining it in one department or the other over a period of time certainly should not be overlooked.

I would also like to ask the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, for a further comment to his remarks yesterday on how apprenticeship applies in the hairdressing trade. I know that some of the hon. Minister's officials, sitting not too far from him, have had some dealings with this in the past and there seems to be a great deal of difficulty as to what the future of the private hairdressing schools would be. I would like to have the views of the hon. Minister on this.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There are two ways of becoming a hairdresser or a barber, Mr. Chairman, and these are the two I believe that the hon. member has in mind.

One, you can go and subscribe and pay a fee to a private school, pay so many dollars—sometimes in a fairly large amount—and take a course and qualify yourself by that method. On the other hand, you could go to one of the trade schools and take your instruction and course there.

Now those who operate the private schools do so with a view to a profit, and there are various combinations of operation. They will collect a fee from the student attending and they will have patients—how shall I describe the people who go and get their hair done, I do not like to say they are experimental objects or guinea-pigs—but in any event I remember when I was a young fellow I used to go and get a haircut for five cents, if one went to a certain barber college. It was more important to me then than it is now.

There are certain risks inherent in this situation. I make no allegation or improper suggestion, but in trying to answer the hon. member's question I would have to point out that this is probably an area where there has been a degree of abuse in the past, and it is that degree of abuse that has raised complaints from the public, directly to the government and to the department. It is these complaints which have caused us to turn our eye very carefully to the operation of private schools.

Now such attention in the area in which I am raising this point, of course, is difficult, because if you look closely at an operation, then you also look closely at the responsible and reputable people who are engaged in a private school. This is not an easy area, and I would hope that the opportunity to conduct private schools in this field would be continued, provided they meet certain standards.

Mr. Nixon: The problems in our own area, that is in the area of Brant county, having to do this—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, things have been very difficult.

Mr. Nixon: I would not criticize the department for the way they were handled, but there is a feeling that perhaps the department policy is toward stressing the trade school, or apprenticeship, means of getting this education, rather than from the private schools. Is that so?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I understand that that impression is held by some people.

Mr. Nixon: Well just in this connection then, my first question had to do with the liaison between your own department and the ministry of education, and the means whereby people can get this sort of training through trade schools. In the area of Brant county where there has been difficulty in this connection, there is no trade school and I do not think it would be reasonable to suggest that people interested in this should be asked to go a long distance to get such training. The schools there, the private schools, have come into the public eye in a way of which the hon. Minister is perhaps aware, and yet there is no alternative possibility there.

This is an area of liaison that is extremely important for Brant county and the surrounding area. I would hope that the hon. Minister listened when the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) said there was no thought of building a trade school in that area. I would hope that his influence would be joined with a good many others to urge the hon. Minister of Education to reconsider this.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, under item seven of vote 1002, the development of apprenticeship training is up $2,000 from last year. In a former discussion in this House I raised the whole question of apprenticeship training and certification in the reform institutions, and I gathered from the hon. Minister that this matter was under very careful consideration at that time. But am I to understand from the fact that no significant increase has taken place in this item that this extension of training for reform institutions is now abandoned, or will that come under some other item in the estimates for next year?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think it is only fair to state, Mr. Chairman, that on an item such as this the amount of money does not reflect the activity of the department's operation at all, because these discussions as to development and so on, are carried on by their own staff and the staff of such departments as may be interested in it. I think that the money would be more properly described if I said it was "directed to"—it is more a promotion item than a salary item. I think the real meat of the point the hon. member is raising, the real results, come from discussions which probably do not involve the dollar factor.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Chairman, I realize we are voting on 1002 and I realize also that most of these entries in these accounts running all through the whole budget are mechanical and a lot of them are fixed costs. But running through all these accounts I feel, as a newcomer, that, for instance, in this Department of Labour budget alone, we have travelling expenses amounting to over half a million dollars, $579,000.

In business they ask: "Is this trip necessary?" How can we spend over half a million dollars in this one department in travel alone? It seems to me that the boys in the hon. Minister's department are always checking up on people in business and I am asking, as a taxpayer, who checks on this kind of spending? Maybe, or maybe not, there is some hanky-panky going on in travelling expense accounts, but from the sound of these accounts we have here, I think there is need for investigation, need of a commission to investigate the spending of half a million dollars in one department alone in travelling expenses.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, this is an interesting point and I am glad the hon. member has raised it.

The principle which has been enunciated by the hon. member for Grey North, Mr. Chairman, is in complete opposition to the principles being advanced by another Opposition group in this House. They want this department to expand and keep going and do a job in the interests of the people of this province. These monies represent the travelling expenses of men in the field. Men can be in the field on two bases. They can be permanently appointed, in which case the dollar cost to the province and the people of the province goes up in an astronomic way. In that event, the travelling expense factor would be reduced considerably. The Department of Labour historically, I suppose, has never been known for spending large amounts of money and we are trying to change this in the case of established need, and when opportunities arise to perform the work for which the department is intended.

As to the actual inference of impropriety raised by the hon. member for Grey North—and this is the point I am interested in—it forced me as a member of this House to rise automatically and dispute it, because these accounts—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Automatically.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I should say so, based on my own personal knowledge of what goes on in the department. As a matter of fact, it has been one of my private conclusions and I think this may be the time to say it, that I think the travelling expenses of The Department of Labour have been narrowed down to the point where I have a question in my mind whether or not they are too narrow and whether they restrict the ability of the man in the field to do his job properly. But I must add also that these accounts are not only screened by our own supervisors in the department, but also come under the audit of the provincial auditor.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, speaking to the hon. Minister again, I do appreciate the fact that he is aware of this steady drain on the taxpayers but I think the countdown on money—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): The hon. member is not a mayor any more, he is a member.

Mr. Sargent: A taxpayer is a person who has the whole government on his payroll and I think it is time that we took a close look at spending by the government employees as well as people who are in business for themselves. We are closely inspected and who inspects your accounts and reports?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The provincial auditor.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, surely this point needs some elaboration. I do not think that the philosophy that the hon. member for Grey North is expressing is anything more than a good business philosophy. Nor is it at variance with those who might suggest that there should be more people doing more jobs. What we are concerned with and what we have to be concerned with is that there is proper inspection of all government expenditures.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: And that inspection is carried out at a reasonable cost with no impropriety involved.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, over the years we have urged that the government make available through the public accounts committee a forum wherein we can examine public expenditures. To this date, in the five years I have been in this House, this has never been done. There has been no opportunity given to the hon. members of this House to examine expenditures and to ascertain whether or not these are made properly or whether there is some fat that could or should be cut away.

This is quite a different point from suggesting that there should be more people employed to do specific jobs. And you cannot lump the two of them together. The taxpayers of this province are entitled to know that for every dollar spent there is a dollar's value given, whether in travelling expenses or advertising expenses or boiler inspection or what-have-you. But we have not been given this forum and surely this is the point that the hon. member for Grey North is making. We feel that we are entitled to be given an opportunity to examine this spending. The taxpayers of Ontario have a right to know that their dollars are being properly spent. We suspect that over the years there is a lot of fat in government expenditures, a lot of wasted money that could be put to better use, but we cannot find out until the public accounts committee gives us this opportunity. This is the thing, Mr. Chairman, that we are complaining about.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Downsview did a noble job in trying to make some sense out of the completely fatuous point that the hon. member for Grey North was trying to make.

Since reference was made to another group in the House I would like to make it clear on behalf of the other group that we recognize that it is necessary for inspectors in The Department of Labour to do a substantial amount of travelling, and when they travel they will have expenses. If you had inspectors sitting down in York Street it would save you a lot of money on expense accounts, but they might as well not be employed at all unless they are out in the field checking on what is going on. And I would say that in the apprenticeship section where there is an item of $27,000 for travelling expenses, that it is quite necessary that inspectors should go around to make sure that these young lads who are under apprenticeship contracts are being treated in accordance with the terms of the contracts, and are not being exploited by any unscrupulous employer at any level. This is an absolutely essential part of the enforcement of labour legislation.

There is, of course, the other point as to determining whether the amount of money spent by any inspector on travelling expenses or by all the inspectors together is reasonable. That essentially is a matter for the auditor, Mr. Chairman. I believe also—I would agree with the hon. member for Downsview—that it is a matter for the public accounts committee. There has been a long-standing complaint as he has said, that hon. members have not had an opportunity to inquire into the way in which money was spent. I am sure that when the hon. Prime Minister makes his long-awaited announcement it will indicate that we will have some opportunity to inquire into this.

I would like to say, however, from my experience and observation, which has been quite substantial in this field, that if the hon.

gentlemen on the Liberal benches are looking for fat in government spending—as they should be, that is one of their functions and one of our functions as it is one of the government's functions—the place where they will very likely find practically nothing is in the expense accounts of labour inspectors. I found that this group does not have very fat expense accounts as a rule. I know of many people in this community, not so much in government service, but in private business, who have very lush expense accounts indeed, but they are not labour inspectors in The Department of Labour. I doubt if you will find any fat in that item at all. If we ever get the opportunity in the public accounts committee, I would myself like to go after a few other items from which I think there is a good deal more fat to be carved out. However, I would certainly like—

Mr. Singer: That cannot be a guessing game.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member says it cannot be a guessing game. No doubt we may have an opportunity to go into every single item, but I think it may be more productive if we go through the accounts, as I have been trying to do, and pick out the items that look like they might have some fat in them and start on those. However, I would just like to emphasize again that as far as this group is concerned, we do not think that inspectors in The Department of Labour or conciliation officers or other officers are doing any more travelling than is necessary.

In fact, we suspect, Mr. Chairman, and we will be dealing with this a little later, that there are not enough of them travelling and perhaps the amounts voted for travelling expenses are not as high as they should be.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the hon. Minister? Is there any co-ordination between his department in its apprenticeship programme and the Canadian Vocational Training Plan? A youngster quits school at the age of 16 and—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is a very direct connection. Our department operates it.

Mr. Newman: I beg your pardon, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is a very direct connection between the two. The Ontario Department of Labour operates the vocational plan to which you make reference.

Mr. Newman: The plan that is carried on in the various schools of the province is operated by The Department of Labour?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You said the Canadian Vocational Training Plan.

Mr. Newman: Schedule 5?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Not Schedule 5, no.

Mr. Newman: Well, I am referring to the Canadian Vocational Training Plan Schedule 5 as operated by the federal-provincial authorities in the various schools of the province, and trade schools of the province. Schedule 5.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The one to which you make reference is arranged for and managed through The Department of Education.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, there certainly should be some co-ordination between the two, for a youngster may be taking a programme with the CVTP5, and there may not be the placement available for him. Whereas the department may be interested in apprentices—let us say, sir, for the want of some type of trade—tool and die. This department could be guiding this youngster to be taking the tool-and-die apprenticeship programme rather than simply taking an upgrading programme, or just taking the general programme and finding himself at a dead end without an opportunity for employment. I think the department should co-operate very closely with this Schedule 5, for the benefit of the youngster.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well there is another factor that has not been mentioned in this item, which is a very real one. That is the branch of the national employment service of the federal Department of Labour.

I want to make this point very clear, that on this subject there is very close liaison between labour and education in the provincial government and between the national employment service of the federal government, to establish the very point of where the need or the surpluses are, and if there is an excess and where the opportunities would appear to lie. This is one of the basic fundamentals of the successful operation of such a programme, and this involves further discussions, with employers particularly, both as to their present operations and as to their plans for the future.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, is a youngster given any guidance, any tests at all, when he first enrolls in one of these apprenticeship programmes to find out whether he is suited for the programme?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, that aspect of it would come under the schools.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, what are the minimum academic qualifications necessary so that one may take this apprenticeship training?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Grade 8, but preferably Grade 10.

Vote 1002 agreed to.

On vote 1003:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, the issue of the Trenton hospital has been dealt with a number of times in this debate already by the lead-off speakers. I want to return to it, because I think there are two aspects of this issue which are extremely important and now, I believe, is the appropriate time to deal with it under the topic of conciliation.

Before I go any further, Mr. Chairman, I think also that it is appropriate that we discuss the labour aspects of the Trenton hospital situation, which have now been resolved, apart from the whole broader issue of the application of compulsory arbitration in the hospital field, which obviously is going to have to await the report of the Bennett committee.

Now dealing specifically with the Trenton hospital case, the first part that I want to touch on is the whole position of The Department of Labour and of the hon. Minister in this situation. I dealt with it in the fall session on October 28 and 29. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), sir, has touched on it and the hon. member for Downsview has made some comments.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, with every emphasis that I can command, that I think that the government has made the most serious mistake that it has made in many years. The consequences of its mistake are going to be almost inestimable in terms of destroying confidence, at least on the labour side of the labour-management problem, in which this department has to play a role.

Now originally the department became involved through providing conciliation services. You had a conciliation board. I am not going to quote from the report of the conciliation board chairman. I did so last October, and it has been repeated again by the hon. member for Parkdale—in pretty harsh and devastating terms as to the attitude of the management of the hospital board. But this is not the real problem, Mr. Chairman. The real problem is that at one stage of the game, when the union had been treated to about as exasperating tactics as any union would have to submit to through a period of well over a year, if I recall correctly, back in the year of 1962—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: A considerable period of time.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, a considerable period of time. I will accept that rephraseology if the hon. Minister wishes.

They were entitled to go on strike approximately the end of September. The hon. Minister was very obviously disturbed. I know there was a great deal of scurrying behind the scenes as between him and the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), as to what was going to happen in this circumstance if the employees were drawn off and sick people left unattended. This is the serious problem of which we must all take cognizance and I know has provoked the establishment of the Bennett committee.

But at this stage the hon. Minister did intervene. He intervened through two of his top officials and he said to the union: You postpone your strike deadline and I will give you assurance that when the House meets, in some three or four weeks, there will be a bill to bring in compulsory arbitration.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to repeat one aspect of this, because this indicates and underlines the seriousness of it. That commitment to the union was given on September 30, in a statement which I shall read once again for the record. It is a statement that was signed by Louis Fine and by Tom Eberlee, two very respected members of The Department of Labour, on behalf of the hon. Minister and it said as follows:

Mr. Rowntree has authorized Mr. Fine to advise Mr. Hearn—that is the international representative of the union involved:

—that he intends to issue a statement in connection with this situation and make a further effort to bring the parties together to resolve the matter at issue. Failing this, it is the intention of Mr. Rowntree to introduce legislation at the first opportunity in the forthcoming session of the Legislature to provide for final and binding arbitration of the dispute between the Trenton Memorial Hospital and the Building Service Employees Union, Local 183. In view of the above, Mr. Hearn has agreed to call off the strike.

Signed: Louis Fine and Tom Eberlee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Parkdale raised this issue yesterday in the debate and he used the term trickery, the hon. Minister, for reasons of profound embarrassment, felt impelled to project himself into the debate. Then he lapsed into silence again.

Trickery is not the word, Mr. Chairman, the word is "double-cross". And this word has been used repeatedly in stories carried by the good old Tory Toronto Telegram, which has revealed exactly the conditions in this hospital.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member for Parkdale that I do not think the hon. Minister himself is personally to blame. The hon. Minister would be an utter fool if he were to give that kind of a commitment and personally go back on it and I know that the hon. Minister cannot in any sense be put in that category. The problem is not the hon. Minister's, the problem is the government's.

The hon. Minister in good faith gave a commitment, a firm and honourable commitment, and the unfortunate thing, Mr. Chairman, is that he gave it not in his own name but in the name of Mr. Fine and Mr. Eberlee. So that these two respected members of the department, their persons and their positions, were used, unwittingly perhaps in the light of subsequent events, by the hon. Minister and then they have to take the rap because they had to welch on this firm commitment.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Get the record straight.

Mr. MacDonald: Just let me finish now, the hon. Minister has had plenty of opportunity; when I am through with this thing the hon. Minister can comment on it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Eberlee and Mr. Fine signed the letter, and it was for reasons of getting the communication advanced as quickly as possible. Substitute the Minister for anything that either of them did.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. I am glad to substitute the hon. Minister, and I would say that with Mr. Fine's retiring he perhaps will not get into this kind of a position again. But if I may give a bit of advice, I would say to Mr. Eberlee or anybody else in the department that in the future I think they will have to be very careful in signing statements like this, so that their name and their position will not be used in what could subsequently become a double-cross.

I do not think the hon. Minister is to blame personally, though as the head of the department he has to accept the blame, as this is part of our democratic and parliamentary procedure. The government is to blame. The hon. Minister, if he felt this was an honourable commitment, is in the embarrassing spot that he has no alternative but to resign. He chose not to—that is his choice. But the problem, and I come back to it now, Mr. Chairman, is that knowledge of this has gone out through all of the labour movement and it should go out through all of the labour movement.

The hon. Minister gets very, very touchy when we suggest to him that The Department of Labour is not completely neutral, when we suggest on occasion that it is like the Irish—it is neutral but who is it neutral against? So many times it is neutral against the workers on behalf of management. I think the government gave a firm commitment which it should have lived up to and I cannot conceive of how a group of honourable gentlemen in the Cabinet of this government would have placed their Minister in a spot when he gave this kind of honourable commitment.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the consequences of this are going to be inestimable for years to come. How can the hon. Minister blame any trade unionist who comes in and sits down and is told by the hon. Minister: "Now, just sign this paper and we will proceed and work out an arrangement because we have given you a commitment," if the unionist then says, "What value is your word and what value is your signature because here is proof of the fact that you double-crossed a group on one occasion. What proof have I that you are not going to do it to me?"

That is just how serious this issue is, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister cannot shirk it off, though I can understand his profound embarrassment. But it is complicated now, Mr. Chairman, by another issue. We now get mixed up with The Department of Health, sir, because the Ontario Hospital Services Commission and The Department of Labour are both involved. This is similar to some of the problems the hon. Minister has in the woods industry, in that they become bound up inextricably with The Department of Lands and Forests, so therefore I have to bring the hon. Minister of Health into this.

The hon. Minister of Health became very disturbed, Mr. Chairman, by a comment of the hon. member for Parkdale in which he stated that the Trenton Memorial board, sir, was promised sufficient funds by the Ontario

Hospital Services Commission to break the strike. That is the quotation, that is the point that the hon. Minister protested. Indeed he said, as quoted in Hansard on page 514:

Since I report to you and to the House for this commission, I must emphatically, and with all vigour, deny this allegation.

Then he proceeded to deny the allegation. I want to take the House through his words in denying that allegation and just show you, Mr. Chairman, how completely the hon. Minister was misinformed, and therefore misinformed the House. And if I may interject here, Mr. Chairman—because this is not pertinent at the moment but I do not want to repeat it on another occasion—I rose after the hon. Minister had delivered this statement and suggested to the Speaker of the House that there was another case in which a Minister of the Crown was abusing his privilege before the orders of the day in bringing in a statement that was not a statement of policy. It was very argumentative, indeed it was misinformation.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You are not talking about the Minister of Labour?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I am talking about the statement of the hon. Minister of Health. Just let me document that, because that is serious and I would not have made such a charge if I could not document it. In the course of his statement as found on page 514 of Hansard, the hon. Minister of Health said:

The Ontario Hospital Services Commission does not “run” the hospital, or direct it, or formulate its policies. It approves a budget that will be acceptable to OHSC.

Let us cut out the verbal footwork here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: At least this, Mr. Chairman, cannot be disputed, that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission shares the managerial responsibilities of a hospital. It shares the managerial responsibilities of a hospital in that it approves budgets, and budgets and expenditure of money are, beyond any shadow of doubt, part of the managerial responsibilities—the key to the whole thing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I wish you would exercise the same authority as the Speaker and just keep these hon. Ministers quiet so that one can present the case in an orderly fashion here.

In the course of his comments, for example, the hon. Minister of Health made this statement:

When the strike at this hospital was imminent, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission made certain, by contact with the hospital, that it had a satisfactory plan designed to permit the hospital to operate at its usual capacity, and to ensure that the necessary supplies would be available.

And then his second point:

It was emphasized to the chairman of the board of the hospital that, in the event of a strike, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission's primary concern was for the care of the patients in the hospital, and to assure that the care was adequate, an inspector from OHSC was appointed. He visited the hospital on several occasions during the strike and brought back reports—all of which indicated that he was satisfied that adequate care was being given to the patients.

This is all very fine, but you see, Mr. Chairman, the really anomalous position we get ourselves into when you have a labour-management dispute in the hospital is this, that if the union is successful to the point that it can have solidarity and move into a strike, then the Ontario Hospital Services Commission moves into the picture in order to guarantee the welfare of the patients. Fine. If, however, the labour union is not successful and management, by all the tactics that it uses, is able to frustrate its efforts so that the strike is not successful, the welfare of the patient is not in danger, so that nobody needs to move in.

The workers cannot win. The workers simply cannot win, because if they are successful in having solidarity to the point of a strike, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission moves in on the pretext—and it is a legitimate pretext, this is what makes this a very complicated issue—that you cannot neglect the welfare of sick people. The workers are in the position that they simply cannot win. They have had it either one way or the other. But when the hon. Minister protests, for example, that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission was not engaging in strike-breaking, let me quote to the hon. Minister a comment of the Trenton Memorial Hospital Board to the Bennett committee in its second submission, November 20, approximately three weeks after the strike began. What the Trenton Memorial board said was this, that the hospital, despite the strike—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, evidence is now being advanced as to what was said before a commission which is still sitting. We have no knowledge, at least I have no knowledge, of what was argued, advanced, said or done before the Bennett committee. I reported to the House as to its intention to submit an interim report but I have no knowledge of this and I do not think it is proper, until the Bennett report comes in, that that evidence presented to it should be placed on the record.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister has no knowledge, I am glad to enlighten him. I am dealing with—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It may not be your duty—

Mr. MacDonald: I am dealing with the Trenton aspect of the Bennett committee's responsibilities. That has been settled, and reported. Therefore, it is an issue that we can discuss here. In any case, it is a very pertinent issue in dealing with the statements of the hon. Minister of Health—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But these are Labour estimates.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. But do not try to confuse this issue. I conceded that there is a mixing of labour relations in the Ontario Hospital Services Commission because the Ontario Hospital Services Commission shares the managerial responsibilities. Just let me quote—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The commissioner just said no. Is that not right?

An hon. member: He was wrong.

Mr. Singer: I have got the evidence here today.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I come back to this one sentence in the Trenton board submission, "The hospital, despite the strike and despite the allegations of the unions, is still operating within the budget though it has received"—get this, Mr. Chairman—"though it has received assurances it may go beyond its budget should it be necessary to ensure that adequate patient care is maintained."

In other words, if the Trenton management wants to break the strike by bringing in people at a higher wage than it was paying its workers, it had assurances from the Ontario Hospital Services Commission that it could go beyond its budget to break the strike. These are the words of the board itself. Under those circumstances, I submit to the hon. Minister that the issue is clear as crystal, that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission is in the position to break strikes in hospitals, and even assured the Trenton Memorial board at that time.

Now let me proceed with the comment of the hon. Minister of Health—"At this time the hospital engaged replacements on a gradual basis. This is when the strike began". May I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister is completely inaccurate.

As a matter of fact the strike began on the day after the government double-crossed the workers and did not bring in the bill that it had promised, and that was, as I recall, October 29 or 30. The hon. Minister might be interested in knowing—if he has not been informed by the people who are advising him—that before the first deadline in the latter part of September the hospital had actually duplicated its staff. Throughout the month of September they brought in extra people and they had people paired in working; so that the hospital was building an alternative staff and was paying this alternative staff in preparation for what the union might do, if they went on strike.

Therefore the proposition that at the time the hospital engaged—at the time of the strike—"the hospital engaged replacements on a gradual basis" is simply not true. They had had these people on staff for weeks, indeed some for up to two months at that time. All of the staff engaged to fill the positions vacated by those who had gone on strike were paid at an hourly rate. The rates that were paid were practically equivalent to the salary ranges available in the hospital for full-time employees, the hon. Minister of Health contends.

Well, as the hon. member for Parkdale pointed out yesterday—and some of my hon. colleagues interjected — this is true. The people who had been working, the men and women who had gone out on strike, were at the bottom of the salary range. The people who were brought in to break the strike were at the top of the salary range. What really puzzles me, Mr. Chairman, is this: how does the hospital fit this into its budget? What kind of flexibility did it have in its budget that the hospital could say it was doing this within the limits of its budget?

I ask this question because I have a hospital in my riding—the Northwestern General Hospital—which is trying to pioneer some better relationships in terms with its employees.

Last year, for example, they asked the Ontario Hospital Services Commission if they could pay premium rates for weekend shifts, or premium rates for those shifts of the day in which it is most difficult to attract workers and nurses. And the Ontario Hospital Services Commission said no. Even though the federal government is willing to share in the added cost involved in paying premium rates.

The Ontario Hospital Services Commission said to the Northwestern hospital: "If you want to pay premium rates, you will have to cut back somewhere else in your budget, and reduce what you are paying there, so that you can pay the premium rate on these particular shifts."

Now here we have the Trenton Memorial Hospital coming in, presumably living within its budget and with the hon. Minister, as I shall come to in a moment, saying it has cost no more under the circumstances of the strike, when in fact what they were doing was laying off their existing staff—most of whom were at the bottom of the salary range—and they were bringing in what is known in trade union circles as scab workers, under a strike condition, and paying them at the top of the salary range. People who were at a bottom of $130 a month were replaced by people who were getting $170 a month.

Just let me show you how much worse this is. The hon. Minister, in the course of his comments said, for example—I just cannot find the exact quote, but I can paraphrase it, where the hon. Minister said—oh, here we are:

It was not possible to engage certified nursing assistants or the full complement of nursing aides, so that most of the nursing positions were filled by registered nurses who were paid an hourly rate of $1.75.

Now think of this, Mr. Chairman. Nursing aides had gone off on strike and the hon. Minister admits that they could not replace the nursing aides, they could not get them, so they hired registered nurses at $1.75 an hour, so that they were paying not only the top of the salary range, in terms of staff, instead of the bottom of the range, but they were replacing the nursing aides with nurses at $1.75 an hour.

This is all done within the hospital budget? Well, I want to know how much fat there was in that budget, if this can be done. I would invite the hon. Minister of Health to take a look at the situation and find out how much fat there was in it.

Indeed, let us take a look at point five—the hon. Minister's statement:

In conversations with the hospital there is no accurate or easily accessible information available that the costs which were entailed in hiring the additional staff, but it is the opinion of the administrator, with which I concur—said the hon. Minister of Health:

that very little, if any, additional salaries and wages were paid to those who were engaged to work in the hospital, over the salaries and wages that had been paid to the employees that went on strike.

Mr. Chairman, that simply is not correct. Why the hon. Minister should agree with the administrator of the hospital, I do not know, because it is factually not correct. I would suggest this to the hon. Minister, that having gone this far now we have to get the whole story. I think it is the hon. Minister's obligation and I put the question to him: how much more did the Trenton hospital spend in salaries throughout the months of September and October—as they built up a duplicate staff to have the strike-breakers there, available right in the hospital? How much more did the hospital spend by hiring nurses at $1.75 an hour to replace the nursing aides? And how do you fit that into their regular budget?

Indeed, why did they have to fit it into a budget, because the board said: "We have assurances from the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, that if we need more, we can get it."

In other words, if you really want to break this strike, we, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, would underwrite the expansion in your budget.

The case is clear-cut, Mr. Chairman. This is why the hon. Minister of Labour has now got to come back into the picture. Because if the Ontario Hospital Services Commission in the future, as it has done here beyond any shadow of a doubt, is going to provide all the money to break strikes, then the hon. Minister of Labour has a responsibility to make certain that the Act that he is administering for this province, is not going to be violated in this fashion.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: Indeed, Mr. Chairman, let me come back to the final point, just to show you how completely off base the hon. Minister of Health was in the misinformation that he got. I think he should be on guard that the people who write these replies to questions do so with a great deal more concern in the future. Here are points six and seven of the hon. Minister's statement:

The strike was settled on February 5, 1964, and the hospital is now in the process of reinstating the former employees and discharging those who were engaged to take their places. This transition will take about a period of one week, so that all of the staff that was engaged at the time of the strike commencing will be out of the hospital by February 12 or 13.

In lieu of notice to those employees who were engaged at the time the strike commenced, the hospital has made them an accepted offer to pay to each, on termination of their employment, severance pay equivalent to two weeks' salary plus two days' vacation pay for each month worked. This will work out to about seventeen days of pay for each employee.

Now this is very fine for the hon. Minister to get up and show how generous the Trenton hospital board has been. But what the hon. Minister is, in effect, saying is that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, which had guaranteed them all the money they needed either—depending how you want to look at it—to look after the patients or alternatively to break the strike, what they have guaranteed to them is that the people who worked for three months of the strike, or the five or six weeks prior to the strike while they were building up a duplicate staff, after those three months when they are discharged they get two weeks' severance pay.

Great heavens, Mr. Chairman, I know people who work for ten years and cannot get two weeks' severance pay. Indeed, the employees who are now being brought back are going to get two per cent of their wages for vacation or something like this. Now I do not know exactly how that works out, but I am told by the union that what these people got in terms of holiday pay is three times—after working for three months—what the workers are going to get who have been in the hospital and are now back in the hospital, and all this is done within the budget. I say to the hon. Minister of Health that he misinformed the House the other day. He violated in a violent fashion the privilege of a Minister of the Crown to get up, sir, and expound on policy before the orders of the day. It was not argumentative, it was misinformation.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, I think it is time to stand up and refute this. This is a ridiculous statement. I gave this House, sir, information which was given to me by those in a position to give me accurate information. I gave it as accurately, as clearly, as honestly and frankly as I could and if the hon. member believes that I lied to the House, then let him make a charge and let me be brought before the bar of this House.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not say that the hon. Minister lied, I said that he was misinformed.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the misinformation—

Mr. MacDonald: And furthermore, the hon. Minister, if he wants to get petulant, is going to have to face up to some facts. The hon. Minister knew—because I told him back on September 30, when the commitment was given that if they would postpone the strike, the government would bring in compulsory arbitration—the hon. Minister knew that the hospital board had built up a duplicate staff.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have to refute this absolutely. I did not know the hospital had built up an alternate staff.

Mr. MacDonald: Well then, the hon. Minister has not only been misinformed but he cannot hear things that he is told, because I told him. If he will just pause and reflect for a moment. I called him, sir, and I asked him what was the role of the Minister of Health and the Ontario Hospital Services Commission if there was going to be a strike. Would the hon. Minister of Health, for example, exercise his right under the Act to put the hospital board under trusteeship, which I think after the comments of the chairman of the conciliation board is what should have been done a long time ago? I pointed out to the hon. Minister of Health that what was happening was that the hospital had built up an alternative staff and that it had hired buses to bring this staff in through the picket lines.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, again I have to state that as my memory serves me—and I made no record of this conversation—the hon. member stated he understood that arrangements had been made and it was my opinion, sir, that he was not in as good a position to know what was being done by the hospital board as I was myself, and I did not know these things for fact.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to argue it any further. If the hon. Minister cannot recall these conversations, perhaps in the future when I have a conversation with him on a key point, I will write the substance of it down in a letter and send him a copy so that he will have one and I will have one, and we will not be able to dispute it. At the moment I agree it is futile to pursue the matter. All I am saying is, that when the hospital administrator said to the hon. Minister, and the hon. Minister said he concurred that it was living within its budget, it obviously was not living within its budget.

Mr. Chairman: I would ask the member to stay with the department we are dealing with.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that you be rather careful in trying to impose this kind of a rule, because what I am now trying to point out—I know this is very fine, the hon. Minister tried this kind of tactic a moment ago—what I am trying to point out is the manner in which the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, by testimony of the Trenton Memorial Hospital Board, is willing to give the money to break a strike and this is clearly of concern to The Department of Labour. However, I have made my point and I leave it with the hon. Minister both in terms of the consequences he has got to live with because of the double-cross of the union involved here, and in terms of the new problems he now has. We are going to pursue them on this side of the House, I can assure you, in terms of the shared managerial responsibilities of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission in that it has a great control over budgets and the ways in which budgets can be used to influence labour-management relationships, particularly when they reach the critical stage of a strike.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, this debate and its overlapping between the departments of health and labour, places us in a very difficult position. I made some remarks on this particular point yesterday afternoon. I have the documents I referred to yesterday with me now and I think perhaps in continuance of this argument, and to whip away this façade of ignorance, apparently expressed from the government benches, that some of the documents I have here and some of the quotations should now form a part of the record. It is my submission that there can be no doubt, in addition to what the hon. member for Parkdale has said, in addition to what the hon. member for York South has said, and from these documents that I have here, Mr. Chairman, that the hospital services commission controls almost with a hand of iron all of the hospitals in the province of Ontario. When we had these disputes in Trenton and in Windsor, the bargaining should not have been done between the hon.

Minister of Labour and the hon. Minister of Health. That is probably what took place in the Cabinet room, and the façade and the fakery are putting it on to the shoulders of hospital boards. It was all decided in the Cabinet room, and with some substantial bitterness as we have now heard.

Mr. MacDonald: Why should it not be bitterness, if you—

Mr. Singer: Certainly, certainly. The hon. Minister of Labour gets his neck out on the block and he gets it chopped off. I was not at the Cabinet meeting, but those who were know who chopped it off.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: You will never—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am still walking around.

Mr. Singer: It may be the one who is making the most noise over there wielded the axe, I do not know.

Let me read you a few quotations that I have here. Dr. Ian Urquhart, former chairman of the commission, in a speech before the Ontario Hospital Association at its 38th annual convention in the Royal York Hotel on October 29, 1962, told hospital officials this:

You must be very naive if you think that the government does not expect us to have the final say.

Is that an indication that the hospital services commission feels it is going to have the final say?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, this sort of argument is most important at this point to establish the responsibility on this issue. I think the government deliberately plays this game to try to break up the argument, so that it loses its continuity and its context, in order to avoid the real argument that must be directed against the government.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a cover up for its embarrassment.

Mr. Singer: Yes, it certainly is.

Mr. Chairman: Order! What item are you speaking on?

Mr. Singer: I am speaking about the conciliation services in so far as they relate to the activities of The Department of Labour in connection with Trenton and in connection with Windsor. I am making the point, Mr. Chairman, that there was a thoroughgoing waste of time when there was a pretence on behalf of the government that it was bargaining with hospital boards, when in fact it was bargaining with the hospital commission and through the hospital commission with the hon. Minister of Health, and that the bargaining really went on in the Cabinet council and nowhere else. That is the point I am making.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I know the hon. member would want the record straight. I had nothing to do with this, as Minister of Labour, but my department did, with respect to the group of hospitals at Windsor and through the hearings of the Bennett committee. The argument and the disputes at the Windsor hospitals were settled through our conciliation service, and similarly, as I understand it, at the Chatham hospital. There never was any discussion with anyone other than with my own officials as to the position at Windsor, the developments or the status of the matters.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister of Labour raises a very interesting point. Is he prepared to deny that a very important part of the discussions at Windsor related to what the Ontario Hospital Services Commission would allow us, the board, to do? This was the argument put forward by the board, that we could not pay the 18 cents an hour or a request that amounted to the same thing, because the Ontario Hospital Services Commission would never permit us to do that. That was the difficulty you were faced with.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That difficulty was never brought to my attention nor do I know that, because in the Windsor cases my information was that a settlement would be developed, and that in the spirit of those negotiations that a result would ensue. But I have no knowledge whatever of that matter nor did I discuss it, even that point to which the hon. member is referring, with any Minister of the Crown or even with my own officials.

Mr. MacDonald: It is being brought to the attention of the hon. Minister now.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is fair enough.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I accept the hon. Minister's word—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It may be a point but it has to rest where it lies.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I accept the hon. Minister's word that he had no personal knowledge of it, but I am saying to the hon.

Minister that that point was forcibly brought forward in those negotiations.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is a very real possibility, but that is different from what the hon. member said before.

Mr. Singer: I say, Mr. Chairman, that the fact that that point was brought forward indicates the thinking done by the board in Windsor.

The board in Windsor recognized that they were really not in a position to negotiate too far in any labour settlement until they knew what the hospital services commission was going to allow them to do. And finally, when the settlement was made and it was more than 18 cents, it was 20 cents, there must have been the approval of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission to allow them to do that. If the hospital services commission in giving their approval did not get the advice and/or the instructions of the hon. Minister of Health, then I suggest that it is high time the hon. Minister of Health found out what was going on in the hospital services commission.

Now let me proceed to document some of the things that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission says in their letters.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Without interrupting the hon. member, I wish to make a correction of something I said. I said that the Windsor disputes were settled through the Bennett committee. I was in error, my memory had failed me, they were settled in the department offices with Mr. Louis Fine.

Mr. Singer: All right.

The issue I wanted to make about the Windsor dispute was that the substantial argument—let me repeat it again to make the record clear—the substantial argument put forward by the boards was: we cannot give you union representatives what you are asking, because the hospital services commission would not let us give it to you. Subsequently, when the settlement was made, there had to be a change in the mind of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, and I suggest in the minds of the people who run The Department of Health in this province, to allow that settlement to be effected.

The overall point to be made is that in hospital disputes, really, the discussions go on, in effect, between the Minister of Labour—in the broad sense, not personally, but his department—and the Minister of Health—in the broad sense, his department.

It is done, certainly. Those things are worked out. This is my point, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is a conclusion; I am saying that this is not so.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister can disagree all he wants, but I do not accept his argument on it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, it is not true, that is all.

Mr. Singer: Now, Mr. Chairman, let me proceed with this. Here are samples of some letters that have gone out from the hospital services commission. Here is one dated March 6, 1961, to hospitals engaged in or contemplating plans for expansion:

In certain cases work has been proceeded with by hospitals without prior approval by the commission required under The Hospital Act. Let us make clear the necessity for a hospital to obtain commission approval before they do anything. Projects must be outlined to the commission, specifications must be received by the hospital. The hospital must be in possession of a letter authorizing the hospital to proceed with any changes and alterations.

This is one aspect.

A letter was sent off on August 31 to "hospitals engaged in contemplating plans for expansion or change in utilization of space." They refer to the earlier letter and they emphasize again the project must be outlined to the commission in terms of its nature and scope and approval in principle established and, "this approval will be formally communicated to the hospital by letter." Drawings must be submitted, and so on.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I am quite prepared to deal with all matters pertaining to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission when my estimates come up. I have cogent arguments and cogent explanations for all of these letters. Of course these are sent out, but this is neither the time nor the place to deal with them, sir, I submit to you.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, with the very greatest respect for the hon. Minister, I submit he is entirely and completely and absolutely wrong. This whole argument revolves around the correlation of The Department of Health and The Department of Labour insofar as hospital disputes and conciliation services are concerned. The point I am making, and to the embarrassment of the hon. Minister, he knows it is to his embarrassment, is the very violent control, the positive control, the real control of the services commission's exercise over hospital boards.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, you are not going to allow this argument to be beaten apart by the fact that part of the responsibility lies to the hon. Minister of Health and should be dealt with under separate estimates. This is the very point that we are trying to make here this morning, and if this point of order is accepted then you are defeating the Opposition's right to present this argument and present it in its full effect. Definitely!

Now if you are going to stifle us, Mr. Chairman, go ahead, but the only basis on which I will stop is by being ruled out of order and if I am, sir, with the greatest respect, I would challenge your ruling.

Mr. Chairman: Vote—

Mr. Singer: No, no, I am still speaking, Mr. Chairman, and I intend to, until I am ruled out of order.

Mr. Chairman: Order! I think we should deal with The Department of Labour legislation which is before us.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion I believe I am dealing with the labour legislation which is before us.

Mr. Chairman: In my estimation, you are dealing with The Department of Health. If we separate the two, I think we can get on with this order of business.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, may I make representations to you on the point of order?

A point of order has been raised, Mr. Chairman, and I do not believe you have made a definitive ruling, so I believe therefore it is proper to make representations.

Surely it is obvious that this matter affecting The Department of Health is completely germane to the entire argument relating to the Trenton hospital. It is impossible for anyone to deal fully with the Trenton hospital situation without making these references to The Department of Health. Therefore, such references as it is necessary to make in order to deal properly with the Trenton dispute are in order.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, if I can speak to the point of order.

I would say this comes under the proper vote, this is a matter where they had a conciliation board; I have the report here, it involves the Trenton hospital. Because it involves the Trenton hospital, it obviously involves The Department of Health. This is a matter of collective bargaining—bargaining in good faith—which has not been maintained in the government nor by the hospital.

This is most certainly germane to the very vote we have before the House now.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I would ask you, sir, not to artificially restrict it by reason that the subject matter falls within two departments. Surely the hon. member ought to be given the widest range in his remarks, because it is very germane to the estimates of this hon. Minister. I would ask you, sir, to give us leave to proceed. I ask that most courteously.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. members, I would suggest that we deal with the conciliation angle of this with the Minister of Labour and when the hospital end of it comes up, then it should be dealt with under The Department of Health.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that I understand the meaning of your order. I intend to proceed along the line I have been using unless you rule me out of order, sir.

In other words, I am asking, with respect, for your ruling. If you say that I am out of order, then we will have to consider the effect of your ruling, sir.

All right, sir. I was referring then, to this letter of August 31, written by the hospital board, signed by D. W. Ogilvie. Among other things that this letter said was:

A letter establishing approval of the final working drawings and specifications must be received by the hospital before the calling of tenders can be authorized.

In addition to the letter of approval, one set of drawings will be returned to the hospital commission. The hospital must be in possession of a letter authorizing the hospital to proceed, before it can do so.

And listen to this language, Mr. Chairman:

The commission wishes to notify all hospitals that projects for expansion or renovation that have not received commission approval before the actual commencement, cannot be considered eligible for a capital grant.

Hospitals must also keep in mind that any project which will interfere with the utilization of bed space either by reducing or increasing—

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: What have these letters to do with conciliation?

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have made my submission as to what this is.

Mr. Chairman: I think you are out of order.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I intend to establish this point. Are you ruling that my remarks are out of order?

Mr. Chairman: I would like to say—

Mr. Singer: We do not need the help of the hon. Minister over there, either.

Mr. Chairman: What have these letters to do with conciliation?

Mr. Singer: Well now, Mr. Chairman, what do we do from here?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman!

Mr. Singer: No, Mr. Chairman, I want—
Before the hon. Minister gets into this argument, I would like to know what your ruling is.

Some hon. members: Point of order.

Mr. Chairman: I have asked you a question and you have not answered yet.

Mr. Singer: Let me explain it again, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Please speak on the point of order.

Mr. Singer: You said you asked me a question and I have not answered it. How can I answer it when I am interrupted by the hon. Minister?

Mr. Bryden: It is the hon. Provincial Treasurer who is impolite.

Mr. MacDonald: We are back on the old, old track.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I submit that a discussion as to the power of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission over hospital boards is entirely out of order in this discussion.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the hon. Provincial Treasurer who was not even in the House when the original discussion started, and who now interjects himself into a point of order which he thinks is going to save the government's face, let me explain it again. The argument was made at substantial length.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order! I request an answer to my question.

Mr. Singer: What is your question again, sir? I have lost track, sir, because of all these interruptions.

Mr. Chairman: What have these letters to do with conciliation?

Mr. Singer: I was trying to explain this, sir. I thought I had done it three times, but I will do it again. Number one: the suggestion has been made by the hon. member for Parkdale, the hon. member for York South, and by myself, yesterday and again today, that—well, at least they are a lot heavier in their intellect than the hon. Minister who has nothing but noise coming out of his mouth and no sense.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Singer: The point, Mr. Chairman, is that we are suggesting that the apparent negotiations with hospital boards, under this vote 1003, really were controlled by the hospital services commission and that the discussions, in effect, took place between the two departments, and that the true facts were not brought to the public's attention. The point that I am making—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is an absolute falsehood and I ask the hon. member to withdraw it.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am not withdrawing this at all. This is my argument and if I am allowed to proceed with it—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I insist that this be—that note be made of what I said. I have no knowledge—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, surely—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: —of correspondence with Mr. Ogilvie or anybody else.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Not at all. Not at all.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): He says he has not. You have to take his word for it.

Mr. Singer: It is very difficult, Mr. Chairman, really, if the hon. Provincial Treasurer is going to get into it—the hon. Minister of that new department over there is—

An hon. member: —the high-priced help.

Mr. Singer: Now, if I am going to try to answer your question, at least I must have the floor.

An hon. member: You have had it.

Mr. Chairman: I am still waiting for an answer to my question.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: These are my estimates—

Mr. Singer: The point that I am trying to establish again, Mr. Chairman, is this connection. To salve the injured feelings of the hon. Minister of Labour, I accepted his word about half an hour ago that he had no personal knowledge of this, but I suggested to him that in the Windsor dispute these representations were made, whether to his knowledge or not. That was the point we were at, and I am still suggesting that in the Windsor dispute and in the Trenton dispute the determining factor was the attitude of the hospital services commission, and through it, The Department of Health.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Would the hon. member come again, repeat that statement? I think the hon. member is as interested in getting the facts as I am.

Mr. Singer: Indeed I am.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Would the hon. member just give me the sequence he gave there a moment ago?

Mr. Singer: The sequence in Windsor was this. When the people bargaining on behalf of the unions asked for 18 cents an hour, or benefits totalling the amount of 18 cents an hour, which would have cost in their end result 18 cents an hour, the substantial suggestion from the people bargaining on behalf of the hospitals was: We cannot do this because we would never get the approval of the hospital services commission. Subsequently, a settlement was arranged. That settlement was in the approximate amount of 20 cents an hour, and I am suggesting that if the words that were put forward on behalf of hospital management meant anything in their first instance, the settlement of 20 cents an hour must have had approval of the hospital services commission.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: On that revised statement, which is in—

Mr. Singer: It is not revised.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, no. I said, "which is in a little clearer form". I would have to say I have no knowledge of it, as to whether true or false.

Mr. Singer: I implied no personal—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Our department has no knowledge of what the hospital board did to anybody else.

Mr. Singer: I implied no personal knowledge of this by the hon. Minister at any time.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Nor the department.

Mr. Singer: I say that there is, through the conciliation officers who were listening to these arguments. Somebody in the department must have known about it.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (Humber): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Downsview is chasing a squirrel up a tree. He knows the duties—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, let me proceed further. In a speech delivered in Toronto, London and Sudbury in October, 1960, by Dr. Urquhart, he had this to say about hospital budgets:

The budget is submitted to the commission for review and approval. Once it is approved on the basis of allowable cost, the hospital is expected to live within its estimates. In this way, the senior partner, that is the commission, is kept informed of projected expenditures of the junior partners, that is, the hospitals.

Mr. Chairman, surely this establishes clearly what is happening here. The hospital commission through its spokesman, Dr. Urquhart, the chairman, says it is the senior partner. The hospitals are the junior partners.

Or what could be clearer than this one? A letter of October 26, 1962, signed by Dr. Urquhart, is, I think, perhaps the most important quotation that I have. He reports the previous correspondence and he says:

My letter of August 3 gave you fair warning that you might find yourself in trouble at not having had prior consultation with us.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Please at least be polite.

Mr. Chairman: As Chairman, I cannot see where this letter has any relation to conciliation matters dealing with the Ontario Hospital Services Commission; it must deal with The Department of Labour. Today we are dealing with The Department of Labour and methods and causes of strikes, so I would suggest that you are out of order in reading that letter.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, you have not heard this letter. I just started on it.

Some hon. members: Out of order.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, it is a very simple question. We are dealing with the conciliation service—

Mr. Chairman: Order! I have made the order and I feel that we should stand by this order and deal with conciliation—

Mr. Singer: I am trying to deal with conciliation—

Mr. Chairman: You are dealing with the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, not with The Department of Labour.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, with the greatest respect, if you allow—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order! I must have you continue on The Department of Labour estimates.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, does your ruling mean that I cannot read any of these letters that I have here? I am not asking any of the hon. Ministers over there. I am asking the Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: If you have a letter there relating to conciliation in The Department of Labour, you may read it, if it is definitely directed to The Department of Labour—

Mr. Singer: I am suggesting that it is, sir.

Mr. Chairman: —and not dealing with the Ontario Hospital Services Commission or The Department of Health.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, you mean a letter on the letterhead of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission is out of order, is that what you are saying, sir?

Mr. Chairman: It has nothing to do with labour.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, surely labour deals with wages, and the control of wages deals with these estimates.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, you have given your ruling and I suggest we proceed.

Mr. Chairman: Anything to do with labour.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand how—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: It is rather a pity, Mr. Chairman, that the government—

Mr. Chairman: Order! As Chairman, I am not a member of the legal profession, I am just one of these average Joes who goes along the way. My understanding of this vote today is that we are dealing with The Department of Labour and conciliation. I think we should keep on that and get on with the business.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, with the greatest respect, certainly it is not my intention to embarrass you—

Several hon. members: Oh, no, no.

Mr. Singer: It is rather interesting to hear the elucidating remarks made by some of the hon. Ministers. But I submit, sir, that it is impossible to reasonably discuss the question of labour conciliation unless we can talk about wages and who controls those wages. And if we have to fragment this argument into two sets of estimates, then we cannot put our case forward properly. It is difficult, sir, to put the Opposition under such strictures, particularly when these facts are so embarrassing to some of the hon. Ministers of the government.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is not embarrassing at all.

Mr. Singer: The point is, substantially, Mr. Chairman, without reading the letters, that they embarrass the people involved—and this is your ruling?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is just out of order, that is all.

Mr. Singer: It is interesting that the hon. Prime Minister now has joined in the list because he has just returned to the House at this point and he has not even heard it. He has not even heard it.

Mr. Chairman: Order! May I ask the members to withhold any further comments and that the speaker, if he so desires, speak on conciliation and The Department of Labour estimates?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, that is the only reason I was speaking this morning. That was the point I was trying to establish. These letters will be read at the time, sir, when you say it is in order, if you say it is not in order this afternoon. But these letters establish firmly that wages are controlled in hospitals by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission and through The Department of Health.

Very briefly, the point is that the bargaining took place between The Department of Labour and The Department of Health, and anything else that was told to the people of Ontario was a sham and a delusion and the government well knows it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is pretty extravagant language from an allegedly responsible Opposition.

Mr. Singer: Well, when you saddle us with rules and objections and barracks, this is the only thing you let us get on the record, and that is the only thing we can put there. If you would listen reasonably, then we will tell you reasonably.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member heard how I described his remarks.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think the business of the House would be expedited if the hon. gentleman on the Treasury benches would permit the Chairman to make his own rulings and make up his own mind on points of order—

Mr. Chairman: Order! Speak to the estimates, please.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, we saw a lengthy display of interjections and barracking, all of it out of order, by the hon. gentleman across the floor, trying to get the hon. member for Downsview ruled out of order. However, I think the subject under discussion has been dealt with quite fully, or at any rate as fully as possible at this time.

I would like to turn to another matter, perhaps not of quite as great significance, but nevertheless of some interest.

I would refer the hon. Minister to page J-7 of the latest public accounts—that is, the accounts for 1962-63. A little more than half way down the page there is a general heading "Conciliation boards, commissions, labour safety council of Ontario, etc." Under that main heading there is a sub-heading, "Conciliation boards, judges' per diem living allowances, conciliation officers' remuneration" and under that sub-heading are listed a number of individuals who during the fiscal year concerned received amounts of $3,500 or more.

One of the individuals referred to is a Mr. W. H. Dickie, who is shown as having received $21,000 under this heading during the fiscal year. Now, it is quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that the $21,000 was for per diem allowances only, because further down Mr. Dickie is also shown as having received $5,361.85 for expenses.

Mr. Chairman, the per diem allowance for chairman of conciliation boards, as I confirmed yesterday privately with the hon. Minister, is $60 a day. One divides $60 into $21,000, and unless my slide rule has a forked tongue on it, it comes to 350 days, from which it would appear that during the fiscal year 1962-63 Mr. Dickie sat on conciliation boards as chairman for 350 days. This would mean that he sat there for all of the normal working days in the year, all of the Saturdays, all of the holidays, and 47 of the 52 Sundays.

Mr. Chairman, I was reading in Pogo not long ago a proposal to establish a 45-minute hour. I am wondering if The Department of Labour is going in the other direction and has established some sort of a 10-day week, or is there some other explanation of this apparently excessive zeal on the part of Mr. Dickie in settling labour disputes in the province and the apparent excessive zeal of the department in making use of his services?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am glad the hon. member raised this point because it opens up the question of the appointment of the chairmen of the conciliation boards. During the year 1963, that is the calendar year, there were some 327 cases, or conciliation boards, appointed; of that number some 275 had their chairman selected by consent of the two parties involved. And that left some 52 chairmen for boards to be appointed under the Act by the Minister and the department. So therefore we have a preponderance of about 84 per cent of all conciliation boards selecting their own chairman by consent, which is a highly desirable situation. Looking down the list of the number of appointments, I find that Mr. W. H. Dickie sat on 83 boards, 79 of which he was the chairman by consent of the parties.

Mr. Bryden: Well, that is very interesting, Mr. Chairman, but it does not answer my question. I am not suggesting that Mr. Dickie may not be an acceptable chairman to the parties, I have no doubt he is; I do not happen to know him but I have no doubt he is quite competent in this field. The question I was asking was: How it was possible in the fiscal year 1962-63 for Mr. Dickie to collect $21,000 in per diem allowance, as chairman of boards?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I do not have the details but I do know that in computing the number of days for which an allowance may be paid, there are two days allowed in each of them for the preparation of the report. Against a number of cases, such as 83 cases, I can imagine that when you relate the two-day factor—the writing of the report—to the number of days in the year and the other factors, it would probably reconcile itself.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman on the calendar that I have been used to working on, there are only 365 days in a year and seven days in a week and I have put forward a piece of simple arithmetic that would show that in the fiscal year concerned, at the rate of $60 per day, provided he collected only once for any one day, Mr. Dickie must have been sitting for 350 days and I submit that is manifestly impossible.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I could not have made my point clear. On each appointment the chairman is entitled to an amount equal to two days' allowances, which would be $120 for each case for the preparation and for the overall supervision of drafting of the report. So if you take $120 and multiply it by 83, you would have something in this order, you would have $9,960, and if you take that from $21,000, it leaves us with $11,040. I would think that would be the figure we would need to relate, in terms of $60 a day, to the actual work days of the year.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, I have some questions I want to ask along the same line, because I was quite interested in looking up those figures.

I would like to find out from the hon. Minister whether they have a set rate for the judges to sit on these conciliation boards. Is it depending on who is the judge or the magistrate or whether you have a set rate?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is a set rate of $60 per day for the chairman.

Mr. Belanger: Now besides that, these magistrates and judges do receive their regular salary in the performance of their duties?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, that is true.

Mr. Belanger: As magistrates or judges. You find also, you just mentioned there, that one of them was on 89 different types of cases during the year?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Eighty-three cases, in 79 of which he was selected as chairman by the consent of the parties.

Mr. Belanger: I am wondering how much time he had to look after his own work as a judge.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Dickie is not a judge, nor a magistrate.

Mr. Belanger: I see. He is not a judge.

Well, I will say that I was quite interested in looking at this, because some of these people actually received more than the deputy Minister himself is receiving for a whole year's work with the department. That seems to be rather out of proportion.

Vote 1003 agreed to.

On vote 1004:

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 1004 carried?

Mr. Bryden: No, Mr. Chairman, far from being carried, there are a number of points that some of us would like to deal with under this vote.

I would like first of all to raise a question with the hon. Minister in regard to the enforcement of the vacations with pay provisions of The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act.

As far as I can discover from what connection I have had with this particular section of the enforcement procedures within the department, there is a most cumbersome procedure, most disadvantageous to employees affected, in collecting unpaid vacation pay.

At any rate, when an employee leaves the employ of a particular firm, as far as I can determine the procedure he must go through if he complains that his vacation pay has not been paid upon the termination of his employment, is something like this. He must go to the department and get a vacation book.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: To start with, yes.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, he has to go to the department and get a book on which stamps can be entered. He then has to go to the employer and give him this book personally. He cannot mail it to him, because then he would not be able to prove that the employer got it, I take it. He has to give it to him personally and ask him to put stamps in the book. Then he waits a certain period of time and if the employer does not put stamps in the book, he then complains to the department and then the department will probably take the matter up with the employer; and no doubt if the stamps or money are owing to the employee the department will no doubt make sure that he gets it.

But why does the employee have to go through all this folderol? The amounts of money concerned are not large, and if an employee has gone to other employment, to go down to the labour department and get a book and take it to his employer in person, and perhaps not find the employer there, then have to go back again some other time—this likely means he has to take time off his employment and lose money. By the time he is all through with chasing around from here to there and everywhere, the amount of money he might get may not do much more than cover his expenses.

It seems to me that the department could work out a simpler procedure than that. If the employee could provide them with, shall we say, a notarized statement that he worked at such and such a wage rate for such a period of time for such and such an employer, and that he believed he was entitled to a certain amount in vacation pay and did not receive it, surely the department could take it over from there instead of having him chasing all over town, paying for gas if he drives his own car and for parking charges, taking time off work and generally going through a procedure that it makes it hardly worth the candle in collecting the money.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The facts are not quite as bad as indicated. This is a subject in which I am interested. We are having a look at it at the moment. The vast preponderance of employers provide the books for the employees themselves. I make that point and whether or not we should make some further changes to deal with what you are describing—which is the minority—is now under advisement at the moment.

Mr. Bryden: Can I just interject one thing? I am not of course talking about the vast majority of employers, I am talking about the very small minority who do not pay the vacation pay, therefore do not provide the men with a book.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes. Then, on the other end of the deal, the books of stamps can be cashed after June 30, and you will recall that date exists because the intention of the books themselves was to provide cash toward a vacation during the summer months, so hence the June 30 date. But on the cashing of the books that can be done at any branch of any bank anywhere.

Mr. Bryden: It is not that, Mr. Chairman, that is not the point I am concerned about; and I would agree with the hon. Minister that the system works fine in the vast majority of cases where employers are obeying the law, there is no real trouble. It is where an employer, either wilfully or through ignorance, does not obey the law and an employee has a claim for vacation pay, that is where the difficulty arises.

Now the procedure I outlined, though I would not vouch for it on every single detail, is essentially the procedure that constituents of mine have had to go through in order to collect vacation pay or stamps from an employer who refused to give it to them even though he was lawfully required to do so. In one case I think the amount of money was $14 or something. I do not know how much the man netted by the time he was all through with the trouble, but it was not very much. I should think that this could be handled in a way that would not impose so much trouble on the aggrieved employee.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think the point is well taken and I will be glad to examine it.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there are quite a few other things that I want to deal with and I think some of my hon. colleagues are also interested in a number of matters under this vote.

I want to refer in 1004 to the labour standards branch, which I think covers such things as hours of work, vacations with pay, minimum wage, industrial standards and so on. The hon. Minister indicated in his preliminary remarks yesterday that there is some change in policy—it would appear to be a change for the better—as far as the enforcement of some of these basic labour standards are concerned. In past years we in this group have complained frequently that as far as minimum wages was concerned there was really no enforcement at all except through inspectors of the unemployment insurance commission. The department did no regular checking of the books of employers to make sure that the law was being complied with unless there was a complaint, and complaints in this area are very infrequent because the employees affected by minimum wage legislation are usually not very quick to stand up for their rights and frequently are ignorant of their rights.

However, the hon. Minister has indicated that they are now going to do spot-checking—was I right on that? I believe from my own observation that when the new orders in the golden horseshoe went into effect the department did a comprehensive checking job on all the establishments in the area, is that correct? You went through them all?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think practically all eating establishments were in that segment.

Mr. Bryden: The establishments where you thought there might be ignorance of the order or unwillingness to comply with—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It included that category to which the hon. member refers, but it went far beyond that to include people who were complying and against whom there were no complaints. Some 6,800 employers involved in this direct enumeration of information actually were contacted.

Mr. Bryden: They were interviewed and their books perhaps looked at. On the new policy of spot-checking, what sort of principles does the hon. Minister or the department plan to follow? Are you going to concentrate in areas where you believe there may be violations? Is it envisaged that over a period of time perhaps all establishments may be inspected in a routine way, or just how does the department plan to proceed?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Of course, in the first instance the most elementary form of enforcement is carried out after a complaint. Then the question of the spot-check would come in. As your operation increases in this field—and I am deliberately not using or relating this to police work at all—but as your work in an area of this type advances and is developed, there is certain information pertaining to industries as such, or pertaining to area operation or individual operations, which comes to the attention of the department. Assuming a degree of confidence on the part of the enforcement branch, the spot-checks can be a fairly effective development because of the general knowledge gained in the course of their employment.

At some point our objective is to improve the enforcement factor, and we hope that with education combined with it there would be an increased degree of co-operation on the part of employers. I suppose the real point before us—and I think it must be in your mind, and certainly in our minds—is to what point does the formal absolute checking of enforcement have to be carried to meet an acceptable degree of enforcement in this field, or do we have to go beyond that and say a system has to be set up regardless of cost which will check everybody once a year?

As I understand it, even income tax returns today check out in detail against a spot-check selection formula. We will try to do this, and as you know, the number of inspectors in this branch is being increased from 15 to 37. We are presently recruiting for these jobs and I have tried to indicate to the House that the department's views, and certainly my own, are that this enforcement aspect, whether it is by way of education or detailed inspection, must be advanced. I think we will just have to keep a careful eye on it and see what the results are, to see how effective this operation is.

Mr. Bryden: How much is paid the inspectors for this work?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The range is $5,000 to $6,000.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I realize the hon. Minister and his department have a problem that is not easily answered. I think they are quite seriously trying to meet the problem, they are trying to make sure that the minimum wages will be paid, and I will not dwell any further on that aspect of the matter.

I would, however, like to make some references to the minimum wage orders now in effect in the golden horseshoe area. I will take the general order, because any comments I have to make are well illustrated in that order. I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister and to the department and to the government that there are exemptions in that order carried over from the old female minimum wage orders from time immemorial, which are not desirable and provide some real loopholes. The first I would like to refer to is the provision in section 6 of the general order whereby an employer who has employees on a piecework basis will be deemed to have complied with the terms of the minimum wage order if at least 80 per cent or four-fifths of the total number of employees on piecework receive not less than the minimum amount prescribed by the order.

I would certainly like to hear some sort of justification of that provision. It seems to me to have no basis in common sense at all. A minimum wage is what it is described—it is a minimum; it is an amount which the government in its wisdom has decided is the absolute minimum that anybody should get, and yet the order says that some people can get less than the minimum. I do not think there is anybody who will argue that the minimum wage of $1 an hour is any more than enough to keep body and soul together. Why should there be provision in the order whereby an adult worker can be paid less than this?

I am also going to suggest with regard to this particular point that it makes enforcement very difficult—enforcement in the sense that it depends upon complaints, as it does to some degree. An employee in a textile factory, shall we say, and that is where we frequently find the combination of piecework rates and low rates, may end up the week with less than the minimum wage. That employee has no way of knowing unless he or it is more likely she, makes a survey of all the employees in the factory, whether or not the minimum wage order has been complied with. It is quite possible it could have been complied with. She may be one of the 20 per cent who for some strange reason are considered suitable to get less than $1 an hour. But she does not know; maybe half the employees are getting less than the minimum wage. Unless an inspector from the department comes in and goes through the books, nobody will ever know the difference.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister that this is not only unjust in itself, but it produces a tremendous loophole in the order—and right in some of the plants where an enforcement is most needed, that is in some of these textile plants. I know specifically of one textile outfit in Toronto with quite a large payroll that switched everybody over to piece rates, although the majority had previously been on time rates, in anticipation of these minimum wage orders. Obviously what this company had in mind was that it was going to get at least the 20-per-cent exemption that the order permits. I have no doubt that it would have no objection if it managed to get away with an exemption even bigger than 20 per cent. But, as I said, this provision along with others has been carried over from previous orders. It is an ancient type of provision. I do not think it ever did have any sense in it. I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister that it should be removed from the present orders.

There are a couple of other exemptions that I would like to refer to, also. I do not know if the hon. Minister would like to make any comments on this specific one—otherwise I can go ahead with the others as well.

I would like to suggest that there is no reasonable basis for permitting a lower rate than the prescribed minimum for so-called learners. This, again, is an old type of provision in minimum wage orders not only in Ontario but in many other jurisdictions. I think that you will probably find that the province of Saskatchewan is one jurisdiction where there is no special rate for learners. I will say that I had something to do with that a good many years ago and for exactly the same reasons that I am now going to put before the hon. Minister.

The minimum wage is a minimum. It is a learner's rate, if you like, or an unskilled rate. It is the rate for labour with no skill of any kind whatever. It is the lowest rate that can be permitted. So then why do we allow rates lower than that? Why do we say that 20 per cent of the staff—or where there are less than five, one of the staff—can be paid a certain amount less than the bare minimum? I would suggest to the hon. Minister that the minimum is really a minimum, the rock-bottom rate for unskilled common labour. There should be no exceptions to it because of lack of skill or knowledge on the part of the employee.

The third exemption that I want to object to is the exemption of seasonal workers—it is not a total exemption—the provision whereby lower rates may be paid to seasonal workers in plants processing perishable fruits and vegetables who are employed for not more than 16 consecutive weeks in a calendar year.

Why should these employees be left out in the cold? Why should they not be allowed to get the same minimum which our group considers inadequate and which the government, I presume, does not consider to be any more than adequate? Why should it be possible for them to be paid less than the minimum amount?

It is true they are casual workers, Mr. Chairman, but casual workers are the people most in need of protection.

I know that we will get a story that they are married women and are only working for pin money. That is sometimes true. Many of them are people who desperately need the money in order to live. They may be married women at that, and they may need this money to assist in balancing the family budget, but I submit to the hon. Minister that they are just as much entitled as any other group of workers to get the minimum, the true minimum, provided by the order.

I would like to put the proposals before the hon. Minister that he remove these three exemptions. I would be interested, if he sees fit to do so, to hear any comments he might care to make on these exemptions, or relaxations, of the order.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This is a difficult area in some respects. From one side of the argument it is not difficult at all. From another side of the argument it is.

The objective of the department is to try to arrive at some form of regulation which meets the—how shall I describe it?—which meets economic reality.

Now at the moment, as you know, we are concluding a review of an analysis of this minimum wage legislation and I shall certainly review these points that the hon. member has raised, having in mind what he said this morning.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, before we leave this vote 1004, and speaking of economic reality—if I may quote the phrase which the hon. Minister just handed me—I would like to read a letter to indicate the kind of problem that is being faced because of the government's piecemeal implementation of minimum wage. This is a letter which is addressed to the hon. Minister on October 10, by M. A. Henry Limited in Dundas, over the signature of A. C. Palmer. They present the kind of problem that they are faced with:

We feel the new minimum wage law creates a situation of unfair business practice. We have a competitor making identical lines located only 20 miles away and selling to the same customers coast to coast. The difference in labour rates based on 50 employees at 30 cents an hour amounts to $30,000 per year, which is 30 per cent on a $100,000 annual payroll.

The change in minimum wage rates is beneficial to the economy providing the rates are province-wide, not restricted to a very small area.

If I can just interject, Mr. Chairman, I think there is the key to the whole protest and its unchallengeable validity. I continue:

In the interest of ourselves and other small manufacturers in this area, we can foresee having to curtail our plants within a very short period of time as we cannot hope to compete.

Under this new law, it compels us to hire experienced help which means we can no longer hire older people or untrained people, as we have had a policy for years of hiring the above categories and using a three-month progressive wage increase.

These mean our older, experienced help must get more than the minimum, which again puts us in a more unfavourable competitive position. As an example, it is possible to pay experienced help in zone three, 65 cents an hour. Our inexperienced help has to receive a minimum of $1, and the permanent help must have a higher rate of at least $1.10 to $1.25.

We have been examining several lines, not made in Canada. This now becomes impossible because a competitor can start duplicating within three months at half our wage rates.

As you realize, each increase in wages increases all benefits such as Workmen's Compensation, Unemployment Insurance, vacation pay, etc., which again increases the wage differential on a competitive basis.

We cannot understand why cities such as London, Kitchener, Barrie and many others, can have a preferable position over a town such as Dundas.

We feel the situation should be reviewed and immediate action taken.

Interestingly enough, I got a copy of this letter, and I believe hon. members in other parties got it, from the industrial commissioner in Dundas. So it is not the concern of one industry. This is the concern of a number of small industries in this particular area because of your piecemeal approach.

Now the hon. Minister was a little coy yesterday when he invited those of us on this side of the House to review what he had said in terms of the prospect of extending minimum wages and he made some reference to "other industrial areas."

I draw from his reference to his own comment that there is some prospect that he is going to do a bit more piecemeal work across the province. I just want to say to him, Mr. Chairman, that if this is what he is about to do, he is going to compound this kind of problem all across the province.

The interesting thing about this letter, Mr. Chairman, is that the man is not protesting minimum wages. This I found rather encouraging. He has been indulging, because of the competitive position, in the exploitation of workers. He says that if it is of value to the whole economy, fine, let us make it a part of the whole economy and we will come up to it, because then we are on the same basis as the rest of our competitors.

So I hope that the hon. Minister will give serious consideration to an extension of the minimum wage across the whole province as quickly as possible, and I do not mean over a period of umpteen years, but in the foreseeable future, so that he can avoid this.

I do it for another reason, but I will not take a great deal of time to go into it today,

Mr. Chairman. One of the interesting developments of the last year or so is the recognition in the North American continent, in our affluent society, of the existence of a hard core of people who cannot be described as living in anything other than poverty. This has become such a wide political issue that President Lyndon Johnson in his State of the Union address at the beginning of January, in effect, said that this was going to have top legislative priority.

Now the great problem in Canada is that we have no comparable statistics—the kind of statistics that have been made available by a number of researchers in the United States, perhaps most dramatically presented by Michael Harrington in his book, "The Other American." We simply have not got these statistics in Canada. But I want to say this to the hon. Minister: there is no doubt that we have our comparable kind of problem.

In the United States, they say it is a fifth, anywhere from 32 million to 50 million people in the work force who are below a level that cannot be described as anything other than poverty. If one just takes cognizance of one figure, namely, that in Canada, of the 6.7 million people in the working force, there were two million of them who did not qualify as earning sufficient that they had to pay any income tax at all. The number of people filing was only 4.7 million, so that two million of the 6.7 million are in the category that are not paying income tax.

Now I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, for us these people are "the other Canada"—people who are living at a level which is really a level of poverty in our affluent society. If that figure is a general gauge as to how large the group is in Canada, it means that we have not got a fifth of the people in Canada, we have got closer to a quarter or a third of the people in Canada.

The main contribution to the existence—to the perpetuation—of this bloc of poverty-stricken who are not sharing in the prosperity of Canada, who are out of the mainstream of prosperity in Canada, are the people we could rescue in one swoop by a minimum wage law across the whole of the province of Ontario. I present this to the hon. Minister in the hope that he will be persuaded to cease this hop-skipping across the province from one industrial area to another and complicating the problems as they are laid out by this industry in Dundas.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I think this is a good thing to discuss, as we are. I would even say that the proposition is more complicated than the hon. member for York South has advanced. We are trying to establish areas of minimum wages and he mentioned a certain industry.

The Ontario proportion of the textile industry occupies a very small percentage of the national total—probably something in the order of 25 per cent, I think it is, something in that area.

The preponderance of the operation of that industry lies in another jurisdiction, where it is not for me to describe it or to get into a great discussion. But the realities of the situation are that where that industry is predominantly located, there is probably a minimum wage of 65 cents. I am not trying to be provocative, but these are the facts of life. It is not the government's position, nor is it the position of any of us in this House to do anything that is going to deprive people of jobs, or put an employer out of business on the other hand. Yet we have got to advance in this broader social direction to which reference is made, and while I do not back away from this in any sense, I am trying to give you some idea of the thoughts that go through my mind. What we do should be done facing reality, but in the broader picture it is essential that we move forward to a betterment of the social conditions of particularly that group to which you refer.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate the problem of the hon. Minister of Labour. This is one of the great difficulties of having minimum wage legislation and other basic labour standards under provincial jurisdiction. I am not saying there are not certain advantages to that, but there are some real difficulties. The difficulty he referred to is an important one, and one that we certainly have to bear in mind. I understand that the federal Minister of Labour is calling a conference in the near future, I have forgotten the date, of provincial labour Ministers and their—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: March 10 and 11.

Mr. Bryden: —advisors and I would hope that the hon. Minister of Labour for Ontario might put before that conference some proposals for co-operation in the field of minimum wages. I do not think there is much likelihood that we will get agreement on the proposition that the federal government should set minimum standards. That has been talked about for as long as I have had any association with labour problems, which is about 20-odd years, and I do not think it is any closer to being achieved now than it was when I first heard about it.

I think, even so, that there should be much more energetic efforts made than have ever been made in the past to try to get real co-operation. I think it should be on the basis that the hon. member for York South mentioned, on the basis of eliminating poverty. Poverty is the only word that one can use to describe the conditions in which an incredibly large number of people in this country have to live.

I dwelt with that problem at considerable length in the Throne Speech debate. I will not try now to repeat what I said there, but when one sees a person with a family of two or three children getting our current minimum wage of $1 an hour, say for a 40-hour week, making $40 a week gross, one can only say that he lives in abject poverty. I may say that before the hon. Minister's new orders came into effect, I knew some who got less than that—men working in restaurants, particularly back in the kitchen where they get no tips, trying to bring up families on 90 or 95 cents an hour.

We have just got to get to grips with this minimum wage problem. Admittedly we have to face the competitive problem referred to by the hon. Minister, but I think there also comes a time when we have to say: Competition be damned, there is a certain basic standard and we are not going to allow anything below that in our province, and an industry that exists on the basis of the crudest possible exploitation of labour has no place at all in this province. I think a decision has to be made at some point. I think the hon. Minister should get on with the job. I know he is having all sorts of surveys made, which no doubt will produce very interesting information, but I think he should get on with the job of extending this $1 minimum to the whole province. Let us get started with that. I think we should also have in mind raising the dollar minimum, because it is clearly inadequate in this day and age, but we should first get that dollar across the whole province.

I do not think it has to wait for the hon. Minister's survey. I think we know ourselves, from our own knowledge and information, that a dollar an hour is all too little to live on. We also know that there are many people in this province outside the golden horseshoe area who are getting less than a dollar an hour.

This is one of many useful weapons in the attack on poverty, and I am hoping that the hon. Minister will proceed more expeditiously, if I may say so, than he appears to be proceeding at the moment with the establishment of a dollar minimum in Ontario. While he is at it, I have no doubt he will use whatever influence and powers of persuasion he has to see that certain other jurisdictions also get up to that sort of a minimum.

I may say that the fact that the Ontario government has finally genuinely got into the minimum wage field, even if it is only in a portion of the province, is probably a major factor in breaking the log jam, and we may now see a disposition by other provinces to move.

During the election campaign the Tory Party made a great noise about the fact, and in my constituency my opponent made a great noise about the fact that in Saskatchewan the minimum wage rates are lower than they are under these new orders in Ontario. Of course, neither my Tory opponent nor I think the party generally ever bothered to point out that in Saskatchewan there are no areas at all comparable to the sole area in Ontario to which this minimum applies; and that in the cities in Ontario, such as London, Windsor, Sault Ste. Marie, and so on, which are in any sense comparable to the largest cities in Saskatchewan, there is no minimum wage at all for men and the minimum wage for women is something like 45 or 50 cents an hour. They did not bother to point that out.

I may say that the Saskatchewan minimum wage, even for the smallest hamlet, is 50 per cent higher than that. I would think that a province like Saskatchewan, and other western provinces, now that Ontario has gotten into this field, can move forward again. But they were simply blocked because of the competitive fact that the hon. Minister was talking about. There came a point beyond which they could not go without creating an unfavourable position for their own provinces.

In summation, Mr. Chairman, I would urge on the hon. Minister again that this problem of poverty is one of our most acute problems and that he has a big role to play in alleviating it by moving ahead as rapidly as possible with his minimum wage legislation.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the vote carry?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I think in light of some references the hon. member for Woodbine made this morning, having in mind the coming federal-provincial conference on labour matters, and then there was some reference to minimum wages, I think it must be obvious to all of us that minimum wage theories, and legislation on a national basis, offer some very interesting possibilities.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the House rises, I would like to table a copy of a letter I have sent to the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada dealing with pensions.

On Monday, the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) will lead off the budget debate followed by the NDP representative. On Tuesday we will complete the Throne Speech debate. On Wednesday, the House will not sit. The agricultural committee and the educational committee are going to Guelph. I have made arrangements for any other hon. members, such as the new members, who would like to see some of our hydro installations, to view one installation on the lake, which is a steam installation, and then go to Niagara Falls to see the developments there. With this in mind, the House will not sit on Wednesday. I think this will be a whole day's activity, but we will sit in night sessions on Tuesday and Thursday nights.

Apparently the Canadian government commission was to meet on Wednesday. That meeting has been cancelled and will be held subsequently.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Would the hon. Prime Minister care to tell us what the general—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is rather long and involved. I will give you a copy of it. It is really our comments upon the variations in the plan that were proposed and submitted in a letter which I received on January 11 from Rt. hon. Mr. Pearson.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.05 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Monday, February 17, 1964

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Monday, February 17, 1964

Presenting reports, Mr. Yaremko	659
Statement re Brotherhood Week, Mr. Robarts	660
Resumption of the debate on the Budget, Mr. Whicher, Mr. Bryden	660
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. W. B. Lewis, agreed to	686
Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act, bill to amend, Mr. Rowntree, second reading	686
Operating Engineers Act, 1964, bill intituled, Mr. Rowntree, second reading	686
Highway Traffic Act, bill to amend, Mr. Haskett, second reading	687
Bailiffs Act, 1960-1961, bill to amend, Mr. Cass, second reading	687
Town of Cochrane, bill respecting, Mr. Brunelle, on second reading	687
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Singer, agreed to	688
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	688

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. Report of the Minister of Agriculture.
2. Report of the federated colleges of The Ontario Department of Agriculture.
3. Report of the Agricultural Research Institute of Ontario.
4. Report of the Ontario Stockyards Board.
5. Report of the Ontario Food Terminal Board.
6. Report of the Co-operative Loans Board of Ontario.
7. Report of the Ontario Telephone Development Corporation.
8. Report of the Ontario Telephone Service Commission.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question to ask of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) a copy of which he has received.

Does the hon. Prime Minister agree with the statement of the chairman of the special committee on portable pensions, Mr. Coward:

That the pension plan was something the federal Liberals got stuck with in their election platform.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question, I can only say that I really have no opinion upon what the federal Liberals think about their platform. They do not consult me about it.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Does the hon. Prime Minister have any opinions of the statements of his own party—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): The hon. Prime Minister makes a dignified statement and Mr. Coward makes a political speech.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell).

My question is: Would he clarify the status of the new abattoir at the reformatory at Guelph and advise when we might expect this structure to proceed?

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for his question.

Plans and specifications were out for tender but revisions to the mechanical systems, particularly ventilation and refrigeration, were found to be desirable and necessary during the tender call. The revisions were such it was desirable to cancel the tender call in order that revised drawings and specifications could be issued to completely clarify the mechanical requirements. It is anticipated that considerable saving will result. The revisions are still in the process of being made and it is expected the department will be able to recall tenders no later than March 16.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to inform the House that, with only 11 shopping days left before the deadline, about 600,000 Ontario motorists have still to obtain their 1964 licence plates. The final day for purchasing plates is Friday, February 28, and it is not intended that there should be any extension of this deadline.

The new plates have been on sale since December 2 last and from the outset it was specified that the deadline would not be extended. The Department of Transport estimates that, as of today, 1964 plates have been purchased for about one million vehicles and the remaining 600,000 will have to be obtained during the next two weeks.

I would like to emphasize that the 278 local licence-issuing offices in Ontario are quite capable of meeting the demand for plates within the time limit and there will be no need for any last-minute line-ups, provided that motorists purchase their 1964 plates without delay.

Drivers' licences for 1963 also expire on February 28 and they may be renewed at any local issuing office as well.

It is estimated that some 1.9 million drivers now have their new licences and close to 500,000 have not.

1964 plates for commercial vehicles and trailers will go on sale on March 2 and must be purchased by March 31.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have two comments that I would like to make. I believe the hon. member for Woodbine asked about the public accounts committee. I do not recall what my answer was. Perhaps I said I would have a comment to make today. In any event, I intend to call the committee immediately, and at this time tomorrow I will give the House a full statement as to what the procedure is to be and how I hope the committee will be able to function.

Then, sir, I would like to make a few remarks concerning Brotherhood Week, which I believe started on Saturday last but will extend to this week. I would like to say that this is a period during which we pay attention to the enduring relationships existing among the various members of the great national family that makes up Canada.

I would only say that, during this week, we test the strength of those relationships which exist among all the sections of our community. We have people in Canada and in Ontario from many backgrounds, many countries, many varying religions, with very diverse interests and potentialities; and we attempt to create a community in which they can work together to their mutual advantage, so that all may contribute to the building of our nation.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we should think of a week such as this, Brotherhood Week, as the culmination of a year's effort and perhaps the commencement of another year's effort rather than being simply an end in itself, as being one week in which we pay attention to these matters and then forget them during the rest of the year.

In this Legislature and through this government, and with the support of all parties in the House, we gathered together our various pieces of legislation which epitomize and recognize our belief in the brotherhood of all men, and we several years ago put these into the Ontario Human Rights Code. This sets out the principles of brotherhood as we understand them in the province and I think it is one of the major pieces of social legislation which we have on our statute books.

So I think it would be fair to say, Mr. Speaker, these are the things we have accomplished in the past, and that all hon. members here today in this 27th Legislature will keep these principles firm in their hearts, and that we will during this week re-examine the ideals which led us to produce this legislation. If we do so, then in the words of the Ontario Human Rights Code, "all of our people will be made to feel that all are equal in dignity and rights, that each is part of the whole community and that each has a rich contribution to make to the development and well-being of our province and our nation."

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The twenty-fifth order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in rising to initiate the debate on the Budget, let me first pay my compliments to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan). After he had finished his Budget address the other day, I sent him a note complimenting him on his delivery, while at the same time pointing out that his material was very weak.

Seriously though, this afternoon I wish to compliment the hon. Provincial Treasurer most sincerely. He has been around these buildings and in government for a long time and his ability and friendliness and the dignity that he possesses are well known to all hon. members of the House.

A much greater speaker than most of those present, many years ago said: "I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him". Mr. Speaker, even if I could, which I am free to admit I could not, I do not come today to attempt to bury the hon. Provincial Treasurer. I do come, however, with a job to do, a task to perform, to present to this House to the best of my limited ability another side of the Budget story. This, Mr. Speaker, is my job this afternoon; to attempt to constructively criticize the policy of the present government insofar as financial matters are concerned.

What are the general responsibilities of this or any other government, insofar as taxation and expenditures are concerned? I would say that they would roughly be as follows.

To provide the services of government required by the people in a businesslike fashion, as economically as possible, always remembering the financial limitation of the taxpayers involved and remembering, too, that we are in competition with other provinces, neighbouring states and, indeed, other countries, not only in matters of costs but in matters of government services.

It is an unfortunate fact that too many of our people have found it advantageous to leave Ontario because of matters of costs and salary differential.

It is a fact that before the last election campaign there was never any mention by this government of any possible tax increases. It was never mentioned that hospital premiums were to go up 54 per cent, that gasoline and diesel oil were going up two cents a gallon, that there would be substantial increases in liquor taxation as well as automobile permits and licences.

Of course after the election is all over we, the people of the province, have had to face the facts of life and pay the increased taxes levied by this government. But I am wondering if we have, as yet, faced all of the facts. Because despite the fact that the level of taxation is the highest in the history of Ontario—higher indeed than during World War II—and at a time when our economy is most buoyant, we are still going to go into debt this year by more than $100 million. Would it be a fair question to ask: When will the Budget of Ontario be balanced?

We as citizens and taxpayers have the right to know what taxes will be levied in the future to pay for the expenditures of the present. Even if the government has no idea of paying back the borrowings of the present, it must realize that the interest charges must be paid each year.

In The Treasury Department's estimates this year, interest charges to be paid by this government are listed at $94,696,000. This figure is greater than the whole of the Ontario Budget for the year 1939 when the costs of education, highways, health and welfare, and all other departments of government, were less than the interest charges for this year. No wonder some of us get worried about the costs of government.

Now is the time to emphasize, perhaps, what a most respected public servant of this province has stated. He is the watchdog of the Treasury, and if his advice is not taken in financial matters, whose advice will be taken? If the hon. Provincial Treasurer is not responsible to him, to whom is he responsible? This is what the provincial auditor has said on page 19 of the auditor's report for 1962-63, and I quote:

I again wish to stress the need for all departments to resist strongly the continuing rise in expenditures and pressures for even greater outlays. It is urgently required that departmental spending be held within strict limits consistent with good government in order to achieve a surplus for debt retirement.

I ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer to point out to me, in his Budget for this year, one department where the advice of the provincial auditor has been followed. I might at this time point out to you the difference between this government and the one in Ottawa, where there is at least one department making a genuine effort to cut expenditures. I refer to The Department of National Defence, where this year the expenditures will be $200 million less than last year.

May I simply say this. If you do not know how to cut government spending in the province of Ontario, then appoint a government commission, such as the Glasco commission, with orders to investigate the manner in which it may be done. Parkinson's law is certainly true in the province of Ontario. I might add that I would have such a commission investigate other government commissions, too. These would include Hydro, hospital insurance and the many others that surround this government. Let a thorough job be done. It is certainly needed.

Perhaps now is the time to mention the increase in hospital insurance premiums. The increase is substantial, more than 50 per cent. Editorial comment on the whole has supported the action of the government, and there has been general agreement that people getting services should pay for them. What most of us have forgotten is that the Ontario government originally promised to pay one-third of the costs of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. Another one-third was coming from Ottawa and the other third in the form of premiums.

Mr. Speaker, the Ontario government has not kept its word. The total cost of The Ontario Hospital Services Commission this year will be approximately $245 million. The Ontario government will be paying $50 million, which is one-fifth of the cost, not one-third. If the government had kept its word, as mentioned in innumerable speeches of the hon. Leslie Frost and paid the total of one-third, there would be no need for an increase in premiums this year.

What this government hides behind, of course, is the fact that they include the cost of $75 million for mental and tubercular patients. This was a cost that they paid completely long before there was such a thing as the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. We, on this side of the House, are worried about hospital insurance costs. It is hard for an ordinary layman to understand these great increases. While it has undoubtedly been a great success, particularly for people who have to spend time in the hospital, nevertheless it is a perfect example of the fact that where governments get involved, particularly this government, costs are bound to go up.

As far as the finances are concerned, private enterprise can beat the government, and particularly this one, any day of the week. Both the government and the commission members must share responsibility. Senior commission members have said on various occasions that "he who pays the piper calls the tune."

Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission pays the piper, and they certainly call the tune. It is a mighty expensive one. Ordinary premium payers, such as myself, wince when we see administrators of various hospitals in Toronto, as an example, drawing down more in salary than the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Robarts).

Mr. Speaker, when one considers that Ontario has something less than 6.5 million people, this is indeed a staggering budget. It has been staggering for some years now but government costs have skyrocketed beyond all reason, and are getting so high that, for the financial security of the province, something must be done.

Mr. Speaker, compared to our neighbours to the south, we are a small state economically and we are in direct competition with them. We must compete or we will be swallowed up. At the moment we are losing the race. Let me illustrate. In 1961 and 1962, approximately the same number of people emigrated from Ontario as immigrated to it. In 1963, 14,000 more stayed here than left. Why do as many people leave as emigrate into the province? Is there a justifiable reason? While such things as climate, surroundings, and so on, influence people as to where they live, dollars and cents enter the picture more and more. It is a fact of life that more of our professional people are leaving each year because they are paid considerably more and taxed, percentage-wise, considerably less than in Ontario and Canada. It is a simple matter of dollars and cents.

But if the differential is not too great now, what about the future? Mr. Speaker, last year there were 35,000 students in universities. In 1970, it is estimated that there will be 95,000. Other departments, in fact all departments of government, are expanding, too. Each and every year, each and every department of the Ontario government costs the taxpayer much more money. With taxes going down 10 per cent in the United States this year, we simply cannot afford this method of doing business. More and more of our citizens and more and more of our corporations are going to ask the question: Why live in Ontario and be taxed more, when in the states of Michigan or California they can make more and be taxed less? It is as simple as that.

This year the hon. Provincial Treasurer has raised the gasoline and diesel oil tax by two cents per gallon. This may appear to be a small increase, but it is estimated that it will cost the trucking industry in Ontario an extra $2.5 million. This, of course, will be passed on to the public because the cost of doing business will be that much more.

Hospital premiums have gone up over 50 per cent. The government claims this is a small increase, but $78 per annum per family is a great deal of money for most people. Speaking personally, I can tell you that some of the old age pensioners, farmers and labourers of my county of Bruce will have a difficult time in meeting this premium payment. Some will be forced to drop out of the plan. I hope not too many.

There is an additional $12 million in liquor taxes. Perhaps we should not be too critical of this. After all, it is a luxury. But luxury or not, it is certainly another cost. But even with all these additional revenues, even with the $190 million in sales tax—not one penny of which the government had three years ago—you will still have a deficit of $105 million this year.

To the hon. Provincial Treasurer, I say this: Had he been running General Motors or the Ford Motor Company, he would have been fired long ago; and the board of directors, composed of other hon. members of the government, would have been fired with him. That is why I cannot feel too sorry for the many people in Ontario who voted for this government last September. They voted for the government when new sources of revenue or taxes were not needed, so the government said. Now they must bear the consequences.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): More of the same, they said; more of the same.

Mr. Whicher: To be fair, of course, governments are not run like businesses. Certainly there are years when this government would be expected to have a considerable deficit. We on this side of the House acknowledge that huge sums at times must be borrowed to develop the province and that when, for various reasons, the economy is not good, government money must be pumped into it to bolster it along. What we do not understand is how the government could be millions of dollars in the red each and every year, and at the same time be continually increasing taxes. The government are masters at this. If there was a Stanley Cup given in Canada for spending money, this government would win it each and every year without a struggle.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): The hon. member is always complaining that we do not spend enough.

Mr. Whicher: And how the hon. Provincial Treasurer likes to boast about it.

In the last five years you say the province has turned over to local authorities, in other words the municipalities, over $2 billion, and this year the government is giving them $546 million. What they do not say is that many of these same municipalities are still starving to death financially, because the only tax base they have that is of any consequence is real estate. You can well say that never in the history of the province has so much been given, for the very simple reason that never in the history of the province has so much been taken away from its people in the form of taxes.

And in spite of these high taxes, you are still going to be $105 million in the red for this year. The government is like the Russian hockey players in this regard—real professionals.

The headline of the Toronto Telegram's featured article on the budget, is as follows: "Ontario at the Brink of a Financial Crisis."

An hon. member: It is etched in black now.

Mr. Whicher: It is etched in red.

Mr. Speaker, this is an unhappy fact. With a budget approaching $1.5 billion, and with one of $2 billion prophesied in the not-too-distant future, are we not entitled to know where this government intends to get the money? The additional interest on the money that you borrow for this year alone will be over $5 million, and this is a year when the whole budget boasts about the state of the economy. Would it be fair to ask how much you intend to borrow in a poor year?

Of course, we know that you will try to get more money from Ottawa. The irony of the situation is that they do not have any either. Things have certainly changed down there since the happy financial days of 1957 and earlier, when budgets were not only balanced but surpluses were common and the national debt was actually being paid off.

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. Whicher: That manner of conducting government business has certainly gone out of style in Ottawa and it never was the style here. Yes, Ottawa will be used as a whipping boy by all governments, particularly this one, no matter who is in power down there. However, in the effort to get more money from the federal government we say, "Good luck." It certainly has an obligation to look after the needs of the provinces, just as the provinces in turn have that same responsibility to the municipalities. Try to leave them enough to run the navy, though. I would hate to have this government get into that business. If you let the costs go up in the manner hospital insurance has gone up, it would be an expensive operation indeed.

Speaking of hopes for more money from Ottawa, now might be the time to ask the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario why Jean Lesage was successful in getting so much more money than Ontario did in the last provincial conference. We of the Liberal Party are, of course, most understanding of the needs of the province of Quebec.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Quebec? Why worry about Quebec? Worry about Ontario!

Mr. Whicher: Who, might I ask, has been closer to Quebec than the Liberal Party? After all, we had Laurier, Lapointe and St. Laurent, to mention only a few. But we have our needs here too.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: But we have our needs here too—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: Shocking statement to make.

Mr. Whicher: —and particularly financial ones. If you do not believe me, ask the writer of that great newspaper, the Toronto

Telegram, who headlined his story, "Ontario at the Brink of a Financial Crisis."

So before this session of the Legislature is over, perhaps the hon. Prime Minister will tell us how Quebec got over $40 million extra, and Ontario only a small portion of this. Could it be that Leslie Frost was a better bargainer than John Roberts?

Several years ago a certain politician in this country had a vision. It certainly was most ineffective. But if ever a vision was needed in Ontario, that time is not now. It should be more than just a vision. It should be a plan. A plan to develop this great province and then to share it.

In fact, we have a moral obligation to do just that, and the irony of the situation is that if we do not accept this obligation we will be swept into the hands of our American friends. Some people think that this would not be a bad idea. We, as Liberals, prefer to run our own show and are prepared to plan it so that we can control our own destiny.

Let me give you an example where words have been used by this government but where there has been no action. On page 36, in summing up the Budget, the hon. Provincial Treasurer said this:

Not only have we kept pace with the growth in traffic but we have facilitated the movement of people and goods and the decentralization of industry with resultant benefits to all.

Such nonsense. The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that Toronto and Hamilton and other cities are getting larger and larger, while at the same time our towns and villages to a large extent are remaining static and, in some instances, have been growing smaller; and yet you claim that you helped the decentralization of industry. This government has done nothing to encourage decentralization of industry. It has no plans for the development of our province.

Mr. Speaker, I said before, in the Throne debate, that this province, indeed the whole country, must be developed. To do this and to finance the needs of our present population, we need more people. People generate wealth and they generate taxes, too. Surely it is self-evident to everyone that we simply cannot afford not to grow. Ontario needs, and in fact must have, at least 20 million people.

Our American friends have it over us like a tent. Their industrialists have a ready-made market of 180 million people. Their farmers have 180 million people to eat the food grown on American soil. Mr. Speaker, we need more people to eat the food grown by Ontario farmers. We need more people to wear Canadian suits, boots and shoes, shirts and other wearing apparel. We need more people to manufacture machines, to make all the things that a larger population would require.

As a small province and country, population-wise, we are at the whims of the various governments of the world, who at any time they wish can create barriers against us selling to them. The hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall), in an interesting speech the other day, told us what a great job our people are doing in selling in foreign lands, but even the hon. Minister of Economics and Development will tell us that there is no market like the home market, and ours is not large enough. Neither is it large enough to pay for the development of this country.

When one realizes the consequences of the world population explosion in the next 50 years, then surely reality strikes us in the face. It boils down to this one simple fact: We cannot afford to finance the government services required by ourselves and if we do not do something about development in this province, in this country, someone else will do it for us.

What part can this government play in this matter? Mr. Speaker, it can do much. It could certainly use its credit, combined with private enterprise, to see that our natural resources are not exported to the United States, manufactured there and shipped back here. Let me give you an example.

It is all very well for the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) to stand up in this Legislature and announce that Steep Rock Mines, or some other mine, is employing 1,000 Canadians. What the hon. Minister fails to mention is that the ore is being shipped to the United States and 10,000 Americans are being employed to make it into steel.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): What are you going to do with your iron?

Mr. Whicher: Private enterprise in some instances is too limited to develop mills for the processing and manufacturing of our raw materials, but the credit of this province is not.

I can give you an example, the trans-Canada pipelines. I will grant you as a fact, too, that as soon as the job was completed, the government got out of the business. Private enterprise can make a financial success of business where governments have failed miserably. I might mention, too, and remind you, that this province, while it was never used, offered the credit of the province up to $35 million for the development of north-east Ontario natural gas.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. Provincial Treasurer, I have some advice to him and the whole government. They are the board of directors for this huge business of government in this province. For heaven's sake call a meeting and plan the development of this great province. In this competitive world, not only for individuals but for governments, we cannot continually go on paying taxes here and there every year, incurring huge deficits and looking into a future when costs are going to double, and with practically the same population to pay the bill.

One that I heard labelled your Budget as an example of compulsion to spend. My advice to you is to get some compulsion into ways and means of getting more efficiency, without breaking the individual who pays the taxes.

Hon. Mr. Allan: We have already done that.

Mr. Whicher: We taxpayers are human, you know, and if you make things unbearable more and more of us will move to other areas. There are one million Canadians in California now, many of them former residents of the province of Ontario.

One of the chief topics of conversation these days is the penetration of American control in Canadian business. The Financial Post of February 8 listed 143 firms who, in the past five years sold out to foreign interests, mainly American. Many people do not appear too worried about this. They no doubt think an industry is an industry, whether it be American or Canadian-run, and that a dollar is a dollar whether it is Canadian or American; but when one considers the staggering American penetration into Canadian business, it makes one think. In many lines of business, Americans have an overwhelming voice, and they have a majority voice in practically all of it.

Mr. Sopha: Even beer.

Mr. Whicher: The Financial Post asks the question and I quote:

Would Britain, France, Germany or the United States, for instance, look on with calm indifference if outsiders were getting control of half or more of their industries?

Mr. Sopha: It does not bother the hon. Prime Minister, because his own brewery went the other day.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Whicher: Here is one basic fact that has not been tackled.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: I quote:

In this country—

Mr. Sopha: They call it Schlitz now.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Bruce is making a speech.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): He is not doing too well.

Mr. Whicher:

In this country the federal and provincial succession duties have been a very important cause of a great many of the sellouts. The punishment of people who have built significant assets for themselves, their heirs, and communities, have been politically popular. Can this tax, which raises so little revenue yet produces so many unintended results, serve the interests of this nation?

Has violent taxation of nearly the same intensity as we have at the worst part of a desperate war made Canada an unattractive place in which to carry the burdens of business magnates for those who can afford to get out of it?

Think it over, Mr. Speaker. Has the violent taxation of this government and others made Canada an unattractive place in which to do business?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The figures do not prove that.

Mr. Whicher: Succession duties are paid in dollar bills, not in machinery or bricks and mortar. In many instances large business had to sell in order to pay their taxes. Surely this is not good.

While I am on this subject, I might say that we favour the abolition of all succession duties on assets under $100,000. There is so much red tape, and most of it is in estates under this amount. Surely the taxpayer deserves a break somewhere along the line?

Mr. Speaker, I noticed on the newsstand that this was called a Robarts budget. It is really an Allan budget because the budget was written by him. The architect, though, was hon. Leslies Frost; even the phrases are the same as former budgets. It was a stand pat budget. It was patterned on the assumption that another little tax would not do us any harm.

I could not help but notice, when the hon. Provincial Treasurer was reading his budget speech, when he announced that there would be no increase in the sales tax, how the hon. Prime Minister chuckled and laughed at what he thought was our discomfort on this side of the House. Mr. Speaker, as taxpayers ourselves, and as representatives of our constituents, we are most happy that the hon. Provincial Treasurer did not raise this tax. However, a fair question to ask him would be: Did not he need the money? He certainly spent it, with an estimated deficit coming up of over $100 million.

What we the taxpayers must realize is this: While the hon. Provincial Treasurer did not raise the sales tax, sir, some day very shortly he is going to have to in order to raise the money that has already been spent. Eat, drink and be merry is the motto of this government. Soak the taxpayer all he can stand and charge up the rest to future generations.

But some people are worried about it. If you do not believe me, ask the provincial auditor. The whole attitude of the financing of the province's needs by this government is typical of your claim that you had a surplus of $522,000 last year, and the year before you had one, too, and the year before that. Do you take us for a bunch of school boys?

No wonder you have that surplus when there is no set figure, or percentage, charged up to capital account. It varies each and every year and can be changed at a moment's notice, to leave you each and every year a small surplus. Such nonsense! Surpluses, surpluses and surpluses! It must be embarrassing. And still the debt gets greater and greater each year.

I will give you one example of the manipulation of figures in an attempt to fool the public. Last year, $41.5 million was put in the sinking fund, which allowed $80 million for capital payments and a net surplus, according to the hon. Provincial Treasurer, of $522,000. This year, sir, the debt is considerably greater than last, but you are putting only $40 million into the sinking fund instead of the $41.5 million last year, and consequently allowing yourself an estimated surplus of $855,000. Mr. Speaker, my question is simply this to the hon. Provincial Treasurer: Why did he pick this amount—

Hon. Mr. Allan: I would love to answer.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Provincial Treasurer can answer it later on. Mr. Speaker, my question is simply this: Why did he pick this amount?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Because that was the amount that was needed.

Mr. Whicher: Well, why did he put $41.5 million in last year, then?

Hon. Mr. Allan: We put it in but our debt was less than we anticipated, so we did not use it all last year and we are using it this year.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, if he put it in last year in anticipation of his debt being so much, surely he must realize that his debt is going to be a great deal more this year, and therefore he should have put more than $41.5 million in?

Hon. Mr. Allan: No, no. It is a definite amount.

Mr. Whicher: If it is definite, then the hon. Provincial Treasurer should make it definite for both years, certainly; because last year when there was less debt he put in more money than he is going to put in this year.

An hon. member: Now I know which dairyman I am going to loan money to.

Mr. Whicher: The answer is, of course, the manipulation of figures to ensure a surplus; and if this is not enough, you have an estimated $117 million in capital payments to play around with. I will bet all the tea in China that this figure of $117 million is changed in the next budget to guarantee this sacred Tory misleading surplus. It is a wonder to me that the auditor does tip the hon. Provincial Treasurer off about this.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Why, he approves it.

Mr. Whicher: There is not a financial institution in the country that could get away with the way the figures are twisted around by this government. If your shares were listed on the Toronto Stock Exchange, the value of them would be exactly nil. And the reason? No confidence in the financial management.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to say anything about the situation that has arisen in the past couple of days concerning the Canada pension plan, but because of the course of events and correspondence that has appeared in the papers I feel it is necessary that I say something about this. I believe it was in last Saturday's paper that we saw an example that the hon. Prime Minister certainly did not mean business during the last election campaign when he made a fast trip to Ottawa to say that he was willing to co-operate with the federal government in every way possible to guarantee that there would be a Canada pension fund.

I say this to you, Mr. Speaker: The hon. Prime Minister was simply window-dressing. And there are those of us on this side, and thousands of citizens in Ontario and in Canada, who are worried about the attitude that he has taken. I think that what he has done has been very well pointed out in the leading editorial in the Toronto Star today; and because the thoughts given there are almost identical to my own, I am going to read it to you now. And it is headed: "Robarts' Roadblock On Canada Pension".

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The Toronto Star supported him in the election.

Mr. Whicher: We are not caring anything about that election; it is all over. What we are interested in now is to try to get a decent pension plan for Canadians across Canada, and particularly for Ontario citizens, so that we guarantee in our old age that we may have some security. I would ask the hon. Prime Minister most sincerely that he at least attempt, to the best of his ability—and I am sure that will be considerable in this instance—to co-operate with the federal authorities.

I do not blame him for sticking up for what he feels to be just and right. Were I in his position I would do exactly the same thing. But it seems to me that some of this correspondence which was made public, which accuses the federal authorities of not playing the game straight, could very well have been left to private correspondence and not been made public.

Mr. Speaker, the editorial in the Toronto Star reads as follows:

ROBARTS' ROADBLOCK ON CANADA PENSION

The renewed deadlock which has developed between the federal government and Ontario over retirement pensions is obviously the responsibility of Premier John Robarts and his Cabinet.

At the Dominion-provincial conference last year, Mr. Robarts, with other provincial premiers, presented his objections to the original pension scheme. The federal government made important concessions to meet these objections. Ontario representatives, in fact, participated in drawing up the amendments.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that comment has been withdrawn in a later edition of the newspaper, because it is quite wrong. And I believe, if the hon. member picks a later edition of the paper and reads the editorial, he will find it is not in there.

Mr. Whicher: But there are a lot of comments here that will not be withdrawn—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That are also not right. I just point this out.

Mr. Whicher:

But the Premier is still not satisfied; his present demands run counter to the basic principles of the national plan.

Of Mr. Robarts' objections to the present plan, these seem to be of special importance:

The scheme will be fully established in ten years, so that persons who have been contributing only a few years will receive full pensions—under a funded private plan, full pensions are payable only to those who have contributed for perhaps 30 or 40 years. The Premier considers this inequitable because many contributors will receive more than they put in. This cold argument completely ignores the fact that on no other basis is it possible to supply an adequate retirement income for those now approaching retirement age.

The provinces should have a larger share of the reserve fund. Originally the Canada plan was to be on a pay-as-you-go basis, with each year's premiums paying for the pension due in that year—as contrasted with the "funded" system employed by private plans, in which the premiums are paid into a fund which is accumulated and from which the pensions are paid.

Because of objections by Ontario, the Pearson government agreed to establish a $3 billion reserve fund and to invest 50 per cent of it in provincially guaranteed securities. But this is not enough for Mr. Robarts; he wants the provinces to get 90 per cent.

One might very well ask why; they certainly are going to need billions of dollars the way they are going through it. The way you are going into debt you will need 100 per cent of it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Does the hon. member object to this kind of Act for Ontario?

Mr. Whicher: I will make my comments afterwards.

This is an exorbitant and unreasonable claim. After all, the primary purpose of the Canada pension plan is to provide older people with pensions, not to provide provincial governments with funds for their projects.

Mr. Sopha: What is wrong with that? Do they not need money also?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, why does it not come back here? It comes out of this province.

Mr. Whicher: We need enough to keep this government going and it is going to be a lot, I can say, over the next ten years from what I read:

The Canada pension plan will cause major disturbance to existing pension plans, and in your proposals no suggestions are made as to how the plans are to be integrated. It is no doubt true that the existence of a national contributory plan will to some extent reduce the market for the private plans, since contributors will no longer be dependent upon private schemes for support in their old age. But how is this to be avoided, except by cutting down the benefits from the national plan to the point where it provides no genuine security at all for the aged?

Indeed it is hard to see how, if Mr. Robarts' present criticisms are accepted, anything worthy to be called a national pension plan could be salvaged at all. It is impossible to reconcile his present stand with his assurance last November 28: "I accept in principle that there should be a Canada pension plan."

Ottawa sources suggest that the Ontario government's attitude will, at best, force a new Dominion-provincial conference and, at worst, delay pension legislation for two years or more.

But why should this be so? No one doubts that the Dominion government has the power to legislate on old age pensions, though it may lack the constitutional power over benefits to widows and other survivors.

Would the heavens really fall if Parliament went ahead and passed an adequate old age pensions law without worrying about the reactions of provincial potentates?

In any case, there should be no further retreat by Ottawa on the benefits of the Canada pension plan.

This is the end of the editorial. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say much more about it.

All I suggest is this: No doubt the waters are most troubled at the present time between Toronto and Ottawa. For the good of all Canadian citizens, and particularly for the sake of those citizens who live in the province of Ontario, I ask the hon. Prime Minister of this province to please keep whatever anger he may have in his own bonnet and to talk this over sensibly with the powers in Ottawa, and come up with a genuine pension effort that will be beneficial to all the people of this province.

Mr. Speaker, for reasons that I have stated in my speech this afternoon, and others that will be apparent as the estimates are presented, we simply cannot support this budget. We sincerely doubt if the people of the province can support it too.

For this reason I move, seconded by Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South), that the motion "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means" be amended by adding thereto the following words:

But this House regrets that the budget fails to exhibit that the government is aware of the urgent need to encourage, develop and expand the foundations of the economy of this province.

And this House regrets that the budget indicates that the government is content with the makeshift policies of the past rather than to adopt a broad, new, imaginative outlook, paralleled with measures which would eliminate areas of poverty within the province; widely expand opportunities for expansion of existing industries and promote the establishment of new industries using our great natural resources; increase the real wealth of our people and greatly increase our population.

And this House regrets that instead of being offered an energetic and vigorous economic programme for our great province, our citizens are merely being asked to bear increased taxation and they and their children to assume an even greater debt burden.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should put everyone out of suspense and say right now that this group will support the amendment that has just been moved. In fact, since some of you may be wondering about reasons for supporting it I will say that I hope, in the course of my remarks, to give some good reasons for supporting the line of thinking that was expressed in the amendment which did not seem to be very much in line with the justification given today.

We certainly have criticisms to make of the budget now before this House, but I will say, Mr. Speaker, that all our criticisms will be—or will reflect, let me put it that way—the thinking of the second half of the twentieth century rather than the second half of the nineteenth century.

I would like to make just one comment about the hon. Prime Minister's (Mr. Roberts') letter of last Thursday, I think it was, to the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada, regarding the Canada pension plan, since the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) has seen fit to raise this.

I, like the Toronto Daily Star, and I take it also the hon. member for Bruce, felt very unhappy about the letter. The hon. Prime Minister said what he had to say in the very best of diplomatic terminology of which, I think, even the recipient could have been proud; but when you get right down to it what the letter meant was that the hon. Prime Minister of this province is just about ready to lower the boom on the Canada pension plan.

And the regrettable thing about it, Mr. Speaker, is that the government of Canada, ever since it was elected and faced with carrying out certain pledges made during the election campaign, has been casting in all directions for excuses to scupper that plan.

And the government opposite is now giving them the excuse, which I think is regrettable, I will not go into all the reasons that the hon. Prime Minister gave for his objections to the plan. There was only one that I agreed to, and that was his expression of regret that there is no provision for survivor benefits. But he knows, as well as anybody else, that there are constitutional difficulties there and that the rest of the plan surely should not be held up because of that defect. A reason, a criticism he made that I thought was particularly objectionable—I was going to say offensive, but I will pull my remark down to objectionable—was his objection to people who retire in the earlier stages of the plan getting a larger pension than their contributions would merit on a strict actuarial basis.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that is a thoroughly heartless attitude.

I do not understand why the hon. Prime Minister would make a major point of objecting to those people getting somewhat larger pensions than their contributions would merit, when one considers that they have not had an opportunity to make contributions in the past.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Do you want to know why? Because the actuary from London Life told him to.

Mr. Bryden: I would not put it in the form that the hon. member for Sudbury has, but I will say that, in my opinion, the hon. Prime Minister is apparently overwhelmed by calculating machines.

Mr. Sopha: Actuaries.

Mr. Bryden: He is overlooking human values. I think an important human value is that the people retiring in the early stages of the plan should get as good a pension as we possibly can give them, and certainly more than their contributions justify, because that would be a very pitiful pension indeed.

However, I do not want to get off on the Canada pension plan. Maybe we will have an opportunity to discuss it some other time.

Mr. Sopha: I want to ask you. Judy is still there, is she not?

Mr. Bryden: I would at this time, Mr. Speaker, like to convey my congratulations to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) on having presented the Budget to this House once again. I realize that this is traditional, and maybe purely formal, but I would like to say in my case that I sincerely mean my expressions of best wishes to him.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer, as we all know, is a very genial man. Nothing, or very little, seems to ruffle him. He is also a very persuasive man. In fact, I would not go so far as to say that he could make a silk purse out of a sow's ear, but I would say that he can come pretty close to persuading people on occasions that a sow's ear is a silk purse.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): He did that with the Budget.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, ever since the present hon. Prime Minister took office the axe has been descending with somewhat frightening regularity on senior members of the old Cabinet. Perhaps it will descend again. But I feel quite sure notwithstanding a speculative story I read in the Toronto Globe and Mail on Saturday, it is not going to come anywhere in the direction of the hon. Provincial Treasurer because the Provincial Treasurer is too valuable to the government for his capacity to put the government's case across in a very persuasive way with a persuasiveness which is not quite justified by the facts. Still, his capacity to put forward a document so dull as a Budget in an interesting way is really quite remarkable.

Mr. Speaker, now that I have demonstrated my fairmindedness I am sure that the hon. Provincial Treasurer, who is also a fairminded man, will agree with me when I say that the Budget is a dismal document.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Well, we expected you to say that.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Have you persuaded him?

Mr. Bryden: And when I say that I am not referring primarily to increases in taxes and other levies. I am more concerned that the Budget shows no real appreciation on the part of the government of the kind of problems we face in the 1960's.

The present hon. Provincial Treasurer has been presenting budgets to this House for several years. This year's Budget, in all its basic concepts, is a monotonous repetition of all the Budgets he has presented in the past, and of the Budgets that his predecessor, the former Prime Minister, presented before him.

True, the figures are higher every year, but this is more a reflection of increasing population and the declining value of money than of any new departure in policy. The Robarts administration never tires of telling us that it is a bright new administration, quite different from the tired old Tory administration that preceded it. If there is anything new about it, that fact should come through with crystal clarity in the Budget which, after all, represents the distilled essence of government policy. A comparison of this year's Budget with previous Budgets reveals that neither this administration nor its predecessor has had a new idea in at least ten years. I am really giving them the benefit of the doubt when I say ten years.

The requirements of the 1960's demand dynamic leadership by governments at all levels in economic and social development. This government gives leadership in much the same way as the cart leads the horse. Instead of taking charge of events, it is dragged along by them, reluctantly, plaintively and with little sighs of resignation.

Its response to problems is a sort of conditioned reflex. The growing crisis in education has produced, not a comprehensive and courageous programme to solve it, but timorous and half-hearted attempts to prevent the structure from collapsing completely under the burdens placed upon it. There continues to be an increase in the appropriation for highways and roads. There are the same old pious references to what the government now regularly describes as "human betterment", and a few crumbs for health and welfare. And so it goes down the line, almost word for word the same as in previous budgets.

But, Mr. Speaker, is there any significance in the fact that this year there is not a single reference to housing in the Budget? Not one, except in the statistical table. In previous years the government did not do anything about housing but it at least admitted the problem existed. Has it now decided to wash its hands of the whole difficult affair?

Two years ago the hon. Provincial Treasurer overcame his Tory inhibitions to the extent of using the word "plan" in his Budget speech. Indeed, he even went so far as to say that the Budget of that year marked—and I am using his exact words—"the first step in a new five-year plan". We all know that neither that Budget nor any that came before or after it had anything to do with a five-year plan or any other kind of plan. But we had all hoped that the use of the word might have presaged a new direction in government policy. Our hopes were soon dashed: since then the hon. Provincial Treasurer has not been able to muster enough courage even to use the word.

The departure of the former Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) apparently marked the end of any fleeting interest the government might have had in planning. It has now re-established itself firmly in its old "catch as catch can" approach, patching up a leak here, shoring up a collapse there, rushing here, there and everywhere in response to emergencies that perpetually catch it unawares, much like the proverbial chicken in a hail storm.

For the moment it might appear that such an approach will not have disastrous results even if it is less than adequate. The economy is now in one of its recurring upswings after having gone through one of its recurring downswings. For those who, like grasshoppers and Tory governments, take thought only for today, this may be good enough, but not for those who take trouble to look at the basic structural weaknesses in the economy.

It is a pity the flicker of insight exhibited by the hon. Provincial Treasurer two years ago flickered out so quickly. The Budget should be an expression of planning—of both a short-term plan covering a year or so and of a long-term plan covering a period of four or five years. The government has no plan at all. Its Budget, once again, is merely a short-term projection of revenues and expenditures.

Even in that narrow realm, a one-year projection, I would suggest to the hon. Provincial Treasurer, is no longer sufficient. The government should adopt the practice of presenting long-term forecasts of at least its major requirements over the next four years or so, along with the traditional one-year forecast.

Admittedly, the long-term forecast will be less precise and it will be subject to revision from time to time in the light of experience. But, if any intelligent long-range planning is to be done by the private sector, it is important for it to know where the government is going. And I may say that it would also help if the government itself knew where it were going. Short-term and long-term economic forecasts, coupled with short-term and long-term Budget forecasts, are a prerequisite of intelligent economic planning.

The present economic revival is, to an important degree, a reflection of a similar revival in the United States. To the extent that it can be attributed to Canadian conditions, it has three main causes.

First, throughout Canada there has been a substantial increase in capital investments in the public sector; public utilities and apartment construction. It is to be noted that the government of Ontario has initiated remarkably little of that investment. Indeed, the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto has contributed far more proportionately.

Second, the devaluation of the dollar, which was undertaken with incredible clumsiness a couple of years ago, but was long overdue, has given a big boost to Canadian sales in the export market.

And third, the sale of agricultural products behind the Iron Curtain has provided a stimulus that has extended all through the economy.

The Ontario government had little, if anything, to do with these three developments. Nevertheless the Ontario economy has enjoyed more than proportionate benefits, as the government never ceases to advise us.

The government's own publication "Ontario Economic Review" put it this way in its issue of January 1964, and I am now quoting:

Essentially, economic prosperity in Ontario during 1963 can be attributed to the manufacturing sector. During periods of buoyant economic activity in North America, manufacturing has always been in the forefront. Conversely, during periods of slack, manufacturing experiences relatively greater hardships, with higher levels of unemployment. Since 1963 was a period of rising economic activity throughout North America, it is natural—

Not due to government policy, you will note but it is natural:

—that the Ontario economy, with its relatively high concentration of manufacturing, should experience a higher degree of prosperity and comparatively low level of unemployment.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): We will have to fire that writer.

Mr. Bryden: A very, very accurate statement; unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Mines did not comprehend it. But what it was saying was—for his benefit—I am just now giving it for his benefit so I hope he will stay silent for a moment. It was saying that the rather fortunate experiences the Ontario economy has had in the last year or two have had nothing whatsoever to do with the government.

That, I think, is a fair summary of it. But it did state that in a period such as the present, an economy like Ontario, because of its relatively high concentration of manufacturing, will enjoy higher than average benefits.

And one could also state the converse, Mr. Speaker, that if the present boom should peter out, Ontario will be comparatively harder hit. To ask the government to consider that truth, however, would be to ask it to look ahead, and it is clearly unwilling to do that. Yet the future will become the present, whether we are prepared for it or not. And therefore I think we should give some consideration to the kinds of problems we can anticipate in the future.

Unquestionably, the most important single fact of the present age is the scientific and technological revolution. My hon. colleague from Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) provided this House with a brilliant analysis of the nature of that revolution and its implications for the future. Unfortunately, his speech seems to have gone over the heads of those hon. members who commented on it, at least.

It was greeted with a chorus of siren voices assuring us that technological change has been taking place for a long time, that it can form the basis of untold improvements in standards of living throughout the world, and that even if we do nothing more than sit and contemplate our navels everything will come out all right in the long run.

Of course, technological change has been with us for a long time, not merely since the beginnings of the industrial revolution as some speakers have suggested, but from before the dawn of recorded history when men fashioned tools out of stone, learned how to grow cereal crops and to domesticate animals. The point is that the rate of change has been increasing, very slowly at first, but with gathering speed until now we can hardly comprehend the degree of change that seems certain to take place in the future. It is not merely that the rate of change is accelerating. It is accelerating at an accelerating rate.

Even a hundred years ago and more, technological change created acute dislocations. The infinitely greater changes we can anticipate in the future will have chaotic results unless we compensate with adequate plans to deal with them. One can surely say this without denying that the technological revolution has inestimable potential for improving human welfare. One should also be able to say it without being accused of being fearful of change.

This group is not fearful of the technological revolution. We welcome it. We are, however, fearful of a government that is hardly prepared to even admit that these changes will create problems, much less that revolutionary new policies are needed to realize its potential.

The hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) has stated, rightly, that dislocations arising out of technological change will be much less acute if there is rapid economic growth. He has conceded, however, that:

even at peak periods, there are problems of skill obsolescence and the need for training workers whose jobs and occupations have been eliminated.

I think there will be a great many other problems the hon. Minister did not mention. For the present I am willing to consider the matter within the framework he has proposed, but with one modification. The problem of retraining displaced workers is only part, and the smaller part at that, of the total problem of upgrading the level of knowledge and skill of the entire community. This would be a difficult problem under the most favourable circumstances. It is being made infinitely more difficult by the unprecedented and growing number of young people hammering at the doors of our institutions of learning.

Yet what is the government doing about it?

Our programme for the retraining of displaced workers is a farce. Available facilities for this purpose meet only a fraction, a very small fraction, of the need. In any case, many workers cannot take advantage of them because of the starvation allowances paid. And even those who can make use of the services often find themselves steered into blind allies. Moreover, many displaced workers are too old and have insufficient basic education for retraining. What happens to them? They go on welfare. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the number of people on welfare in Toronto in December, 1963, was higher than in December, 1962.

Some progress has been made in providing facilities for advanced technical training for young people coming out of our secondary schools. But in relation to the growing needs, it is no progress at all. The presidents of Ontario universities have indicated in their reports to the advisory committee on university affairs that all the projected plans for developing technological institutes envisage a student capacity of only 6,000. We ought to be thinking in terms of 18,000 or three times that number by 1970. In addition we should be developing community-based colleges of applied arts and technology at the undergraduate level all across the province.

The situation is just as bad in regard to general university education. The university presidents estimated that 6,000 applicants will be unable to get into our universities by 1965 on the basis of present entrance requirements. By 1970, this figure will rise to 20,000 or 30,000. Since the reports of the presidents were published the government has stepped up plans for university expansion somewhat. Even so, Mr. Speaker, the revised plans at very best will meet only half the need envisaged by the presidents. And it now appears that the estimates of the presidents were too low.

The Budget envisages grants of $47,696,000 to universities for operating expenses in the coming fiscal year; and loans, not grants, of $53.6 million for capital construction, the expansion of facilities. Last year's budget provided for what were called maintenance grants of $28.2 million and capital and special grants of $41,757,000, making total grants of $69,963,000. I believe somewhat more than that was spent. It was a little more than $70 million. In other words, outright grants to universities have been reduced by more than $22 million. Only this government could convince itself that a step backward is progress.

True, the total amount of money being made available to universities will be increased because of the new loan policy. The exact terms of these loans are not disclosed in the Budget speech, but even if one assumes the most generous terms the present policy will merely compound the financial difficulties of the universities in the future. In other words, the government is shifting a substantial part of its own responsibility for capital expansion over to the universities, thus getting it off its own shoulders. Heaven knows the problems of the universities are acute enough right now without any thought being given to making them more acute in the future.

One can agree with the hon. Provincial Treasurer that there are limitations to what can be undertaken in any one year, but this only underlines the need for long-term planning and budgeting. The government should have a plan for the expansion of universities and other facilities for advanced education over the next several years. They should not just come in with a patched-up programme year after year. There should be a long-term plan and it should be related to clearly discernible needs. If it is, it will require a much greater first instalment than is proposed in the current Budget.

Yes, the cost will be high, Mr. Speaker, but the cost of failing to meet the needs of education fully will be much higher. After all, spending on education is an investment. It is an investment in the greatest resource we have, our people. In the last analysis, only trained and knowledgeable people can take advantage of the possibilities of this scientific revolution.

As that revolution proceeds, a nation or province that fails to undertake the requisite degree of investment in education will simply be unable to compete with nations that are already more advanced technologically and show greater foresight. Such a province or nation will not have enough people with the skill and knowledge needed to devise and run the machines of tomorrow, and to adapt our society to the profound social changes that will, of necessity, take place.

Our economy will languish and the standard of living of our people will decline. Even in the narrow realm of public finance our difficulties will make our present problems look like child's play, because the revenue-raising capacity of the government will decline. A timorous budget policy now, Mr. Speaker, can only lead to disaster.

On the other hand, if we meet the challenges of the educational crisis head on, with courage and determination, our budget problems in the future will largely solve themselves. Any Provincial Treasurer knows that tax yields are much greater when the economy is expanding than when it is stagnant or contracting. The key to long-term economic expansion is education. Let us have the courage to make the kind of key we need and open the door to a great and growing future.

Unfortunately, efforts to do this are being seriously hampered by a rising chorus of frightened voices, and we heard another of them earlier this afternoon, clamouring about the so-called evils of government deficits and rising public debt. I will admit that, as far as the Progressive-Conservative Party is concerned, such voices are much more strident outside this House than inside. Indeed, if one wants to find an expression of nineteenth-century financial orthodoxy in all its pristine stupidity within this House, one has to look to the Liberal benches.

The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) thundered as only he can thunder and we heard an echo of the thunder this afternoon, about what he called the tremendous debt on the people of this province. Apart from Hoover-type suggestions for more stringent control of government spending, which might save $10 million or $15 million in a Budget of nearly $1.5 billion, his answer is that the government should strengthen its jaw muscles and put a much harder bite on the federal government. Otherwise, he says, the provincial government will have no alternative but to increase taxes and in that it will meet strong resistance from the people.

Well, let us assume what is not likely, in my opinion, that Ontario will be able to get a large increase in revenue from the federal government. On the balanced budget assumptions, from which the hon. leader of the Opposition starts, the federal government for its part will then have no alternative but to increase taxes. So the only difference will be that the federal Liberal government, rather than the provincial Conservative government, will enjoy the privilege of provoking public wrath. It is hard to believe, Mr. Speaker, that a Liberal regards this as a consummation devoutly to be wished. However, that was the position of the hon. leader of the Opposition in his contribution to the Throne Speech debate.

I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that government deficits and public debts are among the smallest of our problems at the present time. Our most important problems are quite different, and there are two. I think they can be summed up under two headings.

First, there is the short-term problem of continuing and expanding the current economic recovery and of preventing it from tapering off again into recession. Second, there is the long-term problem of developing our society so it will be able to take full advantage of the opportunities of the scientific revolution.

The two problems are, of course, interrelated. There will be no solution to the long-term problem if we do not first of all solve the immediate problem of stimulating greater growth than we have yet enjoyed.

The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development which, as we all know, is an organization representing 20 nations on both sides of the Atlantic, stated in its recent report on Canada that:

While the growth rate of the Canadian economy has recently shown improvement, the level of activity remains unsatisfactory.

The report suggested, and I would ask the hon. gentlemen on the Liberal benches now to hold on to their seats, that the stimulus of higher budget deficits may be required to bring about full employment. It acknowledged that the deficits of recent years have not contributed as much as one might have hoped to economic growth, but it pointed out that, and I am now quoting the exact words again:

An important reason for growing deficits has been the slack demand conditions and that faster growth should serve to reduce the deficit.

The report, I would suggest, might also have stated that because of the lack of any sort of coherent planning, government spending has tended not to take the forms that would do the most good; and I think that criticism applies most particularly to the federal government where the leadership in this field should be given.

To those financial mossbacks who will regard these observations of the OECD as the rankest heresy, let me say that they are in line with most modern economic thinking. Such thinking has been remarkably well summarized in a little book published in the United States a year or two ago called, A Primer on Government Spending. Since the financial spokesmen for both the Conservative and Liberal Parties in this House appear not to have read it, or any of the more technical treatises on which it was based, I would commend it to them.

I would also commend to them a recent address by one of Canada's most perceptive businessmen, Mr. R. M. Fowler, president of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association. Speaking to the annual luncheon of his association on January 31, 1964, that is just two or three weeks ago, Mr. Fowler said, and I am quoting:

The first thing that should be said about the government deficit is that it is largely a bookkeeping result which bears little relationship to corporation accounting.

This is a point, if I may interject a comment in Mr. Fowler's words, which I think keeps mesmerizing many people. Accounting practices that are appropriate for corporations are regularly applied to the government and they produce quite bizarre results and great confusion.

However, returning to Mr. Fowler:

When a government makes long-term capital investments in highways or schools or research institutes it pays for them out of the annual estimates, and unless tax collections are very buoyant a deficit results. When a corporation makes similar investments it capitalizes them and does not show them as current expenditures contributing to a loss figure in the operating account.

It is no answer to say that corporations earn profits and governments do not; taxes, increased by wise capital investments are profits to the government.

Mr. Fowler then goes on to consider the paradox that increased debt in a corporation is regarded as evidence of dynamic management, whereas increased public debt is regarded as sheer profligacy.

As an example, he takes the Bell Telephone Company, because of what he describes as its reputation for "sound growth, reasonable prudence and vigorous management." He finds that between December 31, 1952 and December 31, 1962, that is a ten-year period, Bell's long-term debt increased by 172 per cent, while in the same period the gross national debt of Canada increased by 37 per cent, or a fifth as much. And yet we have people crying havoc because of the increase in public debt in this country.

To those whom he describes as "purveyors of traditional wisdom who give us frequent and detailed judgment that Canada is living wildly beyond its means", he says that he can "find little evidence for this gloomy view".

Debt, both private and public, is the lifeblood of our economy. The proper test is not the size of the debt, but the capacity of the debtor to carry it. There is no question at all that Ontario can readily service its present net debt, and, indeed, a much larger debt, provided our economy continues to grow. I hope it will grow at a more rapid rate than in the past. The real problem is not the size of the debt, but the degree of growth we can expect in the future.

After all, what is our net debt? It is a bookkeeping entry representing highways, educational institutions, hospitals, and other social capital we have built in the past. Because of our antiquated accounting methods no financial valuation is given to this social capital, so that the entries representing it in our books are treated as dead-weight debt.

But to those who seem to think it actually is dead weight, I would pose this question: Do you think that highways, schools, universities and hospitals are millstones around the necks of the people of this province?

Just consider where we would be without them. Our economy would be operating at a lower level, our people would be much worse off, tax yields to the government would be lower. The result would be that our net debt, while lower, would be more burdensome.

Investment in social capital not only produces enormous benefits in terms of opportunities for better living, but it also provides a necessary basis for, and is an immediate stimulus to, economic growth. It thereby increases the government's ability to raise revenue, with the result that though it usually increases net debt, it also increases the government's ability to service debt. Notwithstanding popular mythology to the contrary, it does not create any real problems in public finance if it is related to the needs of the community. It does, however, produce a multitude of real benefits.

My criticism, and when I say this you will notice that it is somewhat different from the criticism of the hon. member for Bruce, is not that investment in social capital—and thus net debt in Ontario—is too high, but that it is not high enough.

I will concede that the hon. Provincial Treasurer, as distinct from many in his party outside this House as well as many Liberals in this House, has not been bullied by the purveyors of traditional wisdom to the point where he is not prepared to contemplate any increase in the net debt. He has, however, been made excessively cautious. Perhaps it is in his nature to be cautious. I do not know, but whatever the causes may be his caution is not appropriate to the needs of the times. Bold leadership, not conservative caution, is what we need.

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bryden: Anyone who looks at the province's finances over the past few years is driven inevitably to the conclusion that the hon. Provincial Treasurer has a little formula in his mind about the net debt. I am speculating here, I admit, but it seems to me that he has. It seems that he feels reasonably comfortable if the increase in the net debt in any year is a bit less than 10 per cent of the total budget. Anything more seems to trouble him unduly. I do not know where he got the formula, or even if he is consciously aware of it, but I—

An hon. member: He agrees.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, he agrees. I am sorry, I was not looking. But I will assure him that it is not divinely inspired. It has, however, induced him to do what I am sure is very hard for him. I can say this because I know the last thing he ever wants to do is hurt anybody, least of all taxpayers, who are voters, but it has induced him to increase taxes and other levies this year.

Immediately after the Budget speech was presented, I criticized these increases on the ground that they tend to discourage economic activity, which is surely the last thing we want to do. I think this point is valid, but I will add that I do not want to place too much stress on it because in total the increases were not all that large.

I would, however, like to object most strenuously to the hon. Provincial Treasurer's selection of the hospital insurance premium as an appropriate area for raising increased revenues. This will be very hard on families of limited means. In my opinion, it is quite unnecessary.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer has tried to justify it on the basis of the original conception, stated by the former Prime Minister when the hospital plan was first introduced, that the plan was to be financed in roughly equal proportions by premiums, contributions from the federal government and contributions out of the general revenues of the province. There was to be an equal three-part deal as various speakers have mentioned. In fact, the hon. Provincial Treasurer came right out in his Budget speech and said, and I am now quoting him:

The cost of the Ontario hospital insurance programme will again be shared approximately one-third by the province, one-third by the federal government and one-third by the insured persons themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I was shattered—no other word will describe it—to hear so fine a gentleman as the hon. Provincial Treasurer tell such a whopper.

Hon. Mr. Allan: That is not a whopper.

Mr. Bryden: It certainly is. Since the inception of the hospital plan, the government—

Hon. Mr. Allan: Exactly the same basis as in the beginning.

Mr. Bryden: Well, all right, we will go back to the beginning. Since the inception of the hospital plan the government has never defrayed one-third of the costs out of general revenues.

The last year for which complete figures are available in the calendar year 1962. The financial statement of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission for that year shows that, apart from some minor income from investments and other sources, the total amount of money collected by the commission was $254 million. Of this $114.2 million or 45 per cent, came from the government of Canada. Premiums accounted for $91.9 million, or 36 per cent. It is true that the government, in accordance with past practice, raided the premium income to the tune of $4 million for other purposes, but that does not alter the fact that the people paying premiums put up just under $92 million.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Who pays for the mental hospitals?

Mr. Bryden: Bringing up the rear was the provincial government with a contribution out of general revenues of $47.9 million, or 19 per cent of the total. Mr. Speaker, I would hate to buy milk from the hon. Provincial Treasurer if he thinks that 19 per cent is the same as one-third.

An hon. member: You are skimming the cream off.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Does it cover the general hospitals or does it cover all hospitals in the province?

Mr. Bryden: I will concede what the government has been trying to palm off on the people ever since the people found out what a swindle that original announcement was: That it tried to act as if expenditures for which it was always responsible are part of the hospital plan. It was always responsible for expenditures for mental hospitals, and for subsidies or grants to tuberculosis sanatoria. That was always recognized as part of its overall responsibilities.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: It has nothing to do with the hospital plan. As far as the hospital plan is concerned the government in 1962 contributed 20 per cent. That is about its normal contribution and I will say again, for the information of the hon. Provincial Treasurer that 20 per cent is not one-third.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would hate to have the hon. member for my banker.

Mr. Bryden: Well, if the hon. Minister has a banker who will treat 20 per cent as one-third, I wish he would tell me about him.

My banker always wants to treat it the other way. The increase in the hospital insurance premiums will bring in about $50 million in a full year. But this year it will not go into effect until July 1, so that the yield will probably be closer to $35 million. As the Budget now stands, the hon. Provincial Treasurer expects to be able to finance nearly $120 million of capital investment out of current revenue. If he left the hospital premiums where they were, he would still be able to finance more than $80 million in capital expansion out of current revenue.

If he had also foregone the tax increases envisaged in the Budget, principally the increase in the gasoline tax, he would still have been able to cover $50 million worth of capital investment out of current revenue. Under these circumstances, there does not appear to be much justification for any of the increased levies the government has proposed in the Budget.

There is no justification at all for the increases in hospital insurance premiums, which are thoroughly regressive taxes. One wonders, Mr. Speaker, if the government is not trying to frighten the people of the province into accepting its phoney medical care insurance proposal in place of a proper Medicare programme. I just wonder about that.

They jack up the hospital premiums so as to lead people to believe that if they get a proper Medicare programme they will have excessively high premiums. This is the propaganda they have always been trying to give them. It is not borne out by experience in other provinces, but I am thinking that this may be a factor in the decision to increase the hospital premium in this Budget.

The urgent need at the present time is not to move toward a balanced Budget, but to stimulate still greater economic growth than we are enjoying even in the present upswing, and to try to make it permanent at the higher level. Therefore, tax increases, especially those of a regressive nature, are ill-advised and should be dropped. And whether they are dropped or not, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the government should be prepared to undertake a much greater programme of capital investment than it has undertaken in the past and is contemplating again for this year. I think this increased capital investment should be concentrated in two fields.

First, the government should make a dramatic upward revision in its plans for the expansion of universities and other post-secondary institutions. I think I have already demonstrated the need for this from the point of view of the long-term requirements of our society, and it will also have the advantage of providing some of the economic stimulus we need in the short term.

Second, the government should quit playing around with the housing problem. It has been playing around with it now for more than 20 years, and I submit that it should get down to business on a large-scale programme of urban renewal and housing development.

One of the basic facts the financial mossbacks persistently refuse to recognize about public investment in housing is that it adds very little to the net debt. Houses are revenue-producing assets, and except to the extent that low-rent housing is subsidized—and I admit that is a straight charge on the Treasury—houses will pay for themselves over a period of time. Therefore, even under the old-fashioned accounting procedures we now use, the increased debt occasioned by public investment in housing is almost entirely offset by assets that are shown on the other side of the balance sheet, because they are revenue-producing.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there is practically no increase in the net debt; and even the hon. member for Bruce, I should think, should not be alarmed by a large-scale housing programme.

A little earlier I quoted the hon. Minister of Economics and Development to the effect that the adjustments made necessary by the technological revolution will be much easier if we enjoy a high and increasing rate of growth. Large-scale construction of educational institutions and housing accommodation, in addition to providing badly needed community equipment, will produce the very growth we need and therefore help in the adjustments we will have to make to the technological revolution.

Moreover, such construction will be of major importance in solving the other problem the hon. Minister referred to, and that is the problem of the displaced worker. Construction activity provides direct employment for many unskilled and semi-skilled workers, and also for skilled men whose skills are threatened with obsolescence. Therefore it is of major importance in solving the problem of the displaced worker, for the simple reason that it prevents large numbers of workers from being displaced at all.

These objectives of maintaining full employment, of maintaining a high rate of growth, of easing the transition in the changes we have to make because of technological progress, in my opinion are infinitely more important than old-fashioned notions about balancing the Budget or moving toward a balanced Budget. If we provide the community with the facilities it needs—and surely it needs educational institutions and low-cost housing—the Budget will look after itself. I am not saying we will be able to fire the hon. Provincial Treasurer, but he will find that his problems will be very much simpler.

To say that our province should not go into debt to provide itself with these urgently needed facilities makes no more sense than to tell a young family with good income prospects that it should not go into debt to provide itself with a house.

What I have outlined, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of programme with which the New Democratic Party would meet the challenges of the scientific revolution. It outlines, I think, the reasons why we will support the very general Budget amendment put before the House and it would appear that they are substantially different reasons than those given by the hon. member for Bruce.

These are some of the reasons why we are prepared to support that amendment criticizing the inadequacy of the present Budget. The programme the government has proposed in its Budget is a timid compromise between economic leadership and financial orthodoxy. We cannot afford timidity in this day and age. We need real leadership and regrettably, Mr. Speaker, the government has not been able to shake off its nineteenth-century notions sufficiently—it has shaken them off more than the Liberal Party here—but it has not been able to shake them off sufficiently to come out and give the real leadership that we need at this time.

Mr. Speaker, it is an ancient tradition in parliamentary assemblies that the Budget debate is the time when members can call attention to grievances of people they represent, and others. The thinking behind that ancient tradition, I believe, is that the Crown can wait for the money it wants voted to it until after the grievances of the people have been dealt with.

I want to deal now with a matter which, in a sense, falls within the general area of a grievance, but I do not want to deal with it purely as an individual grievance, although I think it has great merit even in that context. I want to deal with it even more because I think it points to some problems of more general import.

In recent months, there has been growing public concern over all too frequent instances of apparent neglect, or inadequacy of treatment, of patients in public hospitals.

I want to repeat what I have said before, that I have no desire to be an alarmist. I feel certain that, in the overwhelming majority of cases, the public hospitals of the province give good care to the patients entrusted to them.

Unfortunately, however, there is too much evidence coming to light that this is not always so. What is even worse, patients who suffer inadequate treatment seem to have nowhere to turn. If they or their relatives venture to lodge a complaint, they meet bureaucratic indifference and even contempt from both the hospital authorities immediately concerned and the appropriate authorities in the provincial government.

I think that now is the time to correct this situation. Bureaucracy is a condition that feeds upon itself. If a public-be-damned attitude is tolerated in one case it can readily become the attitude in other cases, until neglect and incompetence become the rule rather than the exception.

To bring the matter into focus, I want to outline in some detail the circumstances of a case on which I happen to have quite complete information. This is the case of Mrs. Julie Rudy of Toronto, who was seriously injured in an automobile accident at Richmond and Bathurst Streets in Toronto at about midnight on Friday, August 23, 1963, and was admitted to Toronto Western Hospital in the small hours of the morning on Saturday, August 24.

Let me make it clear at the outset that I was never interested in this case from the point of view of the publicity to which it might give rise. As evidence of this statement, I would point out that the full facts relating to the case came into my possession at the end of August, 1963. Most of us will recall that this was during the provincial election campaign. Clearly, if my concern had been about publicity, an election provided me with the perfect opportunity to run to the press and play the case for all it was worth. I did not do that either then or later. Instead, I communicated the full facts privately to the deputy Minister of Health on August 29, 1963; and he, in turn, I take it, forwarded my statement to the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

At this point I was satisfied. I felt certain that there would be a full investigation and I was content for it to be conducted in private. I was also certain that appropriate action would be taken to reduce the possibility of another unfortunate patient suffering experiences similar to those of Mrs. Rudy.

Apparently this was too much to expect. It is now quite clear that neither the government nor any of its agencies ever conducted any investigation of any kind into this unfortunate episode, even though they had all the basic facts relating to it in their possession since August 29, 1963.

Perhaps I should explain that the information I placed before the department was given to me by the patient's mother, Mrs. Marjorie Pinney, in an extensive interview I had with her a few hours after she had moved her daughter out of Toronto Western Hospital to a private hospital, and while all the events described were still fresh in her mind. I took extensive notes during the interview, and the next day, Tuesday, August 27, I dictated them onto a tape. On Thursday, August 29, I corrected the transcript made from the tape and forwarded a copy of it to the deputy Minister of Health.

I think it is appropriate to quote at some length from this transcript. As I do so, I would ask hon. members to bear in mind that these quotations relate to a patient who was ultimately discovered to be suffering from three fractured ribs, a fractured pelvis and serious head injuries. In fact, the head injuries were so severe that it was not until February 1, 1964, that the neurologist attending her indicated his willingness to provide a final report for the purposes of an insurance or other settlement that may be arrived at. I do not know if that report will give her a clean bill of health, or will indicate the possibility of continuing disability.

Mrs. Pinney was advised that her daughter was in hospital, not by the hospital authorities but by the father of the driver of the car, some time after midnight on Saturday, August 24. She immediately went to the hospital, and I now quote from my memorandum to the deputy Minister of Health:

When Mrs. Pinney arrived in the emergency ward at the Western Hospital she found the staff in charge quite disinterested and offhand in their attitude. They did, however, assure her that her daughter was quite all right, that her head had been X-rayed and they had found no injuries; and they assured her there were no broken bones. They said that Mrs. Rudy would be kept for 24 hours for observation but after that would likely be able to go home.

The staff in the emergency ward suggested to Mrs. Pinney that she should call the hospital at 9 a.m. to inquire about her daughter's condition and she did this. She was told that Mrs. Rudy was in satisfactory condition and would probably be discharged from the hospital in the afternoon. She was further told, however, that any further action would have to await the doctor's report.

Acting on this assurance, Mrs. Pinney took no further action but went to the hospital at the regular visiting hour at 2 p.m. on Saturday to visit her daughter. She was still expecting to take her home and was again assured by the nurse on duty that Mrs. Rudy had no broken bones.

When Mrs. Pinney saw her daughter, however, she was by no means reassured. Mrs. Rudy complained of severe pain in her shoulder and chest and also in her back. In addition, she complained of feeling dead weight in her back when she tried to move her legs. Her mother noticed that her breathing was light and rapid; that she was very flushed; that her attention span was short; that her eyes were usually closed but when she opened them they appeared glazed. It seemed to Mrs. Pinney that she was very dazed.

Mrs. Pinney reported this to the nurse on duty who brushed her aside with indifference and even rudeness.

Mrs. Pinney had several short conversations with her daughter while she was sitting at her bedside during this period and during the course of these conversations Mrs. Rudy informed her that that morning the nurse had wakened her, had given her a washcloth to wash her face, and had told her to get up to go to the bathroom to take a bath. When she protested that she couldn't get up the nurse tried to pull her up by the arm.

When Mrs. Rudy continued to protest that she couldn't get out of bed, the nurse finally gave up and called her a "cry-baby". On other occasions nurses told her she was unco-operative and they criticized her severely on two occasions for wetting the bed. In reference to this point Mrs. Pinney asked her why she had not rung the bell to get assistance when she had to urinate and when Mrs. Rudy seemed not to comprehend, Mrs. Pinney looked around and discovered the bell was nowhere near her bed but was off to the side on the floor.

Reverting now to Mrs. Pinney's expression of concern to the nurse regarding her daughter's condition, when she got no satisfaction from the nurse she stated to her that she wanted the doctor to see her daughter as soon as possible.

And I will interject here that she was referring to the doctor whom she assumed would be in charge of the case.

She waited patiently until about 4 p.m. and then discovered that the doctor had come in about 3.10 and had left without seeing her daughter. When she asked the nurse why this had happened, the nurse told her that the doctor was very busy and had an emergency case that he had to attend to.

A Dr. Rudd finally came in about 5 p.m. He spoke to Mrs. Pinney who was still sitting at her daughter's bedside and seemed surprised when she told him that Mrs. Rudy seemed to be in pain. He examined her and finally stated that the pain was too severe to pursue the examination any further and that he would order X-rays immediately. He further stated that Mrs. Rudy certainly could not go home.

Mrs. Pinney went home for supper and returned to the hospital at about 7.30 p.m. At about 7.45 p.m. she asked if any report had yet been received on the X-rays. The nurse told her that there was none as yet so she decided to wait. She told the nurse that she would like to talk to Dr. Rudd as soon as he was available.

She then went in to see her daughter and noticed that when she had been brought back from X-ray she had been simply dropped on the bed with a sheet pulled negligently over her with her feet exposed. At this time she noticed that her feet and legs had still not been washed and had on them road dirt from the accident the night before.

Mrs. Pinney waited until 10 p.m. to receive a report on the X-ray. No one came to see her at any time during that period so she went to the nurse to ask if Dr. Rudd was coming to see her. The nurse told her that Dr. Rudd had gone off duty. When Mrs. Pinney complained the nurse located the person who had taken the X-rays. He came down and told Mrs. Pinney that Mrs. Rudy had three fractured ribs, one of them serious.

Mrs. Pinney then asked about the condition of her daughter's back. He told her that he knew nothing at all about that. Mrs. Pinney, who had until then been accepting the indifference and apparent negligence of the hospital staff philosophically now lodged her first formal complaint. She stated that it was a fine time to find out that her daughter had broken ribs and she definitely wanted to know about the condition of her daughter's spine.

She then went home and being concerned about her daughter's health, decided to phone her own physician, even though it was quite late at night. He told her that he would go in to see Mrs. Rudy the next morning, Sunday, August 25. He phoned her at noon on that day and told her that Mrs. Rudy was still suffering concussion and shock and that he had left orders that she was not to be moved under any circumstances.

Mrs. Pinney went to the hospital at 2 p.m. on Sunday to see her daughter and she had this conversation with her: "My doctor was here?" "Yes, when he was here I was sitting in a chair."

For most of Mrs. Pinney's visit Mrs. Rudy did not seem to know her mother was there. Her breathing was rapid, she was flushed, and she had a glazed look in her eyes. Her speech was mumbling and slow.

Mrs. Pinney made another try at conversation. She said to her daughter that her physician had ordered an injection to help relieve her pain and asked if her daughter had received this injection. Mrs. Rudy replied that she had but that it was not worth it. When her mother asked for an explanation she said, "They rolled me over on my stomach."

Mrs. Pinney went to the nurse, stating that she did not like how her daughter looked and also that her daughter did not seem to comprehend very much of what was said to her. The nurse said, "Oh, she spoke to me today, she is all right." The nurse then went into the room with Mrs. Pinney, went to Mrs. Rudy's bedside and spoke her name clearly. Mrs. Rudy opened her eyes, and the nurse said, "She is all right," and went out again.

To summarize the next portion of the memorandum, I will simply state that Mrs. Pinney next saw her daughter at 2 p.m. on Monday, August 26. I now continue quoting from my memorandum:

When she entered she found her daughter propped up in bed almost in a sitting position with her glasses stuck on her face. A woman in a white coat but with no cap was interviewing her. When Mrs. Pinney entered, the woman asked her if she could get a brush for her, saying that she had had a terrible time trying to comb Mrs. Rudy's hair.

The woman had a form and was pestering Mrs. Rudy with questions about her personal belongings. It was quite obvious that Mrs. Rudy did not comprehend the questions and was incapable of answering. Her head was moving from side to side and her eyes were blinking open and shut.

Mrs. Pinney intervened to say that she would answer the questions but the woman kept directing them towards Mrs. Rudy. With Mrs. Pinney's help she finally got the form filled in and then she stated that it was necessary for Mrs. Rudy to sign in two places. It was obvious to Mrs. Pinney that her daughter did not fully understand what she was being asked to do but the woman put a pen in her hand and placed it on the paper at the appropriate spot.

After the woman left Mrs. Pinney asked her daughter if her family physician had been in to see her again. Mrs. Rudy said that she did not remember and then said two doctors came in and stood me on my feet.

This is the last coherent conversation Mrs. Pinney had with her daughter up until the time I interviewed her late Monday evening.

Another woman then came in who apparently was a secretary because she had no uniform. She started to ask Mrs. Rudy a number of questions, but Mrs. Pinney intervened and said that she would answer the questions. The woman asked about Mrs. Rudy's name, address, hospitalization number and related matters.

She then stated that Mrs. Rudy was being moved. She looked at Mrs. Rudy's hospitalization card, which had been obtained from her purse nearby, and said, "Oh, she has semi-private coverage has she? She is being moved to the ward, you know."

After the woman left, Mrs. Pinney thought for a minute and then went to the nurses' station. She said to the nurses on duty that she did not want her daughter to go to the public ward and asked why she should have to go there since she had semi-private coverage. One of the nurses said that everything had been arranged but that Mrs. Rudy could probably be moved to semi-private in a couple of days. Mrs. Pinney asked why she could not stay where she was until then. She said she did not like her daughter being moved that much. The nurse said she could not stay in casualty and terminated the conversation abruptly.

Another nurse then said that Mrs. Rudy had to go to X-ray before going to the ward. She also stated that Mrs. Rudy's ward would be No. 2 South. Mrs. Pinney asked if she could tell her where that ward was located. The nurse said she had no idea where it was but that Mrs. Pinney could go to the Bathurst Street information desk and they would tell her.

She went there, found out the location of the ward and asked if she could see it. She was told that she would have to get a pass, which was provided to her and then she went to the ward.

When she arrived there she asked the nurse on duty if her daughter had arrived yet and was told by the nurse that she was not yet down from X-ray but was expected momentarily. Mrs. Pinney looked around the ward and decided that this was not a place where her daughter would get adequate care. There appeared to be about 50 beds in the ward.

It was at this point that Mrs. Pinney made what she realized was the very serious decision to take her daughter out of Western Hospital. She immediately took steps to have her admitted to a private hospital and went to the business office at Western to arrange for her release. I now quote again from my memorandum:

The business office had no record of Mrs. Rudy but the girl at the office phoned X-ray to have Mrs. Rudy returned to casualty.

Mrs. Pinney waited at the business office for about 15 minutes. The office girl then told her that her daughter was coming out of X-ray and added: "I am sorry that she has a bad fracture."

Mrs. Pinney asked, "You mean her ribs?"

The office girl said, "No, it is a pelvic fracture."

Mrs. Pinney noted that the time was now 4.40 p.m. on Monday, more than 60 hours after Mrs. Rudy had first entered the hospital.

I will not take the time to quote the rest of the memorandum, but it tells a story of indifference, lack of co-operation and downright obstruction by the hospital staff in relation to Mrs. Pinney's natural concern about her daughter and her desire to provide the best possible treatment for her. This stands in stark contrast to the prompt and energetic measures taken by the private hospital as soon as Mrs. Rudy was transferred there.

The memorandum also reveals that the specialists brought in by the private hospital reported to Mrs. Pinney that though the fractured ribs and pelvic fracture were regarded as serious, by far the most serious of Mrs. Rudy's injuries was her head injury. This came as a real shock to Mrs. Pinney because nothing she had been told at Western Hospital, and nothing that had been done there, led her to believe that her daughter's head had been seriously injured at all; and, indeed, she had been assured to the contrary.

I submit it is a fair conclusion that Western Hospital never did diagnose the true nature of Mrs. Rudy's head injury. After having determined, in the examination conducted when Mrs. Rudy was first admitted to the hospital, that there was no skull fracture, the hospital authorities merely jumped to the conclusion that there was nothing seriously wrong. What is worse, the nursing staff treated her as if this was a correct diagnosis and nothing Mrs. Pinney did in calling serious symptoms to their attention could shake them.

Not long after I submitted my memorandum to the deputy Minister of Health, Dr. Brown, I was contacted by the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission who offered to arrange for me to meet the Western Hospital authorities. I was not able to take advantage of this offer immediately, because of my preoccupation with the election campaign and various matters arising immediately after the election; but in October, I met with the superintendent and medical director of the hospital and discussed Mrs. Rudy's case with them in considerable detail.

The interview started with a statement from the superintendent along the lines of statements he subsequently made to the press, purporting to explain that Mrs. Rudy had been adequately cared for and that, if there had been any failure at all, it had been purely a failure in public relations; that is, in communicating to the patient's mother.

I then asked questions in relation to the information Mrs. Pinney had given to me and which I have just presented in part to this House. It soon became obvious that the superintendent's explanation, though perhaps admirable from a public relations point of view, simply did not stand up. Indeed, the medical director finally stated simply that a "bull" had been made—and that was his exact word—and went on to explain that no matter how adequate procedures appear to be, the human factor inevitably results in mistakes being made from time to time.

I took no further action beyond reporting to Mrs. Pinney that I had talked to the hospital officials and that, as far as I could see, nothing was likely to be done by either the provincial or hospital authorities. I understand that subsequently—I do not know exactly when—Mrs. Pinney provided full information about the case to Mr. Ron Haggart of the Toronto Daily Star.

As we all know, Mr. Haggart threw the bright light of publicity on the case in an article published in his newspaper on January 9, 1964. This quite naturally brought forth a statement from the hospital. I was amazed to discover it merely repeated the excuses made to me in private about three months earlier, which simply did not stand up under analysis.

The hon. Minister of Health, I regret to say, made the matter even worse. After the Haggart column appeared, there were several statements emanating from government sources indicating that a full government investigation was being undertaken. About two weeks later, on January 21, the hon. Minister of Health issued a statement whitewashing the hospital completely—and I use the word whitewashing advisedly.

It appeared that this statement was a report on an independent investigation conducted by the government and it was so interpreted by the press. A careful reading, however, shows that it was no such thing. Indeed there was no government investigation.

The hon. Minister stated "that a very complete and thorough investigation" had been carried out, not by the government but "by the hospital and staff". In other words, the hon. Minister accepted the hospital's account completely, uncritically, and without interviewing the complainants or anyone else outside the hospital, and without any real effort to get at all the facts.

The speciousness of the hospital's explanation, as repeated by the hon. Minister, can be readily demonstrated. For example, the hon. Minister said at one point, and I am quoting:

As she became more conscious, Mrs. Rudy complained of chest pains, and X-rays were taken of this area on the day following the accident. . . . The following day, Sunday [the second day following the accident], Mrs. Rudy was able to tell the staff that weight-bearing was difficult and, on X-rays being taken, a fractured pelvis was diagnosed.

A little later the hon. Minister said:

X-rays of extensive areas of the body are not lightly or indiscriminately ordered, particularly when there is so much concern for unnecessary exposure to potentially dangerous radiation.

Those are extracts from the hon. Minister's statement. These same excuses the hospital gave to me in the first instance and it later gave them in its public statement. The facts are quite different.

Mrs. Rudy's level of consciousness did not increase during her stay in Toronto Western Hospital. On the contrary it declined seriously. However, the fact that during her intervals of consciousness she was suffering severe pain in her chest and back, and had weight-bearing difficulties, was communicated to the nursing staff repeatedly by her mother, Mrs. Pinney, on the Saturday afternoon—only a little more than 12 hours after her admission to the hospital. It was 60 hours before the hospital got around to exploring for the pelvic fracture.

It was only under constant pressure from Mrs. Pinney that the hospital staff X-rayed her chest on Saturday evening, and at that time they did not bother to X-ray the pelvic area. This was done, not on Sunday as the hon. Minister's statement implied, but on Monday afternoon. This was two days after the hospital was informed of the symptoms of distress in that area.

The hon. Minister's reference to "X-rays of extensive areas of the body" is a preposterous irrelevancy. Nobody ever suggested that such a procedure should have been undertaken. What was suggested was that X-rays should have been taken promptly of the two areas where serious symptoms were manifest, not of the whole body, but of two areas where the patient was suffering severe pain and in relation to one of which she had difficulty moving her legs.

The hon. Minister stated unctuously that there was "no evidence to suggest any lack of, or less than, good care." I would like to ask him if he considers it good care for the nursing staff to try to make a patient in Mrs. Rudy's condition get up to go to the bathroom, to try to pull her out of the bed by the arm when she was unable to get up, to call her a cry-baby and unco-operative and to fail even to put the bell within her reach.

Does he consider it good care for non-professional administrative staff to prop her up in bed, comb her hair and pester her with questions about her personal belongings, and forms to be filled out, especially when her mother was right there at hand to give them any information they needed? Does he consider it good care to put a patient in such condition in a large public ward?

Alderman George Ben, one of the Toronto city council's two representatives on the hospital's board of governors, apparently did not think it was good care. He was quoted in the Toronto Telegram of January 10, 1964, as saying that "Mrs. Rudy got slipshod treatment at Toronto Western Hospital" and that "the facts of the case cannot be denied."

Even so, I would not normally have been inclined to make a public issue of this case, and in fact did not do so for many months. Two things changed my mind.

First, the brusque dismissal of serious and legitimate complaints by the hospital authorities and the hon. Minister of Health is more than should be tolerated.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bryden: The ultimate in smug arrogance was achieved by Mr. Trevor Moore, who was quoted in the Toronto Telegram of January 9, 1964, as saying the following on behalf of the hospital board:

There is no valid complaint. It is unfortunate that making a public issue of it may detract from the magnificent work the Western and other hospitals do in emergencies.

An hon. member: We need a few more Dr. Shulmans to get into this situation.

Mr. Bryden: Second, it now seems clear that the Rudy case is by no means an isolated one. After that case hit the press and my name became associated with it, I received a large number of letters and telephone calls from people outlining similar experiences, often in considerable detail, in this and other hospitals. I have not had time to verify the information given to me in these letters and calls, so I will not refer to them beyond saying that I have received them.

I would, however, like to refer to a few of the cases that have made headlines in the press over the past several months: Here are some of these headlines:

Jury Charges Hospital Negligent in Death Caused by 200 Tablets, the Toronto Globe and Mail, October 4, 1963.

Two die in hospital, dirty hands blamed, the Toronto Star, October 30, 1963.

Some hospitals breed infection with poor hygiene, study finds, the Toronto Globe and Mail, October 31, 1963.

Clamp in dead patient's abdomen, Cass may act, the Toronto Telegram, February 1, 1964.

Transfer of dying worker delayed by hospital—jury, the Toronto Star, February 6, 1964.

The Toronto Telegram account of this last case, published under the heading, "Inquest Hits Hospital", contained this reference to the widow's evidence before the coroner's jury:

Beaudry's widow, Mary, who said she was "concerned" about the treatment given her husband, testified there was so much "water pouring out of his nose" that a puddle had formed by the bed. She drew it to the nurse's attention. The nurse said she would mention it the next day or write the doctor a note, Mrs. Beaudry said.

Dr. Cass said after the inquest the "water" was probably spinal fluid.

Mr. Speaker, this sort of thing is just not good enough. I will say again that in my opinion the vast majority of patients in public hospitals receive good care. But I am concerned, and I think the hon. members of this Legislature should be concerned, that too many patients appear to receive less than good care. It is time something was done to correct the situation.

Alderman Ben attributed what he described as "slipshod care" in the Rudy case to the fact that the hospital staff, especially the professional staff, is badly overworked and I am inclined to agree with him. Doctors and nurses are only human and they are bound to make mistakes or give inadequate attention from time to time when they have to carry impossible work loads.

Alderman Ben blamed the city and Metro councils for allowing this situation to develop. I would add that a large share of the blame should be shouldered by the provincial government. The shortage of nurses and the shortage, indeed, of hospitals has reached the proportions of a public scandal. We will never be able to ensure that uniformly good treatment will be given to all patients in hospitals until this situation is remedied. And it will not be remedied until the provincial government gives real leadership.

This, however, is too big a problem to go into now. No doubt there will be an opportunity to discuss it more fully under the estimates of The Department of Health and I have no doubt that there will be hon. members other than myself who will want to discuss that broad problem. In the meantime, however, there are two aspects of the problem I would like to deal with here.

First, it would appear that patients, or the relatives, or unfortunately in some cases, the survivors of patients have nowhere to go with legitimate complaints. If a patient dies, there may be an inquest, but that is not necessarily so, and I am not arguing that it should necessarily be so. And if the patient is more fortunate and lives, where can he go? We have already seen the kind of runaround and brush-off Mrs. Rudy and Mrs. Pinney got. I have come to the conclusion that this is what almost any patient can expect.

It has been said that a patient can sue. Well, there is no point in his suing unless he can prove specific damages, and that may not be what he is interested in.

Several ex-patients I have talked to, including Mrs. Rudy and her mother, were not interested in collecting anything from the hospital. All they wanted to do was to ensure that other patients in the future will not be treated the way they were. And in that endeavour they can get exactly nowhere.

Even if a patient was to sue, what chance has he got? The hospital has all the relevant records in its possession and is not likely to hand them over to him. And we all know of the proclivity of the medical profession to close ranks for mutual protection. So even a patient who would like to sue, if he has any sense at all, knows that he would be wise to save his time and his money.

The second problem I would like to refer to relates to the administration of public hospitals. Hospitals are incorporated in many different ways, although the big ones appear to operate under private legislation, but most of them seem to be governed by boards that are usually described either as boards of governors or boards of trustees. Those that I have studied also have this in common: Their boards are closed corporations dominated by big business and high finance.

I have not studied the hospitals operated by religious orders or organizations, but of the others in the Toronto area, Toronto General seems to have the greatest possibility for broad community representation on its board. The Act under which it operates provides for a board of 25 trustees, eight appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council—that is by the Cabinet—five by the governors of the University of Toronto, five by the Toronto city council and seven by the subscribers—that is, people who at any time have given $1,000 or more to the hospital, or who have given $100 or more in the immediately preceding year.

I said that Toronto General has the greatest possibility for broad representation on its board, but in practice unfortunately this possibility does not seem to have been realized. The main reason seems to be that in this, as in other hospitals I have studied, the Cabinet exercises its powers of appointment to confirm business dominance rather than to ensure broad representation.

The latest list of Toronto General trustees

I have been able to obtain is for 1962. It shows that, apart from five aldermen appointed by Toronto city council, the president of the university and two members of the university staff, the trustees are all big business representatives, and I mean big—big in the sort of E. P. Taylor category. In fact, at that time he was one of the trustees.

The Sick Children's Hospital does not even have the potential for broad representation. It operates under a statute of 1950, which provided for a board of trustees consisting of the trustees in office on April 1, 1950, plus additional trustees up to a total of 30.

And how are additional trustees appointed and how are vacancies filled? By the board itself. Here we have again what I have referred to in another connection as a self-perpetuating oligarchy, a board accountable to nobody but itself, maintaining itself in perpetuity.

A statute of 1942 sets forth the composition of the board of governors of Toronto Western Hospital. It consists of certain life members appointed by the board itself, two ordinary members appointed by the Cabinet, two by the Toronto city council and certain others elected by subscribers. A subscriber, in the case of Toronto Western, is anyone who has contributed $100 to the hospital; and he gets one vote for every $100 he has contributed.

The list of governors for March, 1963 in Toronto Western shows that, apart from two aldermen appointed by city council, the board is a solid phalanx of big business representatives. It is interesting to note that five of the governors, that is of the members of the board of governors, have a direct connection with one or more of the Argus Corporation and its numerous subsidiaries. The banks are also exceedingly well represented on the Toronto Western board.

I do not object to business representation on hospital boards, if for no other reason than that a significant part of the initial financing of hospitals has often come from business interests. But nowadays most of the money, for both capital and operating purposes, comes from public sources.

In any case, for the benefit of the moss-encrusted Tories who are making interjections to my left, perhaps not loud enough to be picked up in Hansard, I would like to state a principle that perhaps would not penetrate to them but I think is worth stating.

Hospitals are public institutions, not private preserves. Their function is to serve the community. They cannot perform that function properly if they are not responsive to the community—all of it, not just a select group within it. The dominance, and this is what I object to, of business interests on hospital boards is a relic of the past and is not in the public interest.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): What should they have on them?

Mr. Bryden: Well, there are some moss-backs who will never understand the workings of the democratic system; but normally, Mr. Speaker, democracy works on the principle that where you have a public institution in the community, it should be responsive to the community. And the way one makes it responsive to the community, where it is not appropriate to provide for the election of the people who are the governing body, is to ensure that a great variety of community interests are represented, not just one narrow interest that happens to finance the Tory party, as well as having in the past made some contributions to hospitals.

But I think it is time we started to think in terms of democracy in its real meaning, not in terms of elections every four years with the real levers of power exercised by a narrow oligarchy at the top of the economic structure. I am now complaining about this problem only in terms of one institution, and that institution is the public hospital, an institution that surely should be responsive to the whole community, should reflect the thinking and the viewpoint of the whole community. And I have just set forth the facts to show that, with the exception of a very small number of boards, the boards of these hospitals are dominated by the business oligarchy of Bay Street and related areas.

I have no objection to the gentlemen of Bay Street being represented on the hospital boards—I think they should be represented there along with other segments of the community—but what I do object to is the dominance of hospital boards by these people. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is this sort of bureaucratic oligarchy which has produced the sort of treatment that a person such as Mrs. Rudy got, and numerous others whose cases I have referred to here, and I think it is time these closed corporations were broken up and made responsive to the public will.

Mr. MacDonald: The government hon. members obviously do not care; that is their problem over there.

Mr. Bryden: Well, this is the great difficulty, of course. However, I have found, Mr. Speaker, that although these gentlemen always resist new ideas, sometimes a few of them filter through, so I will keep hammering at this point.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Everybody's out of step but our Ken.

Mr. Bryden: No. The trouble is that everybody is out of step but our Matt over there. He has no answer at all, except abuse. No answer at all to what I have just given him.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: Well, as I was saying, Mr. Speaker, he has no answer except abuse because he cannot answer the documentation I gave him. He tried to brush it aside in public, but he is not going to get away with it; and it is unfortunate that a man with a closed mind like him should have this important portfolio he now occupies.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that I am not opposed to a wide degree of independence for hospital boards. What I am advocating is much broader representation of all the varying interests in the community. This is quite compatible with independence. Indeed, it will make for greater independence than at present, because the boards will not be unduly responsive to any particular interest group. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to place two recommendations before this House for its consideration, and the consideration of the government.

First, an independent tribunal should be set up to which people with grievances about their treatment in hospitals can take their complaints. The tribunal should investigate such complaints. In general, I do not think its investigations should be conducted in public, and I do not think that its findings should necessarily be made public. But it should have power to recommend remedial action to the appropriate authorities.

Second, the composition of the hospital boards of governors or trustees should be completely reviewed and reformed, and these private statutes which are buried all through the ancient statutes of the province should be reviewed and brought up to date so that there will be broad community representation on hospital boards.

In closing, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The hon. member has obviously had too much this afternoon to absorb it.

Mr. Bryden: In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to retract the rather heated remark I made about the hon. Minister of Health a moment ago. You see, the trouble with the hon. Minister of Health and the trouble with me—at least by ancestry—is that he is a Scottish Presbyterian and I am a Scottish Presbyterian by tradition, although brought up in Canada, and sometimes we get a little heated. And if I have said anything unkind to him, I would like to withdraw it.

I would hope also, that when he gets over his natural Scottish Presbyterian heat, he will sit down and consider objectively the two recommendations I put before him. I think he may, since he is a very intelligent man who wants to do a good job, I am sure, come to the conclusion that there is some sense to them. I can assure him that I am going to continue to pursue him on these and other matters relating to hospitals, because I think there are many matters relating to the administration of hospitals that could be improved. In the meantime, I think that perhaps he might give those two recommendations consideration. I think he will find that they have considerable sense in them.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (Humber) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

THE HOURS OF WORK AND VACATIONS WITH PAY ACT

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour) moves second reading of Bill No. 6, An Act to amend The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE OPERATING ENGINEERS ACT, 1964

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves second reading of Bill No. 37, The Operating Engineers Act, 1964.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. Minister of Labour that this bill was just put into the books today. I do not know whether any hon. members have something to say about the principle of the bill. I have not very much, because it is one of those bills which is tied up with regulations, but certainly when it is only put into the book today there may be some hon. members who would like to have a chance to look at it before it is dealt with in second reading.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to this, this is one of the important pieces of legislation being advanced, in that it has to do with the revision of The Operating Engineers Act.

On introducing the bill I spoke at some length giving its background. I have also discussed with the hon. member for Wentworth East, who has just spoken, Mr. Speaker, and have communicated with the hon. leader of his party (Mr. MacDonald), and I will repeat that it is my desire that this bill go to committee and I wanted to get second reading over to get it into a position to get to the committee stage.

I do not see that it could go to committee—I would like to see it—at the end of this week, but Friday is not a very good day, and therefore I cannot see it going to committee before next Monday or Tuesday. But at that time, in committee—I would think that on Monday or Tuesday of next week—ample time then will have been given to interested parties to see the bill as printed; it is now available for distribution today, and I have already delivered some five copies of the bill to the hon. member who has just spoken—a week would give ample opportunity for those interested to appear.

It is an important matter and, having that in mind, I am endeavouring to make arrangements for the three men who served on the committee, who brought in the report on which the legislation is based — Professor Alcott, Mr. Rose and Mr. Poulson—to be present at the committee. In view of the technical nature of the subject matter, they will be present and able to answer such questions as might be advanced by those interested in the legislation itself.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, Mr. Speaker, I agree with what the hon. Minister has said, and our group will support the second reading, mainly for the reason that it is a well established bill and the principle has been well defined in the past. But I think we should just make sure that it does not become a precedent, for bills of a more important nature, that we get them one day, and the same day have the second reading. I agree that we can go ahead with this on the second reading.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that we have discussed this before and I have made arrangements to be notified when these bills are put in the order book, and this bill went into the order book last week. It did not go in today. Therefore it was available to the hon. member to examine last week, and now he states he is quite prepared to go on with the second reading! I have no desire to hurry any legislation through the House; on the other hand I feel I must say that I made arrangements to be informed when these bills went into the books, and this bill has been there for some days and was in the book on Friday. It should have been examined by the hon. member over the weekend.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the government will permit, as has been done in the past, a discussion of principle when it comes back into committee of the whole House. I think perhaps this would overcome what—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, in the matter of how this House is operated, we go through this clause by clause and if any hon. member has anything to say, a very free ranging discussion is permitted at that time. I have no objection to the bill being held out even at second reading, apart from the fact that the hon. Minister has said he is trying to set up a proper examination of the legislation at the committee stage. I am not concerned how long the bill is held up.

Mr. Singer: I am prepared to take the hon. Prime Minister's assurance.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to indicate that we have no objection to second reading if we have the normal leeway later. There may conceivably be a new principle but, quite frankly, what the new principle is will be clearer after we have an opportunity to have the benefit of the advice of the experts. I do hope that the hon. Minister will stick to his proposal of not having the committee meet until next week, even if it did become possible at the end of this week. I think that in as important a bill as this, that the interested parties should have at least a week to prepare their case, and then come and make their representations for such improvements as they can persuade.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport) moves second reading of Bill No. 38, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE BAILIFFS ACT, 1960-61

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill No. 39, An Act to amend The Bailiffs Act, 1960-61.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWN OF COCHRANE

Mr. R. Brunelle (Cochrane North) moves second reading of Bill No. Pr1, An Act respecting the town of Cochrane.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. Pr1 is the fourth bill dealing with fixed assessments that has come before this House since March, 1961, when the government came to the conclusion that the provisions of The Municipal Act allowing fixed assessments should be removed.

I do not know the reasons for the government's conclusion, Mr. Speaker, but I could make some suggestions. I think one reason why they might have come to this conclusion was revealed by the investigation into the affairs of the town of Eastview. One of the things referred to at some length in the report was the abuse of the fixed assessment provisions by the Eastview council. I think another thing that might have entered into the government's mind in connection with fixed assessments and the repeal of that section of The Municipal Act was the fact that there was a very strong recommendation from the Ontario association of mayors and reeves recommending that fixed assessments no longer be granted. And the Ontario mayors and reeves, I think, with very good sense behind their suggestion, recommended to the government in a resolution that these sections be removed from The Municipal Act.

They bemoaned unfair competition between various municipalities, that industries were being lured from one municipality to the other because of the degree of a fixed assessment, and the resulting of a better tax deal. This association, which represents the leaders of municipal government in this province, suggested there are better ways of making sure that areas which do not have sufficient industry can be dealt with.

Perhaps a third reason that the government came to the conclusion that those provisions of The Municipal Act should be removed, was a very strong recommendation from its own civil servants in the trade and industry branch of The Department of Economics and Development. There were lots of good reasons, Mr. Speaker, and there are probably many that I have not mentioned, that moved the government to take this action in 1961. The ink was hardly dry on the amending legislation when the government began to slip and slide away from what was its clearly announced intention. There was the Hearst bill introduced by the hon. member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle) and I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Cochrane North makes a most appealing presentation. And I congratulate him. When he comes before the private bills committee, it takes a pretty tough member of that committee to resist his fascinating presentation.

I do not blame the hon. member for Cochrane North for bringing these things forward, because these presentations are urged upon him by his constituents and they feel, probably rightly, Mr. Speaker, that if they are given special preference then things will be better in Hearst or in Cochrane.

Well, the hon. member for Cochrane North was able to establish somewhat of a new principle, when the first bill came forward, to deviate from the government's intention. He suggested, and the majority of the committee agreed, and the government subsequently agreed, and the bill became law, that because negotiations had gone on prior to the government's legislation, because the council of Hearst and the industry concerned had met together frequently, because a signed contract was produced, because people had relied on the law continuing as it was, that perhaps an exception should be made in that case. It was a very complete presentation, Mr. Speaker.

It was backed up, as I say, with written documents, by affidavits, by the appearance of the councillors and so on, and the majority of the committee said, "All right. This once we will depart." But what the government has just said we were going to do was to allow a fixed assessment for the town of Hearst. Well, the door was open, Mr. Speaker, and as a result we are having these additional representations.

Then there was a case in Wallaceburg based on the precedent, for what it was worth, of what took place in Hearst. Again the majority of the private bills committee decided that in Wallaceburg, where the situation was somewhat similar, a fixed assessment should be allowed for the specified industry.

One very interesting facet of these discussions in the private bills committee was the reaction of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Gomme). The hon. member stood up in the private bills committee and opposed the granting of a fixed assessment to the town of Hearst. He opposed it for what I thought were most logical reasons. He said: "We have already told an industry in Smith's Falls—Hershey Chocolates—that, even though prior negotiations went on, unfortunately the law has been changed and we cannot grant Hershey Chocolates a fixed assessment. And having told them that, and having convinced the Smith's Falls council that this was the case, and having convinced Hershey Chocolates that this was the case, surely if it applied in Smith's Falls, it must apply in Hearst?"

As I say, Mr. Speaker, the majority of the committee did not agree with this, and they granted a fixed assessment to this industry in the town of Hearst. And they granted a further fixed assessment to the industry in Wallaceburg. Naturally enough, Mr. Speaker, and to the surprise of no one, amongst the private bills on our agenda this year was a private bill brought forward by the town of Smith's Falls. And who were they asking a fixed assessment for? Naturally enough, Mr. Speaker, they were asking a fixed assessment for Hershey Chocolates.

Well, if it was good enough for Wallaceburg, why should it not be good enough for Smith's Falls? And again the majority of the committee agreed that this was reasonable and logical; and again, Mr. Speaker, the same sort of chain of events seemed to carry through. There had been previous negotiations, there were signed documents produced, there were officials who came forward and said these negotiations had been carried on before the law was changed, and the majority of the committee in their wisdom, and the majority of the House later in their wisdom, pushed the Smith's Falls bill on through our legislative process.

It being six of the clock, Mr. Speaker, and since my remarks are going to take some little time yet, I would move the adjournment of this debate.

Mr. Singer moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will complete the Throne debate and proceed with the estimates of The Department of Labour.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, February 18, 1964

Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Tuesday, February 18, 1964

Fifth report, standing committee on private bills, Mr. Gomme	691
Reformatories Act, bill to amend, Mr. Grossman, first reading	691
Statement re public accounts committee, Mr. Robarts	692
Conclusion of the debate on the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Sopha, Mr. Robarts	693
Town of Cochrane, bill respecting, Mr. Brunelle, on second reading	716
Recess, 6 o'clock	719

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature today, in the west gallery, students from Port Perry Public School.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark) from the standing committee on private bills presented the committee's fifth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill No. Pr31, An Act respecting the city of Niagara Falls.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill No. Pr10, An Act to incorporate Brock University.

Bill No. Pr23, An Act respecting the city of Hamilton.

Your committee would recommend that the following bill, having been withdrawn, be not reported:

Bill No. Pr15, An Act respecting the township of Saltfleet.

Your committee would recommend that the fees less the penalties and the actual cost of printing be remitted on the following bills:

Bill No. Pr10, An Act to incorporate Brock University.

Bill No. Pr15, An Act respecting the township of Saltfleet.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE REFORMATORIES ACT

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Reformatories Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree); he has had notice of the question. Have any charges been laid in the case of the death of Laurie Karkas who was killed on January 30, 1964 in a construction job in connection with the subway? If not, what is the present status of the case?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to this matter, the duty of enforcing The Construction Safety Act in these present circumstances lies primarily with the municipality under the Act; and the decision to lay charges in this matter similarly rests with the city of Toronto.

However the question asked by the hon. member is in two parts. In answer to the first part, I have been informed and am instructed that charges are expected to be laid by the city of Toronto, but as yet that has not been done.

With respect to the second part, city of Toronto officials and officials of the department investigated the circumstances surrounding the accident, and I am informed that an inquest will be held and we are awaiting the date for the inquest to be announced.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond); it has been submitted to him.

What are the plans of The Department of Health to institute a simple smear test for cancer of the cervix?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, the control of cancer in the province of Ontario has been in the hands of the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation since this body was established in 1943.

The simple smear test referred to by the hon. member, better known as the "pap's smear" is widely advocated and encouraged not only by the foundation, but also by the medical profession. There are 20 pathological laboratories in Ontario now equipped to examine and interpret these smears, and the foundation annually trains an ever-growing number of cyto technicians in the special skills required to interpret these tests. That much is already being done is evidenced by the fact, I think, that over 200,000 such tests were done in the province of Ontario last year alone and this number is steadily growing. It is a test which is frequently done in the routine examination of females, even in doctors' offices, when they are admitted to hospitals, and on other occasions.

I think the information that has of late been published relative to this test has been somewhat misleading, in that Ontario and other provinces, with the exception of one, in Canada have been shown up in rather a poor light. Statistics, on further examination, prove that Ontario has a far better record than even British Columbia, which province drew attention to this test most recently.

Taking figures from the "vital statistics" we find that in 1962 the mortality rate for cancer of the cervix in Ontario was 7.5, while in British Columbia it was 9.9. These represent the rate per 100,000 population.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to make some comments concerning the duties and functions of the standing committee on public accounts.

There has been a good deal of debate about this committee during the years and what its function should be. I am sure that it can serve a very proper role in the work of this Legislature if its function is clearly understood, and if it operates with a view to obtaining the results for which it is designed.

In the operation of the public accounts committee in the United Kingdom, one notices that the chairman is a member of the Opposition and its proceedings are held in camera. I believe also that only once in this century has a report of the committee been debated in the House of Commons at Westminster. From this one can see that a determined and a successful effort has been made to remove the operation of this committee from the area of party politics.

I mention these points in order that we may better understand what the function of this committee is.

It seems to me the function of the public accounts committee is, first, to see that the expenditure of government departments keeps within the appropriations which are made by this Legislature. The committee can satisfy itself, and thus the Legislature, that the departments of government are in fact spending in the manner in which the Legislature intended.

I think also that the committee is interested in satisfying itself that the sums of money voted by this Legislature, and which the departments of government spend, are spent efficiently and economically.

Fundamentally, it might be said the responsibility of the committee is to ensure the economic and efficient functioning of the civil service. The committee is not concerned with policy, because questions of policy are made by the government and are debated here on the floor of the Legislature. It seems to me the function of the committee is to assure itself that the expenditures that have been made are in the areas that have been voted by the House, and that the expenditures have been made with commonsense and businesslike efficiency and economy.

I do not feel that in our Legislature it is necessary that the hearings be held in camera, or that the chairman be chosen other than in the normal fashion. Both these propositions can be considered in the future, after the committee has had some experience.

I hope that this committee will serve to scrutinize for the Legislature, and for the people of Ontario, the expenditure of public funds. A great deal will depend upon the approach that the members of the committee take to these questions. I hope that the members of the committee from all parties will approach their service on the committee bearing in mind the objectives which I have stated.

The committee might very well commence with an examination of the administrative functions of the Treasury, the Treasury board, and the provincial auditor, and proceed from there to examine the accounts of the last fiscal year of various departments. In view of the fact that The Department of Education is the largest spending department of the government, it might be wise, and appropriate, that the committee commence with that department.

I am asking the committee to be called at the earliest possible moment in order that it may be organized and studies on this basis commenced.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the observations of the hon. Prime Minister in respect to the committee meet, I think, with general approval. I think it can be said with a degree of certainty that the committee in the past has not served the full function that it was capable of serving, or that it should have served, in the interests of the people of the province. Too much in the past the committee has been used as an instrument for hunting scandals and trying to reach a decision as to whether there was evidence of wrongdoing.

The point I want to leave with the hon. Prime Minister is this: I agree entirely with him in his portrayal of what this committee could do in the interest of the province and its people. But I would not want to leave the impression that—I think one function of that committee should still be, if the committee members so desired, that they should take the public accounts of the preceding year—as the custom has been—and if they are disturbed or have reason to feel that something is not well in those accounts, that they will have the right, as they have had in the past, to call witnesses and to examine minutely that particular account.

I do not want that right smothered by the broader interpretation my hon. friend has put on the workings of the accounts committee. If he can give that assurance to this side of the House at least that this particular probing aspect, if the Opposition feels there is a need to probe a particular segment of government contained in the public accounts, shall belong to committee members in the same way as it has in the past. It should not be a sole right, as it has been in the past, but rather included in a wider definition such as the hon. Prime Minister has suggested this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. leader of the Opposition that I am not attempting to put any muzzles on the committee. On the other hand I am attempting, in diplomatic language, to say that I do not propose to set up any witch-hunts either. I think this is where the common sense of the chairman and members of the committee will show itself, and I hope it will in the functioning of this committee.

I think we are all aiming at the same thing. I think this Legislature is entitled to have a body to examine public accounts in order to satisfy themselves, and through them that we may be satisfied here that these things are being done properly. This will be the function of the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Twenty-fourth order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I left off my remarks a week ago today, then on Thursday the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) referred to me in what I thought was very kindly fashion when he called attention to the physical condition—laryngitis—from which I suffered, which had arisen from a chest cold. I felt, I must say, something like Lawrence Tibbett must have felt at the Met when the programme had to stop for that evening because of the onset of laryngitis.

And I tell you, as you may well know, that although my voice may have failed in the interval, my convictions never did. Always an optimist, I did think during the ensuing days that if the chest cold developed into pneumonia it would be good business judgment to have it do so before the hospital insurance premiums go up.

Before pursuing the subject with which I was dealing a week ago today, I want to take up a matter with you, Your Honour, that affects me very deeply. I may be one of a minority but if I am I hold to my views with no less sense of tenacity, having in mind the responsibilities of the civil service in this province, I tell you frankly that I was somewhat startled, amazed and somewhat hurt from a constitutional point of view by the conduct of a civil servant on Friday last.

At the close of the session the hon. Prime Minister got up and he said: "I am tabling a letter which I have sent to the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada."

Certainly thereafter I rose in my place, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) being then absent, and I invited the hon. Prime Minister, I thought quite respectfully and courteously, Mr. Speaker, to tell us what the contents of the letter were, since he did inform us that they pertained to the Canada pension plan. He declined to do so for reasons which are locked within his own breast and I can quite appreciate his reasons—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I said I would furnish him with a copy. The alternative I had was to read the letter here in the House. It is tabled so there was no attempt on my part to keep the letter from the hon. member or to hide its contents.

Mr. Sopha: I am not suggesting there was. The hon. Prime Minister, I hasten to add, kindly and promptly furnished us with a copy of the letter. That is not the point I am making. He declined the opportunity to say anything about it on the floor of the House and that is the point I put to the hon. members and to you, sir. He tabled the letter and he left it at that.

Subsequently I saw him in the hallway outside. He was being followed by certain members of the press gallery, who no doubt were addressing some questions to him about the contents of the letter. In the meantime, while the hon. Prime Minister was taking the attitude with the press that this is the position he has taken and the Ontario government has taken in relation to the federal government, a senior public servant of this province somewhere else in the building—I hope surrounded by television cameras, all of the experts of the press and all of the fanfare of the modern press conference — is indulging himself in a most crass way, in the most base fashion, in the maelstrom of politics. Hearken to what he said. It is reported in one of the leading Metropolitan Toronto newspapers:

Mr. Coward, chairman of the pension committee of Ontario, told a press briefing that he thought the Canada pension plan was something the federal Liberals got stuck with on their election platform. Mr. Coward said it was in the Liberal platform in the last two elections when they were in the wilderness.

When they were in the wilderness, that is Mr. Coward's summation of where the Liberal Party was during the Diefenbaker years.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Let me say this to those hon. gentlemen over there. They got out of the wilderness a lot faster than Moses did, and also a lot faster than the gentleman the hon. Prime Minister recently locked in fraternal embrace.

Mr. Coward said he did not think the pension plan promise either helped or hindered the Liberals' return to power but because it appeared an easy promise to implement—it required no new taxes—the Liberals decided to go ahead with it.

But [he said] the work of implementation was handed by Mr. Pearson to persons less diplomatic than he is.

Now I ask you rhetorically, does this open up a new method of doing business between the two levels of government? Does the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario, in a dignified and courteous way, write a letter to the Prime Minister of Canada and say, "I do not agree with your pension plan for reasons that I set out in this letter" while in the meantime one of his senior advisors is holding a press conference in which he indulges himself in the basest of arguments with the political party which has the responsibility right now of ruling this country?

Is that the new method of co-operation between governments? The hon. Prime Minister has a happy advantage over me in that he has published his speech for this afternoon and has already released it to the press. Since it is in the early editions of the Metropolitan newspapers, may I—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: You are quite wrong, quite wrong.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I read it in editions of the Metropolitan newspapers.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: This means that you know what I am going to say, does it?

Mr. Sopha: In the first edition of the Toronto Daily Star appears what purports to be what the hon. Prime Minister is going to say. But if he is going to speak on the subject of pensions, this afternoon, then I invite him to tell us the answers to such questions as this: Did he know that the public servant was going to hold that press conference? Did he approve of what the public servant said? Did he agree with it? Or, subsequently, did he go to the civil servant and say: "Look, Mr. Coward, from now on when there are matters of policy between the government of Ontario and the federal government, you leave it to the politicians"?

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): "I will do the talking."

Mr. Sopha: "I will do the talking," says the hon. leader of the Opposition. And if in fact he did the latter, then he would put back on the rails, put back in the proper framework, the way that two senior governments do their business. I think the responsibility of the hon. Prime Minister of the province is to do nothing less than that.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sopha: On the subject of pensions—and I would like leave, sir, to make a few comments—we, in the last election, for what it was worth to our cause of victory, took the side of the federal Liberal Party and we are not ashamed of that. We said to the people of this province that we felt that the plan advocated by the federal government alleviated social dislocation, or a social matter that of necessity marked the next major social advance in this country. I do not think we have departed from this position. Nothing the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario has ever said that I have ever read, or heard him say, has convinced me that the funded basis of the pension upon which he seems to rely is in any way superior to the methods that the federal government proposes to finance the Canada pension plan.

Secondly, I have not read anywhere, sir—and I read the correspondence that passed between the two governments—I have not seen anywhere where the federal government has said to the government of Ontario that we intend to interfere in any way, or destroy or harm the existing plans that are now operating within the province. Yet the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario, in his reply, seems to be obsessed with this idea that the federal government, which is made up of a political party that itself must continually invite the support of the people, is going to be so unpolitical and so unholy as to destroy the savings, the funds and the pension plans of the people who are already participating in existing pension plans. To do so would be the height of folly, but I say this to you, Mr. Speaker, and I take the responsibility for saying it, and I want the hon. Prime Minister to hear carefully what I say, that I think there is abundant evidence in the matter of pensions and in the background of the letters the hon. Prime Minister writes to the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada, that the hon. Prime Minister of this province is, in more ways than one, a prisoner of the insurance company.

Some hon. members: Shame.

Mr. Sopha: I happen to know, and my lips would never be forced to say who told me, but I happen to know that the federal officials were very upset and very—miffed is the word—they were very miffed that the hon. Prime Minister of this province came to a conference on pensions and he brought with him as one of his chief advisers, part of the official delegation of the province of Ontario, an actuary from one of the leading life insurance companies.

So it becomes apparent in whatever he says or does about pensions, whatever he wants to omit as being the product of his reflection on it, that he has at hand at all times the expert advice and guidance of those who have vested interests in the pension field in this province. I am one of those who believes that in the recent election campaign, the hon. Prime Minister of the province and the party that he represents—the party that was swept to power and apparently spent so much money, so obviously spent so much money that not a little of it, sir, not a little of it came from the coffers of the insurance companies—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Things have changed, but not much.

Mr. Sopha: —not a little of it—

An hon. member: Speak the facts for a change.

Mr. Sopha: We did not get the money from the insurance companies and I might as well turn to the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) so that I will not have to dispose of him later. I have here a clipping from a newspaper of very recent origin in which Murray Cotterell, public relations director for the United Steelworkers of America, said: "Donald C. MacDonald has not come up with a single new idea in the last five years."

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, 150 people were my witnesses at the meeting. I do not know how it was reported by the paper in question, but the reference was not to me. I leave it right there.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): It should have been.

Mr. Sopha: Sir, maybe there is an opportunity for a little business here, because I am a lawyer and those remarks might be defamatory. Finally, so that I leave this subject in the right light, the matter of pensions, sir, if they are to succeed in this country and because of our constitutional system, because of the problems that are involved in the interpretation of the judicial decisions of The British North America Act, can only be effective if there is co-operation between the two levels of government. We will not have them if there is not.

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): What about Quebec?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): What about Quebec Liberals?

Mr. Sopha: They will take the responsibility for what they do, I must be responsible for you people.

An hon. member: A heavy burden.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, it is a heavy burden too, Mr. Speaker, it is a heavy burden. But if we are to have pensions for all people in Canada, or at least all people who want to go into the plan, it is incumbent upon the hon. Prime Minister of this province to exercise the greatest restraint and to evince in his own person and by word and deed, the attitude of co-operation with the federal government in order to bring them about and that, sir, is where I leave it.

Sir, I was pursuing this matter of the redistribution of legislative powers between the two levels of government and I was saying that the time has come in 1964 when we have to rewrite Confederation. Against this background, sir, as some hon. members may remember, I said that the constitution today, The British North America Act, is out of joint with the times. Whereas it might have been a suitable document in 1867, it is no longer suitable nor does it meet our needs as we approach 1967, our centennial year.

I advocated, sir, and I did not do it facetiously or wishfully or imaginatively, that the time has come when the premiers of all ten provinces and the federal government should sit down around the common table, and I believe they are going to do that later this year, to discuss a method whereby we can redistribute the legislative powers within The British North America Act so that the citizens of this country can, in short, be better governed.

In that regard, I was going to suggest there are three areas that the provinces might well give up to the federal government. The first of these is regulation of insurance companies. The federal government, sir, already has in section 91, the right to regulate money and banking, so that it seems to me without want of further argument that the insurance industry, which has grown to such gigantic proportions in this the seventh decade of the twentieth century that it is so akin to banking, the creation of credit, that it seems both reasonable and in line with commonsense that the federal government ought to have the power to regulate the insurance industry.

I do not want anyone to get panicky, because I am not suggesting that the federal government be permitted, or advocate that the federal government do anything drastic about the large amount of savings that Canadians presently have invested in their insurance policies. However, very moderately I think, and very carefully, I do suggest this: The amount of savings, that vast amount of savings which the insurance companies accumulate, have a very wide and powerful effect upon the economy; and the economy is influenced by their investment policies.

I am not suggesting that insurance companies should put all of their money into risky ventures. Far from it. But I do well recall the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) standing in this House some years ago and saying that Canadians preferred to invest in debt securities rather than equity securities. Canadians, as a nation of investors, were not interested in ownership. They were interested in the bonds and the debentures which various companies issue. He was absolutely correct when he said this.

The same is true of the insurance industry, sir. The amount of funds I could demonstrate by graphs and statistics, if I took the time to do it, that they invest in equity securities, securities that have some element of risk, but securities which stimulate the development of the country, is very small indeed. We cannot correct that situation. I say we cannot correct it as long as insurance and trust companies, and indeed the mutual funds—the open-end companies as they call them—are under 11 different jurisdictions. Just as the federal government has control over money and banking, I believe it should have control over insurance companies and trust companies and the mutual funds; in other words, all those large institutions which have the ability and the facility to create large amounts of credit.

The second field I think the provinces could well get out of, sir, is the field of labour relations; that is to say, the organization and regulation of relations between labour and management. I am not advocating that the provincial Department of Labour, sir, be abolished, although I must say that if the hon. Minister (Mr. Rowntree) continues to eat dill pickles and pastrami sandwiches at committee meetings of this House, he may have to go.

To illustrate what I say, sir, a good many industries are carried on on a nation-wide basis nowadays. They have various branch plants and organizations in various provinces. It seems, therefore, to me, reasonable that if the federal government had the obligation to regulate the relations between labour and management, it would effect a greater facility of understanding between the two.

Is it not a strange thing to you, sir—it is indeed to me—that if a man works for International Nickel Company in Sudbury, then the relations between his union and the company are regulated by the Minister of Labour here and his assistants and associates. But if he journeys a hundred miles away and works in one of the mines at Elliott Lake, then his relations between his union, the same union, and the company, are regulated by the federal government in that case—the reason being, of course, that the uranium industry is under the jurisdiction of the federal government, and it is the jurisdiction over the industry that tells the tale and determines which level of government regulates the relations.

The purpose of state intervention, sir, in labour relations, is to relieve tension, to iron out dislocations between the working man and his employer. There is a need for uniformity here, and uniformity can only be provided if one jurisdiction has the responsibility of regulating the relations for the whole of the country, and not 11 of them as we have now.

With the multiplicity of jurisdictions, my next argument goes, there is a danger of harsh and restrictive laws in regard to labour. As a Liberal I must, and I blush when I do it, take some responsibility, I suppose, in an ancillary and party sense, for what went on in Newfoundland a number of years ago. I will not detail that, but all hon. members know about certain harsh restrictive laws. I cannot accept with equanimity what the British Columbia government does in respect to contributions to a political party, but that is because I do not want to be a hypocrite. The British Columbia government passed a statute and said it is illegal for trade unions to make contributions to political parties.

I say, sir, with 11 jurisdictions in the labour field, the danger of that harsh, oppressive and restrictive type of legislation increases.

Finally, Canada as you know, sir, is a member of the International Labour Organization. So far as I can see, any decisions made by that organization to which Canada wants to subscribe can only be implemented by the federal government in respect of the industries over which the federal government has legislative jurisdiction. Presumably the ten provinces could also do it, but it would have to be by adoption—which to me is another argument for labour relations being in the hands of the federal government.

Another field I think the federal government might well have responsibility for, sir, is the field of marketing. I know the officials of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture are in the wings here and round and about and I want to be very careful what I say. I am not advocating the abolition of all marketing boards, but I think that there is a multiplicity of marketing boards in this country and there is something of a chaos. To me it seems to be a matter of foolishness—that is not too strong a word—a matter of foolishness that if an inspector comes along and picks up an apple, and the apple has a worm in it, he can say, "Now, is that apple going to be consumed within the province?" If so, the provincial inspector has jurisdiction over the apple and the worm. But if the apple is going to be consumed outside the province then he tosses it to his federal counterpart and says, "It's your apple and your worm".

There is a marked duplication of inspection and grading in the agricultural industry; that is one thing. Another thing is, sir, that we are in a country which lives on the sale of its surpluses. Notwithstanding what Robert Thompson might say or think, we Canadians cannot possibly eat all the things we produce in this country; we have to sell our produce abroad.

It does seem to me that instead of my friend, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall), rushing around Europe—although he does not rush around as much as his predecessor (Mr. Macaulay) did, he is fairly static—but instead of him or his predecessor rushing around Europe trying to sell tomato juice, or something, that it is a matter that more properly ought to be left to the federal government.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Not at all. Not at all. And I am assured in that conviction all the more when I see how recently in the events of human history that federal government has been able to empty the bins in the west—which way is best?—been able to empty the bins in the west and fill the pockets of the western wheat farmers.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: "Dief" showed them how to do it.

Mr. Sopha: I tell the hon. Minister of Health I am not suggesting otherwise. I do not think that everything Diefenbaker did was bad, just most of it.

I mentioned three areas that I think the provinces might well get out of. I want to say this, I want to make it very clear, that I believe if we rewrite Confederation in these next ten years that we ought to do it from the point of view that the federal government will be responsible for those matters of broad policy that affect us as a nation, matters that affect us as Canadians. The provincial governments ought to be responsible for those matters that affect us intimately as citizens, that is to say, our training, our education, the way we work, how we work, how we live, how we are housed, our health, and so on.

That is the sphere of the provincial government in my view. And the provincial government ought to get out of those matters that interfere with the development of Canada as a nation.

I want to say as I stand here on this 18th day of February in the year of Our Lord Jesus Christ 1964, I want to say to you that I feel, and I speak from the conviction, that I have not been, I am not and I never will be a citizen of Ontario, I am a citizen of Canada. I am resident and domiciled in Ontario. I do not believe that one province of this country can be great at the expense of the poverty or the misfortunes of other provinces. We must go forward together and weld this nation. Nor do I believe for one minute the remarks of the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. L. M. Hodgson), or the theme of his speech, that the nation's spirit in this country is in any way on the wane. I do not believe that. It is on the increase. We have arrived at a crisis and a new beginning point of our country as we approach a significant date, our 100th birthday. The time has come for us to take stock and see what we have done and what we have in this country and how we can prepare this country to meet the coming century. That is the way I look at it, sir, and that is the background from which I speak.

Sir, a week or so ago, a very significant meeting of the legal profession took place—not all meetings of the legal profession are significant, I assure you, I have been to some of them—but it had a significant one. At that meeting a professor of law at the University of Toronto raised some questions about bureaucracy—a favourite word with the hon. Prime Minister—in the control of civil servants, the powers limiting them, and seeing that they did not get out of line and do anything foolish or oppressive against the citizenry. Professor McWhinney said this:

Ontario lags behind even Russia in protecting private citizens in their dealings with the government. A panelist at the midwinter meeting of the Ontario branch of the Canadian Bar Association laid the blame on successive Attorneys General. These men, he said, have retained law machinery and institutions developed for the horse-and-buggy age. But Ontario is a complex, industrial civilization with a rapidly proliferating baffling bureaucratic apparatus and the citizen gets lost. He called for an Ontario statute that would clearly set out that public officials from Cabinet Ministers to civil servants to police could be held personally liable in money damages for an abuse of power. Such a move, he said, could do much to control the mounting wave of administrative arrogance and arbitrariness.

Pretty serious charges, made by that noted professor of law. It strikes home with a rather personal note to me, and the hon. leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker. On April 4, 1960, a select committee was appointed by the then Prime Minister of the province to inquire into the organization of government in Ontario. That committee had hearings during the year 1960. Before the next session of the Legislature, I believe, it put in an interim report. That was the last heard from the committee, that interim report. It was never heard from again, though the committee was reappointed on March 23, 1961.

Of course, I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, who was chairman of that committee during the year 1961—the present hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) was chairman. And during the year 1961, he was on the hustings, of course, trying to secure a certain political office. He was never available during those trying times in his life to convene meetings of that committee. The committee was reappointed on April 18, 1962, and it never met again. It disappeared. Some day, Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Opposition and I shall go looking for the secretariat to see where it has disappeared. But, sir, I say this to you, that that committee, if it had pursued its investigation to the ultimate conclusion, could have done much to alleviate the sort of problem that Professor McWhinney refers to.

One of the major problems from a point of view of justice—and that is the only one I am going to deal with, the problem we took up at the meetings of that committee—is the problem of appeal from the decisions of administrative tribunals. A couple of years ago, the present hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) recognized the problem with the securities commission and he introduced legislation in the House to separate the functions of executive and administrative action from those of judicial action. Supposedly that is the way the securities commission is organized. But if that is good for the securities commission, I ask you, sir, if it is not equally good for the workmen's compensation board?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): No.

Mr. Sopha: Is it not equally good for the liquor licensing board?

An hon. member: It is, at that.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, indeed it is and yet these boards—the workmen's compensation board, the liquor licensing board—they exercise their administrative functions, their executive functions, and they sit in appeal, they review if the person comes before them, the very act which they themselves initiated. In short, the hon. leader of the Opposition and I heard a very able man from England on this score—a man from Cambridge, I believe he was. What is needed in this province is some sort of an administrative appeal tribunal such as they have in the United Kingdom. In the United Kingdom they have a tribunal that sits over all tribunals, because we know, Mr. Speaker, that we do not want many of these things that are handled by administrative boards to get into the courts. We do not feel that the courts are any more qualified to sit and judge than the civil servants or the members of the commission themselves—and in many ways they are less qualified.

However, the principle is there, that a person should not be a judge in his own cause. He should not do the act and then judge the righteousness of what he has done. What we need is the early development of some sort of supreme administrative tribunal so that the citizen may go to that tribunal and say: Here is what the workmen's compensation board has done to me; here my licence has been suspended by the liquor licensing board and I appeal to you for redress against the wrong that has been done me.

Sir, when I make my first million, I am going to buy a newspaper, and I am going to buy the newspaper for the purpose of quoting myself accurately.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That will be quite an achievement.

Mr. Sopha: Yes. The publisher of the newspaper will sit there at his peril, and the moment he misquotes me he will be gone and will be reading The Unemployment Insurance Act. In anything I said a week ago this day, I never mentioned the subject of "Buy Quebec".

Incidentally, I return to this, not for the purpose of correcting this—I bear what the press says about me; that is what a politician must do—but I wanted to make it clear that when I talked about our relations with Quebec, I was not talking about "Buy Quebec" at all. I never mentioned it. I was talking about Quebec doing the very thing that we were invited, the following day in this Legislature, to do; because they used an economic device to attract an industry, the Speech from the Throne, on page 4, condemns the province of Quebec. Yet, the following day, we were asked to do something for Hershey Chocolates to give them a fixed assessment to locate in this province, an economic device of an order with which we did not agree, which the hon. Prime Minister, in the most formal document it is possible to have in this Legislature which he puts into the lips of the Lieutenant-Governor, condemns the government of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: If the hon. member is so anxious to be properly quoted, just show me in that document he is reading where the word "Quebec" is.

Mr. Sopha: Oh no, no! But it means Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: These matters go on right across Canada. Perhaps the hon. member does not know this, but I can inform him they go on right across Canada.

Mr. Sopha: It means Quebec.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, he is very anxious to be accurately quoted. I would ask him to quote as accurately as he would like to be quoted.

Mr. Sopha: Among other provinces it means Quebec, but it means Quebec more than it means other provinces.

In the other thing about the article to which I referred, with which I disagree and I hasten to correct the impression given, are the words that it used when it says: "... needles Robarts."

I did no such thing. I did no such thing, and my intentions were anything but that of needling the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Letherby: Did the hon. member needle the hon. Prime Minister?

Mr. Sopha: Not at all. Not at all. I do not want to needle. I want to encourage him and I want to hold out to him the hand of friendship.

A constituent comes to me—a municipal councillor—and he says, "Sopha, I have always voted for you. I have always voted for you." But he, being a French-Canadian, said, "I have read this speech, and here it is." A speech made by "l'Honorable Jean Robarts, Premier Ministre d'Ontario," and I quote: "Château Frontenac, Quebec, 4 juin, 1963."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Well, at least I tried. And on the front is quoted a portion of that speech, under the heading: "Le Main dans le Main." (Hand in hand).

In that portion, they quote that the hon. Prime Minister of this province went down into the province of Quebec and said to his listeners there, in all of—how many?—seven pages—his message was this. He said:

Let French-Canadian and English-Canadian, let us go forward together and let us settle our differences and our grievances and the things that bother us by sitting around a common council table.

So why would I come here, when we have the prospect of a great successive leader to the present one of the Tory Party, and seek to needle him? Not at all.

French Canada has not seen the leader of the Tory Party since Borden, happily, in whom it trusted. It has not trusted one since Sir Robert Borden, before World War II. And now, if the hon. leader of this government wants to replace the present leader of the Tory Party by addressing words like that to Quebec, then I repeat what I said before: I do not needle him; I hold out to him my hand of friendship and encouragement.

Our amendment; what does our amendment seek to say—before anybody else answers that I will answer it myself.

Mr. Letherby: The hon. member is talking to himself?

Mr. Sopha: Yes. Our amendment seeks to say the same thing that Don O'Hearn—Don O'Hearn has been around here in the press gallery a long time—he has seen a lot of people come and go here—perhaps he has adopted a prescient outlook over the proceedings—but in an article of January 30, 1964, Mr. O'Hearn says—his column is entitled:

A QUICK LOOK AT QUEEN'S PARK

What's wrong here?

These days you find yourself asking this, and then wondering why.

There is a government which seems quite able. It is a new government, and a young one. It is doing a lot of things. It had a recital of projects in the Throne Speech which was impressive.

And yet you aren't easy about it. You can't be impressed. And subconsciously you feel there is something missing.

What is it?

It could be that perhaps the government is too placid.

That while it is giving "good" government, it is not the good government that the times require.

That perhaps its pace is too easy, that it is stressing stability when the great demand of the times is for vigour.

What is missing could be a sense of urgency.

says Mr. O'Hearn.

Mr. Letherby: Well, is he any authority?

Mr. Sopha: Yes, he is. He is. Because he predated even an antediluvian person like the hon. member.

Our amendment, sir, seeks to sum up that sense of urgency—urgency, sir, not panic. But we believe, we in the Liberal Party, as well as our hon. friends to the left here—with whom we associate ourselves in their amendment as they do in ours—that these are times of urgency that require imaginative action, require boldness, require boldness in times, sir. When it comes to my mind, when I say that these are times that require boldness, I conjure up problems that confront us and I see that not only are our natural resources being swept away from us and shipped out of the country to create jobs elsewhere but I know, sir, too, that the best brains we produce are migrating to other lands.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Health puts his head in the sand, which is the most common posture for him, and will not admit that we have a nursing shortage in this province because nurses go to nurse the sick in the United States, and Bermuda, and the Bahamas, and everywhere else, and penalize our sick people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Not at all, not at all. We call attention in our amendment to the problems of automation, to the need for the educational development of the youth of our province, to the need for a code of laws designed to recognize and advance the rights and interests of the working man, a programme of protection for the consumer, and so on. Automation is the note I am going to end on, automation.

I listened to the young hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) make his maiden speech on the Throne Speech on automation, a significant contribution to the debates of this House.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sopha: I wish that I could be as well researched when I speak as the hon. member is, and the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) is when he speaks.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: Well, the hon. member is a full-time politician, and I am a practising lawyer.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I listened to the young hon. member.

It would be risky for the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) to get in my hands if he faced an indictable offence.

Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. Minister of Mines is so funny that he ought to join the Beatles, if we can take up a subscription to get him the piece of equipment he needs.

An hon. member: He needs a wig, anyway.

Mr. Sopha: Seriously, sir, I listened to the hon. member for Scarborough West make that speech on automation and I watched the Treasury bench over there, and for all the interest they paid to that significant speech from one end to the other, with possibly one exception, the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), he might as well have been talking about the sex life of the tsetse fly. He might as well, he might as well. And yet one of the most pressing problems of this decade is what we are going to do about automation.

So, sir, with our friends to the left and ourselves we, merely in our amendment, say this: These are trying times; these are times that are full of problems, and the problems are not going to get less; they are going to increase. It requires from this government bold and imaginative action to meet the problems which face our people, and for that reason—

Mr. Letherby: Try it with a vote.

Mr. Sopha: Our amendment, and the sub-amendment of our hon. friends ought to demand support from every corner of the House.

Mr. Letherby: It will not.

Hon. J. P. Roberts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at long last I have my opportunity to join in this debate, delayed by many events, may I say, over which I have no control.

I would like very much to offer my congratulations to you not so much upon your appointment, because I moved your appointment and of course I have complete confidence in you, but upon the method in which you have been conducting the affairs of the House in these few weeks of what will be, I hope, a long and pleasant four years.

I would say this: Since we last met here we have refurbished the Chamber and I think we should all pay tribute to The Department of Public Works for what they did. Personally I think the change is for the good. I think it is a really beautiful Chamber, and I like to see it in its present condition. It is a place befitting the dignity of the arguments and debates which take place here.

I would say, sir, with particular regard to the new hon. members, they may wonder about the repartee—if it may be dignified with that description—which takes place here. I notice their reluctance to interfere. You know I too, once practised law—I do not speak about it as frequently as others in this House—but I recall—and perhaps the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) has had the same experience—when one is on a long trial that lasts for two or three days, it is sometimes interesting to watch the head of steam build up in the men who are engaged in the contest; because every law suit is a contest, some place or other it always has to blow. And anyone who tries to keep the lid on for ever is encouraging an explosion; but perhaps, that energy could be dissipated somewhat more simply.

I notice you, sir, keep a good hand on the control button; you let the steam go and then you know when to turn it off and bring the repartee to a halt. But it is very necessary and, in its way, it adds at least to the colour and enjoyment of the debates here. I am impressed with the way in which you do and have achieved a high degree of impartiality, particularly after recently winning a very spirited campaign in your own riding. In those days, of course, you were anything but impartial.

So if you can continue to refurbish the procedure in this Chamber in the same fashion as we have refurbished the physical aspects of it, I will be more than satisfied, and I am very pleased with what has been happening here to date.

I would like to also congratulate the new hon. members in the House and join with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) in this, and others who have congratulated the new hon. members on all sides, on the speeches that they have made here. I hope that they are beginning to get the feel of this forum.

Personally, I consider one to be very fortunate to have an opportunity to occupy a seat in this Chamber and to take part in these debates, and to take part in the public life of our province. It is highly rewarding; never rewarding financially—if you are looking for financial reward this is the wrong place to come—but in many other aspects it is a very rewarding life indeed. A bit trying occasionally, perhaps, but I wish for all the new hon. members the full fruits and enjoyment that come from service to the people of their constituencies, and particularly in the broader sense to all the people of the province. Believe me this is really the only place in which you can render that service, and in which you can build up the enjoyment which I mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, I was quite interested in the comments from the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) considering the new hon. members on the government side. I can only say this: "What did he say?" May I give to these hon. members some words of advice, advice from another one of the new boys in the House, "Keep your idealism. Don't let the establishment crush you. Do not lose the enthusiasm which you have displayed."

So I can only say to the hon. members through you, sir: We are a growing and expanding party, the Progressive-Conservative Party of Ontario, and I would say that no one, in our view, has a corner on brains, ideas or indeed, on virtue.

Sometimes it is made to appear by certain people in this House that they and they alone, and the people associated with them, are the only people who have any ideas or who have any virtue. No man has a corner on these things and we will use these few brains that we have here; our party will use them. We will use the ideals, we will use them as we have in the past, because therein lies the vitality of the Progressive-Conservative Party and therein lies the secret of 20 years in power. So if I do not—

Some hon. members: Twenty years! Twenty years!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, of course, over a period of time we have had to bring in new men. I am the fourth Prime Minister in this period, and my period at the helm is something over two years old. But the real secret and the real vitality of the Progressive-Conservative Party rests with these young men who are in this House and who are sitting here with new ideas. Each idea that has been expressed in this House has already been examined by this government and will be translated into action; will be translated into legislation. Despite the seeming lack of a sense of urgency, we are working.

Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps in view of some of the remarks which were thrown across this floor last spring and the events since, that I, as the final speaker in this debate, might make the last comments which I hope will be made about the events of September 25. I think everyone has had just about everything to say about them if they so desired. However, as I say, I am the last speaker and perhaps you will bear with me if I speak about those events, because as I look around here today, I must say to myself, we did not do too badly. We have all this side of the House and half the other side so perhaps it will be considered pardonable pride if I say that I do not think we did too badly.

I am delighted to see my hon. friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver) back across the way. If I am not mistaken this is the third time he has been called upon to bring the Liberal ship into drydock for some much needed repairs. Quite frankly, as far as I am concerned, I have never been able to understand why they did not leave him there in the first place. Perhaps this would not have been such a successful move so far as we are concerned. However, I suppose in fact I can say it is none of my business.

I do not know really what goes on in the inner councils of the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker. They do not consult me, even though they ask me questions such as I was asked yesterday, but I must say that I had a very distinct impression, during that campaign in August and September, that the hon. leader of the Opposition, and the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) and very possibly my friend the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) had very, very little to do with that campaign.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): How did the hon. Prime Minister ever get that idea?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I doubt very much if they had anything to do with it, with the rather disastrous plans which brought such inevitably disastrous consequences on September 25. I remember being in the riding of the hon. member for Bruce and the only name I ever saw in that riding was Whicher. I did not see another name on any piece of campaign literature, on any sign. It was just Whicher all the way.

Well, it was successful, very successful, and I congratulate my hon. friend. The House would not be the same without him. One always tries for all the seats. One knows, of course, one cannot achieve them and it is a pleasure to welcome some hon. members back.

Then I heard my hon. friend from Downsview (Mr. Singer). He was on television a week or so ago and his comment and his contribution to the results of September 25 what that the Liberal Party failed because it did not succeed in getting its programme across to the people.

Frankly, it was my opinion that they got their programme across much too well. That was the problem. I think the people understood their programme very well indeed.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Does the hon. Prime Minister feel qualified to advise other political parties?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I do indeed. The plain fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, to analyze the situation: I would say that in that campaign the good hard commonsense and the intelligence of the people of Ontario was very highly underestimated by my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): The hon. Prime Minister means the 51 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I will get to that. I will get to the statistics, these wonderful statistics that we can use.

Mr. Sopha: How well did the Conservatives do in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: As a matter of fact, as I said during the campaign, and I think the election results proved it, the Liberal Party proved itself to be out of touch with life, out of tune with reality, and completely out of step with progress, and there was the result.

An hon. member: How about—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, of course, as I say, one cannot win them all, and it would be very improper for any party to do so.

Mr. Sopha: The Toronto Star wanted the Conservatives to win them all.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think, in looking back over the campaign, it was a very dolorous tale the Liberals told: Nothing had happened in 20 years. It was obvious that they were unable to convince the people of Ontario that literally nothing had happened in this province for 20 years, since the Liberals had last held the reins of office.

I would say this: the people of Ontario were well aware of what had been done in this province, Mr. Speaker, over these past years. They were aware that what had been done reached into every community and touched the life of every family, had touched the life of every person and every child in this province, and they were also well aware that Ontario was one of the best places in the world in which to live, and they were also very well aware who had provided the government during the years these things were created.

Mr. Sopha: When is the hon. Prime Minister going to Ottawa?

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): The hon. member had his chance. He was speaking for over three hours. Let him give us a little rest.

Mr. Sopha: I just asked when he was going to Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, it was brought up again today, some muttering about statistics, and I have been rather amused by the efforts of these people to take the statistics of this election and try somewhere to get a little joy out of them. It is wonderful what one can do with statistics if one just sets one's mind to it. The hon. member for Sudbury, Mr. Speaker, said I am still here and conscious of the fact that 31 of us represent 52 per cent of the people of Ontario. The hon. member for Brant had some comments and, of course, the hon. member for Woodbine.

Well, I took the trouble to examine some of these figures myself and I find out that, in this last election, the popular vote increased something over three per cent. That is, in 1959 some 58.89 of those eligible to cast a vote, voted; and in 1963 that percentage was 62.11. This indicates at least some additional interest on the part of the electors of the province.

Let us take a look at who voted against the Liberal Party. This is to simply carry out the analysis the hon. member for Sudbury used. I find that in this past election 84.2 per cent of the people in this province repudiated his party completely. I should say that the New Democratic Party was repudiated by 84.2 per cent of the people of the province. That is the sum of those who voted for someone other than they.

Mr. Bryden: Well, that is quite a bit different.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: My hon. friends opposite were repudiated by 63.9 per cent of the people of the province, and when we come to the percentage of the popular vote—

An hon. member: How many were the Conservatives repudiated by?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, the Liberals have already said this, why should I repeat it?

But, Mr. Speaker, when I analyze the percentage of the popular vote and make a comparison with the last election in 1959, I find that in 1959 the party which I have the honour to head received 46.2 per cent of the popular vote; this time we received 48.6 per cent. So we increased our percentage of the popular vote with a larger percentage of those eligible to vote going to the polls.

Mr. Oliver: What is the hon. Prime Minister trying to prove?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: What happened to my hon. friends opposite? Well, their popular vote went down. They lost ground between 1959 and 1963. And I might also say about our hon. friends in the New Democratic Party, that their share of the popular vote decreased.

Frankly I would say, that I do not pay much attention to this speculation in the field of statistics. One can, by interpretation, draw pretty much what conclusions one likes, but if one conclusion is drawn, I think it is only fair to show what the statistics really show, and can be proven to show, from another point of view.

But I would say, on this side of the House, we asked for a clear mandate to continue the good government we have been giving the province of Ontario. We asked for the right to continue our efforts to keep Ontario prosperous, progressive and to fulfil our part in confederation. That is precisely what we got from the people of Ontario.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are various matters to which I want to make some reference. Perhaps I should make some comment or observation on the—is it a flirtation that is going on between the two groups sitting opposite? I do not know whether it could be called that.

I watched in this House in the last session, and I never saw a group try so hard to edge away, as the New Democratic Party did. Up that aisle right there, they all practically had a list to port as they sat trying to lean away from our hon. friends. But then these people were hot in pursuit. I think one of the real exercises that the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) had during the election was to draw this line. He kept drawing it nice and black, but my hon. friends kept smudging it as they leaned over, like this.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Did you see how the mayor of Timmins smudged it? He went to work with the Tories.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not recall the instance. In any event, the interesting thing is that after it is all over we return and I find my hon. friends adopting your platform holus-bolus. They adopted the biggest piece you put forward, anyway. They just accepted it, everything but the financing.

I have never yet been able to get the hon. member for Bruce, the financial critic of the Liberal Party, to really agree how he would finance the programme that he accepts. He seems to think that is going to be way off there someplace. I did not hear any mention of the extra two per cent on the corporation tax when our friends to the south, as we were told, were reducing corporation tax. There was no mention made of how he would propose to do this.

And then, of course, the hon. member for Sudbury said something about the hon. member for York South having to go to Baffin Land and referred to him as a bridegroom. That sounded to me like a rather frigid romance. But for those of us who watch this with just an air of interest, nothing more, we are just interested in our neighbours but we are not consulted. We do not know where they are meeting. We do not know what groups are meeting with whom. We are not told. Frankly, we are not particularly concerned. But I must say that just to sit here and watch it go on is quite interesting.

Perhaps I should speak about that very topical subject, pensions. I am going to do a certain amount of reading here, for which I apologize, Mr. Speaker, but I want some of these remarks to be accurate.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I would think the hon. Prime Minister would want them all to be accurate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, some of this I will read, Mr. Speaker, some of it I will not, because undoubtedly something will occur to me as I go along that I have not got in the "four-square" of these pages.

As I said in my letter of last week to the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada, the whole question of pensions has been the subject of discussion at three federal-provincial conferences held in July, September and November of last year. And, of course, it received a good airing when it was interjected into the provincial election campaign last fall.

I might say that I have taken the position from the beginning that this plan was too important to the people of Ontario, and too important to the people of Canada, to be dealt with in any partisan political fashion. My efforts last fall during the election campaign when this issue was interjected, all my efforts were designed to remove it from the field of party politics. I should like to make it very clear that this is still my intention. I have one interest and one interest only and that is to devise the best possible scheme for the people of Ontario, and thereby for the people of Canada.

At the present moment I do not feel that the scheme, as presented, is the best that can be devised for our people in this province.

Mr. Bryden: It is a lot better than the proposal of the hon. Prime Minister, though.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am offering no alternative. I am commenting upon a plan submitted by a senior level of government. It has a plan that would be in effect in this province for the rest of all our natural lives, the lives of our children and the lives of our grandchildren. I am offering no alternative to it. I am commenting upon a plan presented by the federal government. I think it is fair comment.

At the present moment I do not feel that the scheme, as presented, is the best that can be devised for our people in this province. It should be a plan to build on, rather than destroy what we now have. It should be a plan that will fill out our welfare programme, and not make it more difficult to deal fairly with other needy groups. It should be a plan that will stand the test of time, and not lead to trouble in the future and require the eternal tinkering which in many instances in the past has led to the destruction of what had been, in concept, a very good plan. I am referring to the unemployment insurance plan.

There have been many changes in this situation since last summer. I would say that the most important change has been the decision by the province of Quebec not to participate in the scheme. While I regret this action, as I would prefer to see a national plan with all the people in our country involved, nonetheless I recognize the right of the province of Quebec to take this action. This does, of course, place an increased responsibility upon this province because the federal government has made it clear that it feels that the participation of Ontario is necessary if there is to be a national plan.

This position in which the government of Ontario finds itself has been fully exploited politically by those who choose to lead our people to believe that we, as a government, are planning to block the federal scheme. I can only reiterate again and again, as I have in the past, that this is simply not so. I have no intention of blocking the national scheme and I said so on many occasions. It does occur to me, Mr. Speaker, that there are certain groups of people who, for political purposes, do not wish to hear, understand or to believe these statements.

I must say that I do not consider I would have discharged my duty to the people of Ontario if I were to accept without comment a scheme which I regard to be faulty in some respects. I do consider it my duty to make such comments as I consider necessary and to create, if I can through such criticism, an appreciation by the federal government which will produce a better and more workable scheme.

We have asked that the plan be thoroughly investigated before it is introduced. We have pointed out areas in which it seems to conflict with sound economic, actuarial and social principles. Those who propose a massive new plan should demonstrate that it will not cause major damage. Surely the burden of proof lies with them. It is not up to me to say what they should do. Certainly I think the burden of proof lies with them to set out before the people of our country a plan that is proper in concept, one that will function and, of course, one that cannot be improved upon.

What we ask first is that some consideration be given to how this scheme is to be integrated with the existing pension schemes in Ontario. This is where I get into a position such as the hon. member for Sudbury commented upon this afternoon—which I might say I did not appreciate, Mr. Speaker. I am used to the knocks and tumbles of politics, but there was an inference there that I hope he did not mean—but perhaps he did. However, I can only say this. Through some misguided logic—because I have insisted on knowing how the present pension benefits which are owned by people in Ontario are to be protected—I am accused of working for the insurance companies, and, of course, this is absolute nonsense. I am working for the people of Ontario.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In connection with the actuary who went to Ottawa, I know how this arose. I was aware of it at the time. I watched with what avidity it was leapt upon, because it came about during the election campaign. We have established in this province a committee, an advisory committee on pensions, and I will just tell you who these men are. This is not the committee that was set up originally and did the studies for three years prior to the introduction of the portable pensions bill which was introduced here last year. It is not this group, although there is some carryover. This is an advisory group designed to advise. It is called a pension commission and its task is to implement the very complicated regulations that are necessary to be drawn up to make our portable pensions bill work. Despite the fact that I am said to be going to scupper the Canada pension plan, I have said that we will hold up the implementation of any part of our plan that would conflict with the Canada pension plan for a year. Is this the action of a man who is out to scupper the Canada pension plan?

Mr. Bryden: You wrote your letter after.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: These men are to advise the government on the very intricate business of how to get all the pension plans existing in Ontario integrated and to make sure that they follow the sections of the Act that require vesting, proper investment and so on. Mr. Lawrence E. Coward is chairman; Mr. Jules E. Fortin of Dominion Mortgage and Investments Association is a member; Professor Donald C. MacGregor of the department of political economy at the University of Toronto is vice-chairman; Mr. Gordon Milling of the United Steelworkers of America is a member of the commission. Here is the man, Dalton S. Rudd—

Mr. Sopha: That is the one.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —who is an actuary with the London Life Insurance Company, is also a member of the pension commission, and Mr. Leonard F. Wills, an insurance engineer.

Mr. Sopha: That is the one the hon. Prime Minister took to Ottawa, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Certainly I took Mr. Rudd to Ottawa. I wanted advice from a man who knew. He is an actuary. He is a scientist. He is a scientist with figures. When the lists were drawn up, Mr. Speaker, as to who was to be in the official party, Mr.

Rudd's name was put on the list with Mr. Coward's, with my own and with everyone else who was there, but instead of naming him a member of the pension commission, he was named as what he is in professional life—an actuary, an associate actuary, in the London Life Insurance Company.

At the time he accompanied me to Ottawa, he was a member of the pension commission of this province and he was there in that capacity, just the same as Mr. Coward—

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Prime Minister knows what it looks like to the federal government, eh?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: They never asked me about it.

Mr. Sopha: No, but they commented after he left.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, who are "they"? The Minister did not speak to me. The Rt. hon. Prime Minister did not speak to me.

Mr. Sopha: The Minister hardly speaks to you—she stopped.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In any event, there is the explanation of this matter, and it was a very simple one. Had the man been put on the list of members of the delegation as a member of the pensions commission, probably none of this would ever have arisen. But he still is an actuary with London Life. That is his job. He is a professional. He serves on this committee on a part-time basis, as an advisor.

Mr. Sopha: May I ask the hon. Prime Minister a question, Mr. Speaker? The hon. Prime Minister is not going to leave this subject without giving us the advantage, I hope, of his comments on the action of Mr. Coward last Friday.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, frankly, that had slipped my mind—but I would be happy to comment on it.

Last Friday I wanted to get permission of the Prime Minister of Canada to table that letter before I did so. That is why the letter was tabled just before the House rose because I did not have an opportunity to speak to him until sometime during the forenoon and, as you know, on Fridays we sit in the mornings. So I spoke to him and told him that I would like to table it because I was being pressed, Mr. Speaker, as to what our stand in Ontario was in regard to the pension plan. He said yes, to go ahead and table it. So I tabled it in the latter part of the morning. I had an appointment immediately the House rose, and some members of the press came to me and said, "We do not understand the technical aspect of what is in your letter". I replied, "I am terribly sorry, I have not the time to stand and explain it to you because I have an appointment, and someone is waiting in my office". I did say, however, I would be pleased to ask the chairman of our pensions commission to answer their technical questions concerning what is in the letter. That is how Mr. Coward came to be in the discussion with the members of the press. How they chose to interpret it and write it, I did not know myself until I read—

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about this Mr. Coward. I mean, I think he had a right to explain, as the hon. Prime Minister says, the technical problems respecting pensions, but surely as a civil servant he had no right whatever to make the political observations that he was credited with.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I can only say this. I very much doubt if anything like this will occur again. But this is how Mr. Coward got together with the press. It was not a press conference—it was not called as a press conference. It was arranged in front of this desk merely because I did not have the time to answer the questions of the press and they wanted some comment upon the technical aspects of what was contained in the letter. So I hope that we have disposed of the subject.

I want to continue with this statement, and I conclude by simply saying, that because I want to know what is going to happen to the pension rights that are owned by people here in Ontario, I am accused of being a tool of the insurance companies, and, of course, this I protest strongly. I am nobody's tool.

The federal government has, on many occasions, indicated that it is aware that great difficulties existed and do exist in integration, and at one time or another we have discussed these at various conferences. But it has failed, Mr. Speaker, to make any concrete proposal as to how these difficulties are to be met. And this I would like to see, I would like to have an idea. We have, in this government and this province, very capable men who are able to advise us as to whether these are good propositions or bad propositions, as to how these things are to be integrated.

I would point out to you that far from dealing with insurance companies, we do not know at this time how this new plan will be integrated with The Public Service Superannuation Act of Canada. I know this is a matter of concern with the federal government as they have to integrate their own plan with the existing one which is a federal statute and certainly not the project of any insurance company. We want to know how we are going to integrate it with our own teachers' superannuation fund, and with our own public service superannuation fund of Ontario, if it is possible to integrate it at all. I do not know.

Mr. Sopha: Not at all.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not know. I do not know how it can be done, nobody has told me, and nobody shows much interest in telling me. And these are questions that I ask.

Interjections by several hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, I saw no mention of it in the last memorandum upon which I was asked to comment. The matter was discussed, the memorandum was drawn, and was sent to me for comment. I wrote my comments and returned it and no mention was made of this in that memorandum.

An hon. member: Why does the hon. Prime Minister not get an answer from Judy for it?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am simply pointing out, Mr. Speaker, that these things do not disturb me. I know that we will have other conferences. I know that we will have other opportunities where we can sit down and discuss these matters, but let us not hit the panic button. And let us not have great statements that "Robarts is going to block the Canada pension plan". Let us calm down and use a little reason. This is what I have sought in this whole matter since last August.

An hon. member: In other words, let us not play politics all the time.

Mr. Bryden: Ever since last fall, you have been blocking the federal plan all the way down the line.

Mr. Sopha: Methinks he does protest too much.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Prime Minister permit a question?

The question is: Does not the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario understand the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada when he has stated quite clearly that there will be no interference with private pension plans by the Canada pension plan?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I do not recall ever hearing the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada make that statement because it is completely impossible to introduce this scheme without disturbing existing plans. We all recognize there is going to be a degree of disturbance; it is a question of how great it is going to be and how it is going to be dealt with. I do not think anybody denies—

Mr. Gisborn: The papers in the last two days explain the whole programme.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I might say there are some great misunderstandings in this whole field, Mr. Speaker, and I am simply trying to straighten some of them out. I have made it very clear that I am not going to block the plan. On the other hand I must make it very clear that I am not going to just accept it without even looking at it.

I am also concerned about those people who are presently on pension. I do not know whether it is widely realized that this plan does absolutely nothing for anyone who is presently receiving "old age security"—absolutely nothing. In other words, its benefits will flow only to those who will in the future earn income from which they contribute in order to qualify in the Canada pension plan. The plan will do nothing to assist those who are presently on pension and who may need additional pension in the future.

One wonders, too, whether our people realize whether, because of the rapid build-up of pensions in the early days of the scheme, our younger workers will contribute very heavily to pensions which will not be paid for by those who receive them. I am not saying that this is necessarily a good thing or a bad thing but I think it is something that people should know, because this is a characteristic of the scheme. And this is why I want a public inquiry.

I want an inquiry so that people will know what they are doing. And then if they want to do it, they can make up their minds. They are independent; I have great respect for their intelligence and their ability to make decisions for themselves, but for heaven's sake, let us tell them! Let us let them know what the facts are.

I am not aware whether people know this or not, but if you put it in front of a committee, as we have done with many pieces of legislation in this House, not a parliamentary committee—which is eventually and always subject to the House and to the party in power—but to a committee of citizens as when we put our proposals—

Mr. Sopha: Is it a Royal commission that the hon. Prime Minister wants?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I could not care less, as long as it is a free and independent body to which the people in this country can go and make representations and say, "We like this, and do not like this, and why are you doing this and what does this mean?" This is the type of thing we want.

Mr. Bryden: Well, if it produces nothing better than the Conservatives' pension plan—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I know this will hurt him, but intellectually my hon. friend from Woodbine has missed the whole point. I have not in any way offered, nor have I ever said that this government offered through its legislation, an alternative to the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Bryden: I have not said that you did.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We have never said it.

Mr. Bryden: All I said was that yours was a hopelessly poor plan, and if we do not get anything better from Ottawa, we will be stuck with your plan.

An hon. member: We do not care what he said.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): What kind of a statement is that?

Mr. Bryden: A very intelligent statement.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, he will persist, Mr. Speaker, in attempting to compare the benefits under the two plans and he just simply cannot compare them; they are not comparable.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister is trying to reduce benefits for early retirees under the federal plan.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I can only say this: Under this plan, as it presently stands, one can receive a full pension after ten years if one is the proper age, while the younger worker may contribute for 40 years to receive the same pension.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): He does not need it before—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now this is the build-up period.

Mr. Bryden: That is a good feature. Why does the hon. Prime Minister not leave it alone?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I see some things in it that I might wonder about and I think there are lots of young people in this province who will also wonder about it.

It means simply this: Those who draw the pension first will draw as much out of it as $10 for every dollar they put in and, eventually, there are others who will put in $10 for every dollar they draw out.

An hon. member: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now this is what it means.

Mr. Bryden: Is not that good?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Is it good or is it bad?

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister was complaining—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: From the looks of wonderment I would say there were a lot of hon. members here who did not realize it until this minute.

Mr. Bryden: We certainly do.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, this inequity that I point out—and we have made this proposal to the federal government—could be lessened if the build-up period were lengthened. Instead of doing it in ten years, do it in 15 years. This was discussed at the conference. I had a feeling, the last time we met, that perhaps there was some merit in this idea, and the merit in the idea was being accepted. But once again, when the memorandum came forth, we were right back at the beginning.

There is another matter which I believe requires study and investigation and that is the position of those people in the community who will not be covered under this plan. There are close to one million over 70 years of age, who are automatically barred because they will have no earnings, and therefore they will never be able to contribute and therefore they will never be able to qualify; so there are one million people right at the commencement who will not fit into the scheme.

The memorandum from the federal government states that 80 per cent of men between 18 and 64, and 30 per cent of women between the same ages, will at one time or another be contributing to the plan. But we do not know what percentage of these will contribute for how long, how many will be steady contributors, so that they will draw the full pension, and so on. Indeed there are a great many people who will not be covered at all.

Now this is quite an important factor as far as the provinces are concerned, Mr. Speaker, because it leads us into the field of welfare. I mean if payments like this are to be normal under the Canada pension plan, the next thing is that they will be normal under our various welfare programmes; and of course we, as the province, are going to have to finance some of these welfare programmes. But I am not objecting to the scheme on the basis of what I say. You will note that I said these are matters I think should be investigated, to see if we know where we are going, and to see if we can devise means of dealing with them.

Our point, in regard to the use of the large accumulation of funds, appears to me to be quite reasonable. There will be funds accumulated simply because the federal government, in its original plan, had old age security involved in the Canada pension plan. It removed that to satisfy the province of Quebec, because they could not remain in and Quebec still establish a scheme of its own. So that was done and, flowing from this as a result, there will be a large accumulation of funds.

What I have asked the federal government is that 50 per cent of these funds be sent back to the province for investment in securities at the provincial level. I suggested 90 per cent. I do not know really why I did not suggest 100 per cent. The funds will be taken from employers and employees in this province. We, and through us the municipalities, are the ones who are responsible for providing highways, sewers, schools, hospitals, roads, street lights, all—

Mr. Bryden: Does not the federal government have the right to taxes too?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: They do indeed; they have lots of rights. They control, Mr. Speaker, all the fiscal policy of Canada. They control the Bank of Canada. They are in a much better position to deal with our fiscal problems than we are provincially, because they have greater scope, they have greater depth.

All I am saying is that funds that are collected here, to eventually be paid out here, might very well be invested here in the meantime. I do not think that there is a single man in this Legislature who is prepared to argue that the federal government should have these funds over the needs of the provinces.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, but you were arguing—

Mr. Sopha: If it is against the balkanization of this country, I am prepared to argue it.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I do not hear anybody arguing that the federal government has any exclusive right to all these funds. I might say that I am not the only provincial premier to take this position, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Roblin of Manitoba has advocated precisely the same thing.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister would mind giving a clarification. He mentioned that he had asked for 50 per cent, and then he said: "I have suggested 90 per cent and I might have suggested 100 per cent." Could I ask whether these are just questions he is raising? He is not firm on any amount at this point?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, the federal government proposed in a memorandum dated January 11, that as the funds accumulated they would turn 50 per cent of them back to the provinces. That means 50 per cent of the amount collected in an individual province would be returned to that province. The central government would retain the other 50 per cent.

I simply suggested 90 per cent, and I felt that the 10 per cent they would retain was because they were responsible for the conduct of the scheme. They had the administration of the scheme and I felt it a fair amount from that point of view. But from the point of view of assets and the use that could be made of them to finance schools and the things that we all know we are so short of here, and are so closely attached to the development of our province, I felt that the money might better be used here, and in the other provinces as well than to be used by the federal government.

Now, sir, I should like to make it very clear once again that these comments and suggestions are put forward in a constructive spirit. It may be that proper examination and revision of this plan would delay its implementation for years. It may very well be so.

I would point out to you that Mr. Roblin from Manitoba has also asked for the same public investigation. These same questions are worrying him and he has others. He will speak for himself. He has other questions that I have not mentioned today. This plan is not accepted holus-bolus across Canada. We do want an opportunity to discuss it. We want an opportunity to see if, with our ingenuity and our knowledge in our own fields, we cannot make a better scheme.

It may be, as I say, that proper examination and revision would delay its implementation for years and I point out that this examination is asked for by people other than myself. I feel that since it will affect our people for ever we might be wise to spend an additional year in order to get it right, rather than to rush headlong into a plan which, to say the least, is not fully supported by all sectors of the community.

My purpose in raising these points is not to obstruct. I have made it clear that I will not oppose a federal plan even though I may not agree with it. However, I would be doing less than my duty to the people of this province if I were not to draw these matters, not only to the attention of the federal government, but to those of our citizens who will be called upon to pay into this scheme over the many years that it will function.

Let us not lose sight of the fact that this entire scheme will be paid for by the citizens of Canada. It is a contributory scheme. There are no tax monies going into this. Our people in Ontario will bear their share of the load and, once started, the plan will continue for ever. I will be satisfied only with the best for Ontario and this is what I seek.

Full discussion is part of our democratic system, as we are continually reminded in this House. This applies to governments as well as to individuals. In putting these views forward I do not seek to, nor will I, scuttle the Canada pension plan. But I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I will be very disappointed if I do not improve it.

Now, sir, we have all kinds of things here that we might speak about. I was interested in the comments of the hon. member for Sudbury when he said in reference to the speech made by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) that looking down these benches he saw nobody paying any attention. Well I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I was paying attention. I do not find it necessary to hang over the edge of the desk and halfway across the floor to hear what is said in this House. Over the years one learns to always have one ear open.

I enjoyed the remarks very much. I must say that on Friday I became a little impatient, if I may put it that way, with the hon. member for Woodbine. He has left and for that I might apologize. But I was a little put out at the eternal criticism of us for doing nothing. The criticism was based on two items, both of which have been instituted during the last two years in this House.

It was at the end of the 1962 session that I stood in this place and asked the House to approve the appointment of the select committee to deal with manpower and retraining. As a matter of fact, the germ of the idea for a conference on automation was also nurtured and born in this House during conversations I had with my former colleague who sat here just about a year ago. So we are responsible for the report. We are responsible for the conference. You can, perhaps, excuse me if I become a little impatient when we are eternally criticized for not doing anything about it when we are the people that started it.

If I were just a little better organized with all these pieces of paper, Mr. Speaker, I have a pretty complete story on what has been done with automation. Perhaps I left it in my office. However, I was going to say that the conference on automation brought together about 500 of the best brains we could gather together to deal with this problem; and during that conference we distributed to everybody there copies of what might be referred to as the Simonett report, the report on manpower training.

We distributed also copies of the document to which the hon. member referred—if I had my notes I would be able to name it—we made a film at that time which has been very widely distributed throughout the province. We have distributed some 4,000 copies of the findings of the conference, and that publication I was referring to was Automation and Technological Change, put out by the American Assembly.

We said at the conference that the ideas and the suggestions generated would not be allowed to die, and they have not been. A steering committee was appointed at the conclusion of the conference to recommend the form, organization and purposes of the proposed foundation on automation and employment, and this report has been forwarded to the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) under date of February 12.

But I would not have you believe that the steering committee has not been working in the intervening time, because it has.

Frankly I would say that while it is very interesting and easy to say, "Press on, press on", in matters of this kind, if we are to have a foundation that will function properly, and produce the results we want it to, I think the formation of it, its original assembling, the groups who are there, should be brought in in a way in which they can work together. Then, if we fumble the ball at this stage of the game, I would say that we could produce a foundation that would not work at all.

I only make these comments to say that this is not the kind of thing you can do in two or three weeks. Frankly, I would like to take this occasion, first of all, to say that as a government we are prepared to support, of course, financially and otherwise, the early establishment of the organization. I have not read this report, it only came to my desk today, but we are prepared to support the establishment of what will be a semi-autonomous body which we hope will be supported by industry, by labour, by government and by other outside organizations. This is why I feel that its organization is so important: if we do not receive in this foundation, the co-operation of all the elements involved, then we will not of course achieve the results we are after.

I would like also to express thanks to the members of this committee in order that we may realize that it is a committee which has been working and has, on it, able people. I will express our thanks to Professor Arthur Porter, who chaired it—he is chairman of the industrial engineering department of the University of Toronto; Mr. H. L. Shepherd, who is manager of training and salary administration at Canadian Westinghouse; Dr. W. D. Wood, professor of economics and director of the institute of industrial relations at Queen's University; Dr. O. M. Solandt, who is vice-president of Hawker - Siddeley of Canada; Mr. Russell Harvey, who represents the International Union of Office Employees; Mr. James Black, eastern Canadian director, building and construction trades department of the AFL, CIO; Mr. J. B. Metzler, the deputy Minister of Labour; Mr. S. W. Clarkson, the deputy Minister of Economics and Development; and Dr. F. S. Rivers, who is the chief director of education. So I can assure the hon. members opposite that we intend to press on with this; the report is here and we will proceed to implement it forthwith.

Just to fill out the story, the films made during that conference have been shown on television stations throughout Ontario during the last three months. In the meantime, the conference provided the theme for a labour-management workshop which was held in Brockville. We plan similar workshops in other parts of the province. We are going ahead with this matter and, frankly, we are quite proud of what we are able to accomplish here.

Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks, during this debate, of the hon. member for York South and I think he gave a very—I found it at any rate—stimulating and interesting historical analysis of the creation and development of political parties in Canada. I do not know that I necessarily agreed with the results he drew, but nonetheless I thought it was quite a large contribution to the present debate which is going on in Canada.

As we look at the situation now and think back 100 years—it was just 100 years ago—it can be said that the political leaders of this country were confronted with, I think, many more difficulties than we face today. Because, in those days, it was impossible to have an administration that lasted for more than six or seven months; and naturally, of course, history does not repeat itself and events never occur twice in exactly the same way. But I do feel in those years the fears that were rampant—and all one needs to do is read the prejudices existing in those days, even the course of violence was considered perhaps to be a necessary course.

In those days, February, 1865, George Brown said in Quebec: "Here we sit patiently and temperately discussing how these great evils of prejudice and hostility may justly and amicably be swept away." Well, we do not use quite the flowery language today as was used in those days long ago, but I would point out to you that in a few months we will be in Charlotte-town and in the city of Quebec commemorating these events of one hundred years ago.

In my opinion we have a whole new set of problems now, but, as I say, I do not think they are any greater, I do not think they will be any more difficult to overcome or surmount, than those problems which faced our forefathers many years ago.

In my opinion—and I am in perfect agreement with the hon. member for Sudbury—and I was very anxious that he complete his remarks particularly in this area—and I agree with him that a Canadian confederation without Quebec is something that is unthinkable, something I find difficult to even imagine. And I am completely certain in my own mind that, to the overwhelming majority of people in the province of Quebec, the same feeling exists.

After all, Mr. Speaker, you do not throw away 100 years of history in three or four months, or three or four years. A man is not built that way. I am of the opinion that we can solve these difficulties, and I welcome the dialogue that is taking place between Quebec and Ontario in regard to these matters. I enjoy being in it. I think there is much discussion that will have to take place and, as I said in reference to pensions, the essence of democracy is debate and the exchange of ideas.

A week or so ago I had a talk with Dr. Dunton and André Laurendeau of the Royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism. I think the way they are setting up their plan will help.

I attended, a week or so ago, a symposium on the viewpoint of the French-speaking Canadians. This was arranged by the York Central District High School Board. I think it a very great thing that they did and I went there on the opening night. They had a professor there from the University of Montreal. They had Father O'Neill from Laval University and Madame Chaput Rolland was there. You may have read some of her works in her dialogue with her English-speaking friend. But the point really was that these people are in Ontario to explain to Ontarians the French-Canadian point of view and this is the dialogue that, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, must take place.

I must say that in addressing this group, as I looked at Confederation, as I looked at our constitution, I did not approach the thought of having to alter it with any fear or any trepidation. If it does not work, let us change it. We have been changing things around here for a good many years. Perhaps we do not have the legal flexibility that our neighbours to the south have, where they have altered their constitution considerably through the medium of legal interpretation and precedent and so on, but if this is what is required to keep Canada together, I do not see any reason why we cannot sit down and find out what the answer is—to ensure that our country will continue, that there will be room here for everybody, because believe me, there is.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: But I might say also, in response to some of the comments that have been made here, I feel that we have a loyalty to the province of Ontario and I see nothing incompatible with representing the people of Ontario within the broader framework that is Canada. I will expect other areas to do the same—after all, it is a vast country; there are variations in thought; there are variations in language; there are variations in economic conditions; there is no common denomination in our country; therefore, we have to have regional government—but these governments can sit down together and solve the problems of the whole by consultation and by discussion, and this is what I think we can do. In fact, I might say, I am completely optimistic and think this can be done, and I think that this will be one of the large tasks that lie ahead of all of us in the next few years.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Sooner or later, Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are going to have to go through that shattering experience of a full conference.

Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of years ago when the hon. Tom Kennedy was Minister of Agriculture and I was a junior member. One day I was sitting back here and he came along. There was a seat vacant and he sat down beside me and I was very flattered—I was very flattered indeed. He leaned over to me and he said, "You know, John, they are going to ask me an embarrassing question and I cannot answer when I am not in my own seat."

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I was just going to comment for a moment upon the amendment and the sub-amendment. I heard some sort of subterranean comments that some people around here thought that the Speech from the Throne was a little long. I can only assure you that the amendment and the sub-amendment together are one of the most dismal litanies I have ever heard.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: You would think that the whole province was just gone; that there was nothing and—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Cliché? I have an idea that the hon. member stopped where he did when he wrote his amendment because he had run out of clichés. There are no more, because they are all down there on the paper.

Let us take a look at the opening statement:

This House regrets that Her Majesty's government has failed to proclaim a programme designed to meet the challenges of the 60s.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: On this side we always had the idea that the hon. leader of the Opposition was behind the times but it never occurred to me that he had not yet realized that we are in the fifth year of the 60s. So the 60s are about half over.

An hon. member: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: And we had a programme for the 60s. Certainly we did and we put it to the people last September.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That programme was functioning last September. We went to the people and they compared it with the programme of the Opposition and that is why we are over here and they are over there.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I know it is a very despondent business from their point of view. There is very little joy, but I will try to bring some to their hearts, by pointing out to them what has been done by this government in the 60s. Let us take a look at what we have accomplished—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I will just say this. Let us have a look and see what we have been able to accomplish. In 1959 the gross product of this province was $14 billion and in 1963 it was $18 billion. We accomplished that in four years. In 1964 it will be higher, of course. In 1959, 95.5 per cent of our people were employed; in 1963, 96.2 per cent, and in 1964 it will be better. Per capita income in 1959 was $1,766; in 1964, $2,000. In 1959, the labour force was 2,290,000; in 1964 will be 2,500,000.

Hydro—in the 60s to date, we have increased capacity by 1,600,000 kilowatts. Highways—in the 1960s to date, we have built 647 miles of two-lane and four-lane highways. This is the programme for the 60s. In education, approximately 860 new schools or replacements for schools, 1,300 additions, 208,000 more pupils—this is in the 60s. We have created seven or eight new universities. We built ten new hospitals in the 60s, six replacements, 95 additions, 7,000 additional beds. Lands and Forests—50 new parks in the 60s and an additional 2.8 million people using our parks each year—this is the increase in the 60s. In addition we have 37 new wilderness areas, ranging from 6.5 acres to over 500,000 acres. This is the programme for the 60s, and this is the result of the programme. These are done. Douglas Point nuclear plant is just about to come into production. We are negotiating for some of the largest nuclear power development in the world. These are the programmes for the 60s, these are the things that are being done, and these are the things that are to be done.

I would just say that we are not satisfied with this. As a matter of fact, we have forgotten the 60s. We have enough going now to take us through the 60s. We are concentrating on the 70s, that is what we are doing. We will keep going.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Just concentrate on those 70-year-olds.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would just say after having pointed these things out, I do not know how you could possibly vote for that amendment. So, Mr. Speaker, may I now, with perhaps some slight measure of confidence, ask you to remove the uncertainty that hangs over the head of the government and take the vote on the motion before us.

Mr. Speaker: The Throne Speech debate being now completed, I shall call for the vote as follows: Mr. K. E. Butler (Waterloo North) moved, seconded by Mrs. A. Pritchard (Hamilton Centre), that an humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor as follows:

To the Honourable W. Earl Rowe, P.C.,
Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition) moved, seconded by Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North), that the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, now before the House, be amended by adding thereto the following words:

This House regrets that Her Majesty's government has failed to proclaim a programme designed to meet the challenges of the 60s.

And this House regrets that the government has chosen to use empty and hollow phrases as a substitute for action, rather than, as it should, seize the opportunity to chart an imaginative and comprehensive programme designed to encourage the social, economic and educational development of the province of Ontario.

And this House further regrets that the Speech from the Throne indicates that the government dissipates the confidence of the people who returned it to office in that it now shows a lack of awareness and a refusal to act upon important problems of immediate concern to the people of Ontario, such as automation and job security, a comprehensive programme of medical care using the experience gained in other jurisdictions, a fair and equitable pension plan, a code of laws designed to recognize and advance the rights and interests of the working man, a programme of protection for the consumer, a method whereby farmers can be afforded a fair and adequate return for their efforts, a recognition of the potential of and a plan for the development of northern Ontario, and an acceptance by the government of responsibility for equipping every boy and girl in Ontario with sufficient education and training to enable him or her to bear a responsible, useful and satisfying role in meeting the challenge of the 60s.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South) moved, seconded by Mr. E. G. Freeman (Fort William), that the amendment to the motion for an address—

I would ask the members if they will refrain from interjecting until I complete the motion.

Mr. MacDonald moved, seconded by Mr. Freeman, that the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session be further amended by adding thereto the following:

This House regrets that the government has manifested no serious awareness of the challenges, opportunities and problems which will face this province in increasing measure in the years ahead, as a result of the profound scientific and technological revolution now taking place throughout the world, as is indicated, among other things, by the government's continued failure:

1. To undertake or even contemplate comprehensive social and economic planning, to take full advantage of the scientific revolution in terms of increased wealth and fair distribution of that wealth among all the people and to minimize the effects of the dislocations which will inevitably arise;

2. To expand educational facilities, particularly at the advanced level, and to provide retraining facilities on anything like the scale needed to provide our people with the knowledge and skills needed to take full advantage of the opportunities provided by the scientific revolution;

3. To accord to the trade union movement of the province that genuine and wholehearted recognition which can be the only sound basis for labour-management co-operation in meeting the challenges of the scientific revolution;

4. To give any consideration to the reform of our institutions of government, particularly at the municipal level, in the light of the requirements of the scientific revolution;

5. To plan for the enormous expansion of cultural and recreational facilities which will be needed if our people are to have full opportunities for the constructive use of the leisure time that will become increasingly available to them as the scientific revolution proceeds.

And this House further regrets that the government has shown no awareness of the continued existence of widespread poverty in the midst of what has been described as our "affluent society," and in particular, has disclosed no serious intention:

1. To undertake the large-scale housing programme needed to provide adequate housing for all our people;

2. To provide adequate minimum wages and other basic labour standards to ensure reasonable living conditions for working people throughout the province;

3. To enable the farmers of the province to obtain a fair return on their contribution to the wealth of the province;

4. To depart from the position the government has taken in its negotiations with the government of Canada relating to pensions, even though that government has indicated that it plans to reduce the already inadequate pension benefits contained in its original proposals;

5. To fill in the multitude of gaps in our present social security legislation.

The vote is on the amendment to the amendment moved by Mr. MacDonald. As many as are in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say "aye". As many as are opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

YEAS

NAYS

Bryden	Allan
Bukator	Apps
Davison	Auld
Farquhar	Bales
Freeman	Beckett
Gibson	Boyer
Gisborn	Brown
Lewis	Brunelle
(Scarborough West)	Butler
MacDonald	Carruthers
Newman	Carton
Nixon	Cass
Oliver	Cecile
Paterson	Connell
Racine	Cowling
Sargent	Davis
Singer	Demers
Sopha	Downer
Spence	Dunlop
Taylor	Dymond
Thompson	Eagleson
Trotter	Edwards
Troy	Evans
Whicher	Ewen
Worton	Gomme
Young-25.	Grossman
	Guindon
	Hamilton
	Harris
	Haskett
	Henderson
	Hodgson
	(Scarborough East)
	Hodgson
	(Victoria)
	Johnston
	(Parry Sound)
	Johnston
	(Carleton)
	Kerr
	Knox
	Lawrence
	(Russell)
	Lawrence
	(St. George)
	Letherby
	Lewis
	(Humber)
	Mackenzie
	MacNaughton
	Morningstar
	McKeough
	McNeil
	Noden

NAYS

Peck
 Pittock
 Price
 Pritchard
 Randall
 Reilly
 Reuter
 Roberts
 Roberts
 Rollins
 Root
 Rowe
 Rowntree
 Sandercock
 Simonett
 Spooner
 Stewart
 Villeneuve
 Walker
 Wardrope
 Welch
 Wells
 White
 Wishart
 Yakabuski
 Yaremko—73.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the ayes are 25, the nays, 73.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

We will now vote on the amendment moved by Mr. Oliver. As many as are in favour of the amendment will please say "aye". As many as are opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

I declare the amendment lost.

We will now vote on the motion moved by Mr. Butler. As many as are in favour of the motion will please say "aye". As many as are opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

I declare the motion carried.

Clerk of the House: Resolved that an humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor as follows:

TO THE HONOURABLE W. EARL ROWE, PC, LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF THE PROVINCE OF ONTARIO:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

Fortieth order. Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill No. Pr1, an Act respecting the town of Cochrane.

TOWN OF COCHRANE

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking in connection with the second reading of Bill No. Pr1, yesterday, I think I got to the point where I had traced the history of the repeal of the section of The Municipal Act during session of 1960-61.

Predictions were made at that time that there were bound to be representations made if any deviation was made from that policy, deviations which would allow chaos to descend in this particular field.

Last evening, Mr. Speaker, I examined the Hansard records of that date. I wanted to see what had happened, or how Hansard had reported what had happened in 1960 and 1961 concerning the debates relating to what was then Bill No. 88, An Act to amend The Municipal Act. And fascinatingly enough, it was section 15 of Bill No. 88 that repealed what was then sub-paragraph 48 of section 1 of section 379 of The Municipal Act.

There was no comment at all, either from the Minister of Municipal Affairs of the day, the predecessor of the present hon. Minister (Mr. Spooner), from anyone on the government benches, or even from anyone on the Opposition benches relating to the repeal of that section. In fact, the only comment that I have been able to find in Hansard at all was a remark by the then Prime Minister, hon. Mr. Frost. He said in the debates of that year that it was generally accepted by one and all that the use of fixed assessments was unfair, inequitable and improper. Having put his blessing on that type of expression, it was reasonably obvious that that section was not long for the statutes of Ontario, and the section was repealed.

The former Prime Minister left no doubt in anybody's mind that the section was improperly placed and had long outlived its usefulness. That was the year, Mr. Speaker, if you will remember, when we talked about the Eastview report. That was the year we talked about the town of Elliot Lake. And those of us who were in the House at that time will remember the fascinating parade of Ministers who rose from their seats, one after the other, saying we are going to do this for Elliot Lake, we are going to do that for Elliot Lake, and we are going to do the other thing for Elliot Lake. That was the year, Mr. Speaker, in which that section was removed from the statutes.

I think it would be well worth our while to have a look at what that section did say. Section 379-148 dealt at some substantial length with what had to happen before a fixed assessment was to be allowed.

There were certain safeguards in the statute of that day. They run to some seven sub-paragraphs. There is a limit of ten years to the term of the fixed assessment. There was a prohibition that the fixed assessment be granted a property that previously had a fixed assessment. There was a provision that the by-law could not be passed unless there was an affirmative vote of not less than three-quarters of the members of council; and secondly of not less than two-thirds of the electors. The provisions dealing with who could vote on such a by-law. There was a provision saying no such by-law should be passed granting a fixed assessment in respect of a branch of industry of a similar nature to one established in the municipality unless the person by whom it is carried on consents in writing to the granting of the fixed assessment.

In the four bills—in the Hearst bill, in the Wallaceburg bill, in the Smith's Falls bill and in this bill, the Cochrane bill—there has been no evidence at all adduced to indicate whether or not the particular industries for whom exemption has been asked are in competition with other industries in the municipalities. But if there had to be fixed assessment, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that sub-paragraph E of the old sub-section 248 makes some sense.

Sub-paragraph F: There shall be no by-law granting a fixed assessment in respect of a business established elsewhere in Ontario or that has been removed from the municipality to another municipality in Ontario, whether the business is to be carried on by the same person or by the person deriving title or claiming through or under or otherwise or by such person in partnership—and so on.

In other words, this section was designed to prevent an industry being stolen by one municipality from another. And then sub-section G. It says this is the only type of bonus that can be given.

Mr. Speaker, while there were fixed assessments, those conditions seemed somewhat reasonable, but in the words of Mr. Frost, and surely I can have no better witness to this argument, it was agreed by all concerned that the day of fixed assessments had gone.

When I related to the House last evening

what had happened in Hearst, what had happened in Wallaceburg and what had happened in Smith's Falls, I suggested there was abundant evidence before the committee that at least there had been negotiations which had been concluded prior to the amendment of the Act when this section was removed. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, in the Cochrane instance, that the persons who appeared on behalf of Cochrane were unable to produce a single written document, not one written document, that indicated that there had been anything committed to writing establishing an agreement. All they said was negotiations had carried on for about five years.

They were unable to answer, Mr. Speaker, when the negotiations had been concluded. They were unable to fix a date, either before or after the amendment to the statute. In other words, there was certainly substantial doubt in my mind and, I would suggest, in the minds of many hon. members of the committee, as to whether or not the negotiations had been concluded until after, and probably considerably after, the time that that section was removed from The Municipal Act.

Mr. Speaker, the issue here is not whether or not an industry in Cochrane should have a fixed assessment. Certainly, I do not think there is any hon. member of this House who would deny the town of Cochrane a better assessment. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there is no hon. member of this House who would feel that the town of Cochrane should not have every advantage that the government of Ontario is able to give to it.

But, Mr. Speaker, the problem is not the problem of the town of Cochrane. The problem is the problem of all of the municipalities of Ontario. It is the problem of Eastview, if you will, it is the problem of Wallaceburg, it is the problem of Hearst, it is the problem of North Bay and the city of Toronto and all of the municipalities, all 950 of them. This is the problem of fixed assessment, and the problem is, Mr. Speaker, that favouritism should not be exerted merely because of the appeal, and it was a good appeal, of the hon. member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle), or any other hon. member. The problem is that surely a principle must be established as to how we are going to deal with industry.

It is recognized, Mr. Speaker, that many of our northern municipalities have serious difficulties, most serious difficulties, in paying their way and it is recognized that all of them would appreciate and could use good industrial assessment.

I mentioned Elliot Lake earlier in the debate, Mr. Speaker. What good would it be to have Elliot Lake grant to any industry a fixed assessment? Because it merely means that the burden of that assessment that is given up would be transferred from one group of ratepayers to another. The big problem in Elliot Lake is not that there is not one group of ratepayers, it is that there is not another to transfer the additional burden. Elliot Lake desperately needs help, but it cannot afford this sort of thing, this fixed assessment type of arrangement.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, what we need in this province is a real indication from government that they are serious about helping those areas of the province which are not able to get along under present conditions. Surely what we need is a method of working out assistance to those vast areas of northern Ontario, so that those municipalities will be able to stand on their own feet.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) is not in his seat during the course of this debate, because this is a field that he should have been turning his attention to. Surely it is his job, and the job of his department, to bring forward to this House a method whereby municipalities such as those in northern Ontario, the municipality of Windsor, Cornwall, Smiths Falls, Wallaceburg, all of these other municipalities, will have the ability to get industry into those municipalities; and if there are inducements, those inducements should not be done on a local basis.

Surely there is a responsibility within the Treasury benches to assess the progress, the health, the condition, of the various municipalities of Ontario and determine whether or not there is a need for an industry to locate in a particular municipality.

I am not suggesting for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that industry be directed firmly and forcefully to go to municipality "A" or municipality "B". What I am suggesting is that the province of Ontario, with all of the weapons at its command, can urge, can persuade, can indicate to industry, that if they go to municipality "A" or municipality "B", certain concessions will be given to them. And if this is going to cost money, and it is important that this should be done, then it should cost money to all of the people of Ontario.

This is a very important point of principle, Mr. Speaker. It may be that in past times, with the three bills that have already gone through, there could be some sort of an argument made to justify what has been done on the basis of negotiations and documentation. Well surely, Mr. Speaker, in this case, there is no such argument that can possibly be brought to bear. There is no documentation. There is not one piece of paper, that the proponents of this bill were able to bring forward, that was any agreement committed to writing. There was no evidence that was able to be presented to the private bills committee that indicated that the negotiations were ever concluded.

Mr. Speaker, look at this bill. This bill is complete and absolute authority, almost, to the council of the town of Cochrane to determine the sort of fixed assessment that is going to be given, even though seven safeguards that I read, that were in the old section 48, are not even referred to here. Look what this bill says.

The town of Cochrane is authorized and empowered to pass a by-law—no "three-quarters of the council," as the old statute used to say; it does not even say that two-thirds of the voters must assent, as the statute used to say—for the fixed assessment of Cochrane Industries Limited, carrying on a plywood manufacturing business. All of those other conditions are ignored, too.

Mr. Speaker, we have a very serious problem in Ontario in connection with this sort of matter. I think that the government owes the municipalities of Ontario a real duty and responsibility to set this thing, once and for all, on a proper logical and sensible basis. It is not going to do it by closing its blind eye to the fact that these bills are here. It is not going to do it by favouring the town of Cochrane, or by favouring the representations put forward by the hon. members for Cochrane North or Lanark (Mr. Gomme) or any other riding.

We are only going to get down to business in this, Mr. Speaker, if the government of this province is able to say: "Here is a problem. Many municipalities need new industries and there has to be a basis on which those industries are going to be urged and persuaded and helped to go into those areas where there is a lack of industry and a lack of proper assessment."

Mr. Speaker, it is again with great regret that I note that the hon. Minister of Economics and Development is not here and listening to this debate, because there is no single problem that warrants his attention to a greater degree than this very problem and I think we are entitled to hear—not from the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. I feel sorry for him. He is caught in this position.

I think we are entitled to hear from the Treasury benches—yes, Mr. Speaker, I was going to say this later when his estimates come up. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs deserves some commendation. He has come to meeting after meeting of the private bills committee and quite fearlessly given opinions, sincere opinions, honest opinions, not caring who agreed or disagreed with him. This has been a refreshing breath of air to receive in the light of some government activities.

I say I feel sorry for the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs in connection with this particular private bill, because it is not his problem. This is the problem of the economic planning of the government of Ontario and it rests on the shoulders of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, perhaps with the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), certainly on the shoulders of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). This is the sort of thinking, Mr. Speaker, that has to be done.

I notice again—it is not my fault, Mr. Speaker, this debate was called late in the afternoon—and it being six of the clock, I again move adjournment of the debate.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put. My difficulty, of course, is, I can never estimate the time the hon. members are going to speak.

I suggest that we continue this debate at 8 o'clock in order to complete it. I do not want it severed into three or four different parts, so we will continue with it and if there are any other speakers, they may speak.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, may I say this? There is one hon. member of the government party, and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), and myself, who have a joint engagement that may keep us after 8 o'clock. I think it is the intention of the three of us to be back in the House, but whether or not we will be back at 8 o'clock, I doubt.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We had better adjourn the debate. If the hon. members are here at 8 o'clock we will continue with it; if they are not, we will go on with something else.

Mr. Singer moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Would the hon. Prime Minister indicate what the "something else" might be?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Estimates of The Department of Labour which are not yet completed.

It being 6.03 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, February 18, 1964
Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Tuesday, February 18, 1964

Estimates, Department of Labour, Mr. Rowntree, concluded	723
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Cass, agreed to	754

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1964

The House resumed at 8.00 o'clock, p.m.

Clerk of the House: House in committee of supply, Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR (continued)

On vote 1005:

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I understood that we had not passed vote 1004 the other day. We were discussing it and there were other speakers who wanted to speak on this vote.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): No, it was passed.

Mr. Newman: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Chairman. Then may I ask the hon. Minister a question concerning vote 1004?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, the vote was passed. I will answer the question, but I think the record should be straightened. The vote was passed and the last words spoken were that we would commence at the next session with vote 1005. However, I would be happy to answer the question.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I was confronted with the same situation two years ago with The Department of Highways.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister if there are any studies by his department concerning the effects of overtime because in my own community it is generally a feast and famine both. There are people who are not necessarily required to work, but do work much more than 48 hours a week. Also there are others who are not able to obtain employment, as proven by the fact that 7,012 are unemployed or seeking placement.

If distribution of overtime by agreement could be arrived at with industry, possibly there may be some chance of employing more of those who are unemployed. Have studies been undertaken by the department as to the feasibility of such a suggestion?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Studies are underway with respect to the question of overtime. It is not an easy matter to deal with because in certain areas where employment opportunities exist, the trained personnel or those suitable for that type of employment are not necessarily available. Or if I might put it another way, the skills with which those people in the unemployed group are equipped may not be the skills for which job openings call for at the moment. It is a question in the broad area of the subject and one that would probably involve retraining.

On the other hand, there is no question in my mind that there is still room to advance this interchange by a little more careful analysis of the situation. On this score we are in touch with national employment service officials. Those efforts will continue during the coming year. It is something in which I personally am very much interested.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, thanks to the hon. Minister for allowing me this question.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Labour a question under vote 1005. It concerns section 89, sir, of The Labour Relations Act, which deals with municipalities and their rights to take employees out from under jurisdiction of the Act.

I think in the last few years we have discovered that this section has caused more strikes than it has avoided. I am wondering if the hon. Minister has made any decision yet on whether this section should come out.

I am thinking back to 1958 when at that time the Minister had decided that he thought it would be a good idea to take it out. I am just wondering now if any decision has been made as to whether or not it should come out of the Act?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Section 89 of the Act is one which has attracted a great deal of attention. It is one to which we in the department have given considerable study. I cannot answer in the form the hon. member would like me to at this time because a reference to section 89 means legislation. The amendment to The Labour Relations Act has not been introduced as yet. It is practically ready and the amending Act will be advanced in short order.

I think I can assure the hon. member that we are quite aware of the problems in the field of labour relations that are affected by section 89. It is certainly uppermost in our minds, and will no doubt be discussed when the amending legislation is brought forward.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, is the hon. Minister in a position at the moment to indicate when that amending bill is likely to come forward?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, I am not, but it will not be any longer than it will take me to complete the necessary preparation.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, we are, to a certain degree I suppose, casting around in the dark. There is legislation coming forward—the hon. Minister will reveal the content of it in due course, no doubt. Being a great reader of farm publications, I have noticed in a newspaper called The Grower—which is the official publication of the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association I believe—that there has been quite a campaign to have The Labour Relations Act amended to include within the definition of agriculture and thus exclude from the provisions of the Act—I do not know quite what they have in mind, but it seems that they want to cut a pretty wide swath—they want to exclude processing plants; for example, that happen to be connected with farms.

This all arose in connection with a judgment of the labour relations board in which it decided, I think quite rightly, that certain of these processing plants in the Bradford area were properly covered by The Labour Relations Act. I think it certified an applicant union in the case of two of them. There was a third application, but it was thrown out on a technicality. I believe that the union concerned either has made a new application, or is contemplating making it. The Grower got into quite a lather over this and has been demanding that the Act be changed. I have no doubt that representations have been made to the government on this point. I wonder if we can hope for an assurance from the hon. Minister that he does not have in mind an amendment of the type that The Grower has been advocating.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am quite aware of the matters to which the hon. member refers. It has to do with the definition of agriculture. Agriculture is an occupation which is an area that is not subject to the provisions of the Act. If the definition of agriculture is narrowed, then more people would be certified, or there would be more opportunities for certification as the collective bargaining agency. On the other hand, if the definition of agriculture is widened then the number of persons excluded from the Act is broadened. This matter is before me and receiving our consideration. I think we have to remember that these cases are all decided on the basis of their own particular facts. I think we also have to bear in mind that we are in an expanding industrial economy. Or let me put it the other way. Our economy tends to be expanding, certainly in urban and metropolitan areas, toward an industrial type of operation. Beyond that, I do not think I could comment. This, again, is a matter of legislation.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that in this, at least, we would have a clear-cut assurance that the Act would not be amended to exclude the type of operation that was recently certified in the Bradford area.

For the information of the House—in case this matter does come before it—I would point out that the three operations in question were as follows: One is called United Farms. It has sixty employees in a shed where products are packed for the market. It has a small farm as well, with a handful of employees, but it has about sixty employees in this packing and processing operation. It has been seriously suggested that the packing and processing operation should be regarded as a farm and excluded from the Act.

Another one is called Federal Farms. It has 160 employees in its packing and processing plant. And the other one has 200. I do not have the name of it right in front of me. Holland River Gardens Limited, I think it is.

At any rate, these are quite substantial operations. I do not know that there is any processing in the sense of machinery being used to alter the product, but it is packed for the market and, I suppose, cleaned and wrapped. It has been seriously suggested that this is a farming operation; obviously such a suggestion is preposterous.

The people concerned have decided that they want a trade union to represent them for collective bargaining purposes. From what I have heard about the wages and other conditions under which they operate, they seriously need a trade union to represent them, and I would certainly hate to see anything done to disturb the certifications that the labour relations board has just issued.

These operations obviously have absolutely nothing to do with farming, any more than Canada Packers.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, this is a matter of legislation, not estimates. Still, if the material is being placed on the record, I think it is only fair that I should point out that there are jurisdictions, neighbouring jurisdictions of Canada, where the definition of agriculture is much broader than we have in Ontario. I will simply repeat that I have not come to a conclusion about this matter but it will be dealt with in the matter of a day or so.

Mr. Bryden: I understand in the province of Quebec the labour relations board refused a certification for a similar type of operation, or perhaps has done it more than once, on the ground that such an operation was agriculture. I have not studied the Quebec law, but it is hard to conceive that there would be a law under which this could be regarded as agriculture.

Since the hon. Minister still has the proposed amendments to The Labour Relations Act under consideration, I am going to propose to him something a little different. I am going to suggest that he look into the definition of the word "agriculture" in the Act, but with the exact opposite purpose in mind.

I would say, taking these particular operations as an example, that the farms associated with those processing plants, if I may call them that, should also be covered by The Labour Relations Act. I think, when in The Labour Relations Act it was decided that agriculture should be excluded—this was a good many years ago—what the Legislature probably had in mind was the family farm, which was then the standard form of agriculture, in fact almost the exclusive form of agriculture, in this province. And I do not think anyone would seriously suggest that there is any—

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Please! The hon. member for Woodbine is discussing matters that properly should be discussed when legislation is presented and not estimates. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we should be discussing estimates.

Mr. Bryden: These are things that quite properly come within estimates. I am now discussing the estimate of the labour relations board. I do not know what legislation the hon. Minister is going to bring in. I am not discussing anything on which he has brought legislation in. How can I be said to be discussing legislation? He will not say himself what is in the proposed legislation. I am discussing matters relating to the administration of The Labour Relations Act, and the activities of the labour relations board, and this comes four-square within this vote.

The Act, I am going to suggest to the hon. Minister, should be amended so that the labour relations board will have jurisdiction with respect to what is a relatively new development in the field of agriculture and that is the large industrial farm. I think these farms in the Holland Marsh, the three that I was talking about, come within that category.

As the law now stands, all that the labour relations board was able to do was to certify the union concerned for the processing plants associated with the farms. The effect of that is, I understand, that there are some employees who work in the processing plants in the winter time and on the farms in the summer time. They are employed by exactly the same employer, but for part of the year they will be subject to the certification and subject to any collective agreement that may be entered into; and for other parts of the year they will be excluded from the operation of the collective agreement. Yet they will be employed by exactly the same employer on what is essentially the same property, on a farm or a plant which are within a very short distance of each other.

I think that we should take another look at the definition of agriculture in the Act so as to make sure that the quite legitimate exclusion of family farms should not also be interpreted, as it now must be, to include much larger operations and operations that in effect are industrial operations. And I think that, in these three cases I am talking about, the law should be amended so that the certification can apply to the entire operation of all three. If there are other enterprises farming—really on an industrial basis—I think they too should be subject to the provisions of The Labour Relations Act.

I would also like to suggest, while I am at it, that the term "horticulture" should be looked at. There should be some reasonable maximum number of employees involved. As I understand it, a large operation—the Dale Nurseries in Brampton—is excluded from the provisions of The Labour Relations Act. I do not know how many employees it has, but it must be a very large number; it is essentially an industrial type of enterprise, and I think that that sort of operation, as well as these so-called farms that I have just mentioned in the Bradford area, should be covered by The Labour Relations Act.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, on this vote, I was almost induced not to raise two questions because the hon. Minister felt that these questions would not come under the estimates, but rather under legislation. I would submit, if we have questions in regard to policy applying to the department we are dealing with, the only way we can make recommendations or suggestions to the hon. Minister is deal with them. I think perhaps we can agree that the hon. Minister has had a fairly easy time with his estimates so far and that there could be a little flexibility.

I would raise two questions for consideration by the hon. Minister in regard to The Labour Relations Act. And he can comment, if he wishes, on the policy or not. One is the question of ex parte injunctions. He is quite aware of the problem the trade union movement faces in this regard. I might agree that the Act itself, or the changing of this procedure in applying to union disputes, is not in the hon. Minister's discretion. Nevertheless he sat on a committee and dealt with all of the problems and I believe that I am correct in saying that the committee studying the labour relations problem across the province recommended that ex parte injunctions should not be used in industrial disputes. So, I would ask the hon. Minister to comment on it as to his opinion in this regard, so that we may have some indication of what his policy is. He did not cover any of the real problems that have been raised in regard to The Labour Relations Act in his presentation of his estimates, so he should give some answer in regard to policy.

The second point I would raise concerns the representative vote in regard to certification. Certainly this was another area that seemed to have a lot of support from the select committee on labour relations and it is about time this section was changed. I will not go into detail on the reasons why. It is just a simple application of a democratic vote, and almost any democratic organization, when it takes a vote, takes a percentage of those voting and not a percentage of those eligible to vote. As has been said many times in this House, if the hon. members of the Legislature for the province were elected on the basis of getting a majority of those eligible to vote, most of us would not be here. However, I would ask the hon. Minister if he would comment—just give the House some indication of his opinion—in regard to these two subjects that apply to what jurisdiction the board would have when the particular question arises.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, the estimates that are before us have to do with supplying funds for the operation of the labour relations board in its application of the law of Ontario that it must apply. That is why I have said on several occasions this evening that matters of legislation are quite separate from the estimates, and I repeat that statement, because they are quite separate from the estimates.

On the subject of an ex parte injunction, the hon. member for Wentworth East must be aware that that item is covered by The Judicature Act, not The Ontario Labour Relations Act, and when we talk or the hon. member talks about an ex parte injunction, I am not clear as to what he means. Do you mean that an application for an injunction should be with notice, or on an ex parte basis?

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, in a labour dispute it should be with notice to both parties when both parties got the same notice—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Of course The Judicature Act—this is not the time to be talking about that at length—but this is the Act that applies. The Judicature Act is the result of many years of experience having to do with processes in the courts. Of course, the basis of an ex parte injunction is that a wrong has been done, something that is contrary to the law and for which immediate remedy is required. In the operation of an ex parte injunction, this is sufficient reason for the judge to grant the application. It is for a very limited period of time, and that hearing, or that injunction, or temporary interim injunction order, which is granted, is returnable within two or three days when both parties can be heard and the merits of the situation can be presented in each case, when each side advances its own arguments.

Of course, in theory an ex parte injunction by its very nature is a remedy that exists against wrongdoing which has happened and I would, as a lawyer, have to take some exception to the argument advanced. I am sympathetic to the proposition of notice, but I do not think that an ex parte injunction will be granted if an opportunity to give notice is available to the applying party. Of course, this ex parte injunction is available to organized labour or to employees in the same fashion as it is to an employer. However, we are talking about something that is under The Judicature Act; it is a part of legislation and I have no other comment on that item beyond this.

With respect to certification votes, this matter is before us at the moment and is receiving serious consideration.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there is another matter I would like to raise under this vote and I am afraid the hon. Minister is going to have to put up again with a reference to The Labour Relations Act. I do not agree with his interpretation of what we are discussing under the estimates. We are discussing the voting of funds for government agencies and departments for the administration of government policy, and government policy is embodied in the statutes. I think it is quite proper before we vote money, that we be able to comment on government policy and make suggestions as to its improvement where we see fit, including improvements in the statutes, if that is the point that is at issue.

There is another matter that has been coming very forcefully to the fore in the last year or more and that is the whole matter of the movement of plants from one location to another. I realize, Mr. Chairman, that this is a very broad issue, only one phase of which is relevant to this vote, but it is that one phase I want to comment on at this time. The problem that arises is that a company decides to move its plant to another location. As far as I can see under the Act as it now stands, it may only move it a couple of hundred yards down the street. Yet a certification issued under The Labour Relations Act and any collective agreement that may have been entered into pursuant to that certification no longer is valid.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, that is entirely wrong.

Mr. Bryden: Let us get down to cases then.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well then, let us define what the Act presently provides for. When a group applies to the labour relations board for certification as the bargaining unit of a certain group of employees, there is a zone clause. My instructions are, and information is, that whatever zone it applies for, as long as it is reasonable, will be granted. I know the cases you are thinking about—it is Amalgamated Electric and I think the most recent situation involves General Steel Wares. But the real basis of this situation has to do with probably a change in fashions or a change in the modus operandi of the nature of the request for certification with respect to the zone. I would think it fair to say that in years gone by, and even today, there are certain applications for certification that have had a fairly narrow zone asked for, which was granted.

The real issue that is before us has to do with the industrialization, the relocation, the expansion of metropolitan or urban areas, such as Metropolitan Toronto, where areas have gone downhill, buildings are old and there has been a regeneration of the community. Quite legitimately, in many instances, an employer will move to some other location for economic reasons or for whatever reasons there may be. If he moves within the zone named in the certification, then the bargaining unit remains. On the other hand, if he were to move to an area that was beyond the zone of certification and a recertification or reapplication would be involved—which was the case in the Amalgamated Electric case. I think it was just last week that the United Electrical Workers were certified at the new location of the Amalgamated Electric in Markham — this involves something else. If I may finish this point, probably in the applications for certification that are being advanced this year and were advanced last year, certainly I would expect in the days and months ahead, that applications would include a larger or greater zone for the certification factor.

This matter is one that I was very much interested in—what has gone on in the two particular cases I mentioned. I would think that management owes a pretty high duty to its employees to take their situation into account—quite apart from the certification of the trade union side, from the human side—when a change of location is involved that might involve the loss of employment to people of an older age. In their early years, it may not matter too much, other opportunities may be available, but it certainly will probably have a more drastic impact on older people and people who have applied themselves, and devoted the major years of their life, to this particular employment. I would think that good business judgment alone would tell management, and require management, to exercise some greater consideration than has been evident in some of the situations I have seen.

However, I would go further than that. This involves another matter. It involves the question of the prime factors in certification and what remedies are available to speed up that process, because I think the two points are collateral and this is a matter that has occupied my attention for some weeks past.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would agree with the hon. Minister that management has some degree of responsibility and there have been some cases where it does not seem to have recognized its responsibility.

Since the hon. Minister mentioned the General Steel Wares case, I would like to say that in my opinion, this was an outstanding example of a recognition by management, as well as of the union concerned, of its full responsibility. I do not think anyone could have any complaint at all as to the way in which this move was handled. The employees were all given an opportunity to move to the new location. Most of them did not avail themselves of the opportunity, but they were given the opportunity. I think, also, a great effort was made by management, union, "selective service," and everyone to find them alternative employment; and most of them found it, I believe.

The Amalgamated Electric case, however, would appear to me to be on the exact opposite end of the scale—an example of almost total irresponsibility. I was not aware of this zone proposition the hon. Minister was talking about. I think one will find that it probably is not a factor in some of the older certifications. My impression is that the Amalgamated Electric certification was specifically for its location at Pape and Carlaw. Now if there was a wider zone than that, it was not wide enough to extend 15 miles to Markham.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is right. It did not extend to Markham.

Mr. Bryden: Well this, I think, points up the difficulty. The hon. Minister has mentioned—which is true—that the union, shall I say, pursued Amalgamated Electric to Markham. It signed up the employees out in Markham and now has a new certificate so it will start collective bargaining.

However, I would not like to get the impression that that essentially solved the problem, because what happened between the lapse of the union's old certification and its obtaining of a new one? At least 100 employees went down the drain, particularly older people. They were right out in the cold. The old collective agreement lapsed. These people therefore had no protection of seniority, no protection even of their pension plan, which was covered under the collective agreement. They had absolutely nothing. They were just out on the street. The company has now started up again, and will have to negotiate a new collective agreement with the union; and it may end up with very much the same collective agreement. But, in the meantime, some basic rights of a large number of employees were sacrificed and can never be recovered by any action of the union.

This is the problem: To get a recertification is all right, but that does not retain the old agreement. It was under the old agreement that the employees had their rights, and these people tended to be in the upper age brackets where the opportunities of new employment are at the lowest level. Even their pension rights; as I understand it, most of them hardly even got any severance pay. They got some but it was so trivial it was hardly worth mentioning; employees of a great many years' service.

I think this has to be looked at very seriously. I do not think a company should be able to get out from under all the obligations that have accrued under a collective agreement simply by moving its plant far enough to get out of the zone. I am not saying that its motive was to get out of the zone. I know it wanted a new plant. Its old one was getting obsolete, but the unfortunate part was that it treated the workers as obsolete too; and it did not even do for them what is done for machinery, make some sort of provision for write-off. It just heaved them out on the street—on the community. Therefore, to handle a case like this there should be some sort of provision whereby an interested party could apply to the labour relations board for a declaration that the old certification continues uninterrupted, so that the old collective agreement will also continue uninterrupted.

I do not see that you can handle it on a zoning principle solely because it is always possible to move across the boundaries of the zone. I think there has to be a certain amount of—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Or even out of the province.

Mr. Bryden: Well, when plants move out of the province, obviously there is nothing we can do about it, but as long as it is in the province, then I think we should exercise the powers which we, as a Legislature, have to make sure it does not escape its legitimate obligations. I suggest a possible way of handling a case like Amalgamated Electric would be simply to provide that the labour relations board can make a declaration, or can amend its certification—whatever you like to do—to apply it to the new location or the new zone, if the circumstances make such a course of action justified; as in my opinion they clearly did in the Amalgamated Electric case.

In that particular case the labour relations board was powerless under the law. There was absolutely nothing it could do. Its old certification theoretically is still in effect but it is completely meaningless, and the old collective agreement turned out to be of no benefit to the employees at all, no protection to them when they most sorely needed protection.

Vote 1005 agreed to.

On vote 1006:

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I have before me a clipping from the Toronto Globe and Mail, date-lined Sudbury. The heading is "Worker electrocuted", and the other heading, "Safety programme lack criticized by coroner". The coroner is J. A. Pidutti of Sudbury, and he criticized the lack of an effective safety programme for construction workers.

Ahti Liitela, father of two children, was electrocuted on January 18, while moving a cable attached to a bucket of a 35-foot-high-crane, which touched a 7200-volt hydro line. The crane operator said he knew the power should have been disconnected before he started to work under the wires, but this was not done. He also had warned fellow workers but apparently they did not pay much attention to the warning.

Then the workers said themselves that they had no knowledge of high-tension overhead wires and were vague about the provisions of The Construction Safety Act.

A juror asked the crane operator if he had a licence to operate the crane and he said he did, but that there was a large number of men in the industry operating the same type of machine without licences and that The Department of Labour would not do anything about it.

One of the construction safety workers from the department of the hon. Minister told the inquest that the onus for good safety conditions were first on the employer and then on the employee.

This construction safety officer was questioned by the coroner on the education of labourers in regulations of The Construction Safety Act passed in 1961. He asked the question, "Was there no assurance that a man knows anything about the Act?" The answer was "no" by the department's construction safety officer.

It seems to me that is quite an indictment against the safety programme carried out by the department. I have heard strange things in the past. Sometimes things are just brushed under the rug, do not stir up any trouble, but possibly the hon. Minister has some knowledge of this particular death. Possibly he could tell us whether these facts are true or not, that The Department of Labour as alleged will not do anything about seeing that people have licences and about providing a proper education programme to emphasize safety among employees.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, firstly I do not know anything about that particular case involving a death through, I take it, electrocution, at Sudbury on January 18. I would be happy to look into the circumstances of it and to inform myself, to ascertain whether the remedial steps which have been taken are sufficient or not.

As to the licensing to which the hon. member makes reference, what does he refer to? Licensing of what?

Mr. Troy: He was asked by a juror if he had a licence to operate the crane. Mr. Chisnell said he did but there was a large number of men operating the same type of machine without licences and The Department of Labour would not do anything about it. That is the man's reply. The safety officer who was at the inquest is listed here as Gerald Canton.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I just to do not understand that statement, Mr. Chairman, because if the legislation requires the licensing of these operators, then it should be followed out. It is a matter of law, as you know. The actual omission of a licence, if it is through an error, does not necessarily involve culpable fault if the man is in fact qualified. But I am unable to comment in detail about this until I inform myself and I would be happy to pursue it. I would think that the hon. member for Nipissing would be interested in the remarks I made on the presentation of our estimates last Thursday when I made reference to safety and similar matters.

These estimates provide for a substantial increase in inspectors. The only way we can meet the inspection needs, and in that sense, I include the liaison and the instruction of local inspectors, is by having funds for which we are asking. I say this in as kindly a way as I can, but I would have to remind the hon. member that it was one of his own colleagues who criticized the travelling expenses which were referred to in another situation.

Mr. Troy: He just asked the question, he did not criticize, he wanted to find out. How can he criticize when he does not know what it is all about? If you gave him the information, then there might be same necessity for criticism, otherwise it might be approbation.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask the hon. Minister a couple of questions to clarify to my own satisfaction the matter of safety inspectors and their responsibilities.

I understand that the legislation as was originally passed meant that municipalities with 50,000 people or more appointed safety inspectors. And then later, last year, the legislation was changed and it brought in separated townships in addition to separated towns. Does this mean that any township, if it is a separate township, must appoint safety inspectors to inspect vis-à-vis the provincial Act?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The existing legislation provides for the appointment of local inspectors by either counties or municipalities. There is no rigid requirement laid down that every municipality must have its own inspector. It would follow that a municipality such as the county of Peel, Mr. Chairman, would have an entirely different situation than, shall we say, parts of Frontenac county. In one instance I met this week, yesterday morning, in fact, with the association of county councils and we discussed at length the implementation of the appointment of these inspectors. There is some objection and resistance to this on the part of certain municipalities, but in the broad sense the trend is continuing toward a recognition of the desirable features of local appointment of inspectors. To advance that, the department's programme involves the holding of instruction courses and seminars, and generally advising and co-ordinating the activities of such inspectors. I give you two examples covering probably the two extremes where inspectors operate. One, of course, would be, shall we say, in the Metropolitan Toronto area where they have a number of inspectors on their staff. The other extreme would be a municipality that I learned about yesterday which does not have that much expansion or construction going on in its area but it made very satisfactory arrangements with a retired engineer on a time basis for such time as was required to carry out the duties required of him.

Mr. Young: Then, Mr. Chairman, may I ask this question? As Highway 401 progresses across the province, does this mean that each county or township or separated town or city must take the responsibility for the safety inspection on that highway right through the place?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, that would be so, or to put it another way, those municipalities or counties which require inspectors will be those counties where construction is going on and where there is assessment being added in the process. The two go together.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I would also ask this—I think perhaps part of the answer may have come a moment ago: Occasionally in my own municipality, where we have an inspection service, the provincial staff comes in to sort of work with our people from time to time. I am not sure whether our boys are training the provincial people or the provincial people are training the others, or whether it is a sheer duplication of effort.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would doubt if that inference is correct. As a matter of fact, as far as I am concerned, it would not matter as long as both were learning something.

Mr. Young: I see.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But the intention of the arrangement is, for instance, that in a municipality such as the hon. member represents, I would expect they would have men of the highest qualification carrying out these duties. In other municipalities where construction and expansion is not going on at such a rapid rate, the men available for these duties might, and probably would, require instruction and help from the provincial department, and hence this programme of seminars.

Mr. Young: Yes, well, I appreciate the answers the hon. Minister has given, Mr. Chairman. But it seems to me it is here we put our finger on one of the real weaknesses in these estimates. We are just not providing enough money for a proper inspection staff. My feeling is that the inspection ought to be done, in large measure, at the provincial level and there we ought to be training a highly skilled mobile force of inspectors who can do the job and do it properly.

I remember vividly that night when a group of us watched with horror in Hogg's Hollow as five men were dying underground and there was just nothing that any of our people could do to prevent that disaster. Then out of that there seemed to come the decision that really it was difficult to pin the responsibility anywhere for this kind of disaster, for the kind of conditions that built up there and that resulted in the fire and the subsequent death of these people. And so it seemed to us at that time that something should be done, and we felt something was being done in the passing of legislation to prevent this kind of catastrophe in the future. And so with the 1961 legislation there was real hope that the province was going to take responsibility for this kind of inspection and train the kind of force that could do it, that could get at the trouble spots and could watch these situations carefully.

But then in the legislation last year, as the hon. Minister has indicated, we saw that responsibility placed squarely back on the municipalities as the legislation was amended so that Highway 401, railway lines, tunnelling and this sort of thing became the responsibility of the municipalities—unless I am very mistaken and the hon. Minister can correct me if I am. This is all right for some municipalities where, as the hon. Minister says, a lot of construction work is going on where there are skilled men who know their job in this field. But in the instance of my own municipality, this kind of legislation added a very onerous burden, particularly as Highway 401 began to be rebuilt, with all that that meant. The present staff was almost swamped with work. To add this kind of responsibility to its job, Mr. Chairman, was just too much.

When we realize that in the one interchange at Highway 401 and Spadina there are no less than 26 bridges being built, and for the municipality to have to inspect for safety on all those bridges, plus all the other interchanges that are being built through that municipality, is just too much of a burden. We just cannot expect an efficient job to be accomplished.

As a matter of fact, last Wednesday the Jane Street bridge, the old Jane-and-401 bridge, was being demolished. Somebody made a mistake and a great slab of concrete, which was not supposed to fall at that moment, crashed to the Jane Street surface. Three men on the top were able to scramble to safety and so nobody was injured, by some miracle. By another miracle, the men who ordinarily were working underneath, were not there at the time and so there was no tragedy at that point. I suppose what logically should have been happening here is that a North York inspector should have been there to see that that kind of accident could not occur. But the staff just is not available to watch this kind of occurrence. So it seems that this is just too much for a municipality like mine, and certainly it is too much for many other municipalities.

I draw to the attention of the House the question I asked this afternoon of an hon. Minister regarding an accident which happened on January 30, and which I have looked into rather carefully. One Laurie Karkas was killed on the subway job. The circumstances surrounding that job certainly point up the need for far more specific safety inspection. The watchman, Artus Bika—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Was this the matter released to the press before the orders of the day?

Mr. Young: After the orders of the day. The watchman, Artus Bika, who was injured a couple of years ago and had his back broken in a similar accident, said he heard a scream and saw a body fall into the excavation below. This was at 10.00 o'clock at night. He said he ran to the office, the people inside would not let him in, although he told them that there had been a serious accident and someone had fallen and he wanted to phone. What was happening there and what the reasons are have not been established. I am not going to speculate on that tonight.

Finally, he ran to a telephone booth up on the Danforth. He had no change to make the call, but then made his way finally to a fire station nearby and the firemen came and got the body out. The man who died was involved in lowering heavy timber into the hole, contrary to regulations. The hoist was not manned, there was no hoistman on duty, I am told. There was no guard rail around the excavation and no lights at the top of the excavation. Timbers were piled at the edge of the excavation contrary to rule.

The next morning a guard rail of sorts was put up and lights were installed where they should have been installed before. But here we have a situation where a very serious accident did occur and where a man's life was lost.

In the report of the workmen's compensation board for 1962, on page 27, we have this paragraph:

With a compensable labour force of about 1.8 million and 250,000 settled claims, approximately one person in every seven had some type of accident requiring medical treatment; one out of every 28 was compensated for more than four days' disability; one in every 700 had a claim settled for permanent disability, and about one in every 7,500 died as a result of an industrial accident.

And on the same page we are told:

In 1962 the number of fatal claims settled was 242, and fortunately this was 11 per cent lower than in 1961, when 273 fatal claims were settled.

And so in this kind of a situation, Mr. Chairman, there is no place for complacency. Men are being killed and injured at too great a rate, an inexcusable rate, here in our province of Ontario. It seems to me that we must take steps immediately to see that this kind of slaughter is stopped at the earliest possible moment.

I am going to suggest, first of all, that the responsibility for this kind of accident ought to be fixed more firmly upon the construction firm involved. We have the situation I mentioned in North York at Highway 401, where a municipal inspector is policing a project being carried out by a private contractor who has a contract let by the provincial Department of Highways. And, moreover, this inspector is inspecting vis-à-vis provincial legislation. So I think the legislation should be tightened up so that there is more responsibility placed directly upon the contractor involved.

The second thing I would suggest is that the inspection ought to be taken over 100 per cent, or as near that as possible, by the province. A start should be made at the level where provincial works are being undertaken, particularly at Highway 401 and works of that kind. Gradually, a mobile, effective, well-trained force of inspectors can be built up because—let us remember this one fact—the public is going to pay the shot no matter whether it is municipal or federal or provincial.

In this case, we had better do the thing as effectively as we can; it is going to cost no more and likely, in the long run, will cost less. We will have one interpretation of the legislation right across the province, instead of the 100 or 900 different interpretations possible of the legislation under the present kind of set-up.

The third thing that needs to be done here is safety instruction on the job. This, I grant you, is not the easiest thing in the world and there is a great deal of resistance against it. We are told to let the unions look after the instruction for safety, but this has not proved to be too successful; and 15 minutes a week on the job where safety instruction is given, and given in detail, is one of the things I think should be considered very carefully. The Ontario Hydro, I understand, does this now. So we give them a pat on the back for that. I think this idea should be extended so that safety instruction is given everywhere where construction is going on.

Then there is this matter of the construction safety association. I noticed in Saturday's Toronto Star, that at Niagara Falls, during a labour seminar, unions were blamed by one speaker yesterday for increasing industrial accidents, while another said some employers indulged in sharp practices to keep their accident rates down.

They were discussing safety in the new technical age at an Ontario Federation of Labour education conference. R. G. D. Anderson, general manager of the industrial accident prevention association, said that instead of encouraging union members to listen to the advice of the employer-sponsored safety association, unions had been screaming from the sidelines about not being represented on the association boards.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that this is one of the gripes of the trade union movement: That the construction safety association is an employers' group and is not open to representation on the part of the union.

I know the argument about the contractors and the people having to put up the money to put in the safety devices and so on, so it is their business; but I say, sir, that the workers are the men who are investing their lives in these jobs, they are the people who do the dying and who are injured. I am not aware of any employers who have been killed or seriously injured on these jobs. The workers have. So they have just as big a stake in this business as the men who invest their dollars, and provide management. The ranks of the construction safety association should be open to union representation so that there is a feeling of participation, and so that these groups can plan together to work out safety techniques and lower this appalling death-and-accident rate that we find on our construction jobs across the province.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Before the hon. member goes on with that, there are a couple of observations I would like to make. First, I am looking at the press release which the hon. member for Yorkview released earlier in the day. He repeated, tonight, the same figures he used in the press release which he distributed. He said we are killing about 250 men a year on construction work in Ontario. That figure is wrong; 150 is the total in all compensable compensation board cases in all industry in Ontario, and the number attributable to the construction industry, I am instructed, is 78.

Mr. Young: I stand corrected, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I could not agree more with what has been said about the need for greater effort and we, in Ontario, have adopted a programme of training our staff. We are asking for money to make our inspection staff mobile, to be able to carry out their functions and make a contribution toward the objectives of safety throughout the province. And it is against this programme that we hope some major results will be indicated in the immediate days ahead. We have, in Ontario, a labour safety council, which is a very active body. And that labour safety council is made up of representatives of employers as well as of organized labour.

We know—and I think the hon. members of this House who are familiar with the subject would know—that the human factor is a major item insofar as accidents are concerned, whether they are in industry, construction or on the highway. The human factor is there. It may be trite to say, "Well, the human factor is at the root of all of this," but we have to go beyond that, and we have to find out what affects or motivates a human being to do whatever he does which leads on to an accident.

Education, of course, is one of the important factors which will alleviate the situation. But what kind of education, sir? On-the-spot education on the job—that is one approach. General instruction is another, and there are probably other avenues of approach. The question of what kind of education, and the means of getting at this problem, is one which is under study at the moment by the labour safety council and I am looking forward with some interest to the report on this matter which they will bring in in the immediate days ahead.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. Minister for the correction. The word that should have been used is "industrial", rather than "construction" here, in connection with the accidents, and I stand corrected on that.

But it does not invalidate the premise which was made—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The principle is there.

Mr. Young:—that men are dying in too large numbers, that this whole matter must have the serious attention and consideration of the department, and that we do need larger inspection staffs, and more efficient inspection in this whole field—whether it is construction or industrial accidents.

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): Let us get on with the estimates.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): If the hon. member is not interested he should go and play bridge.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, in regard to technical education: With more technical schools and junior vocational schools, composite schools and the technical phases of education that are found in these schools, does this department inspect the mechanical equipment in the various classrooms? I would say machine shops, auto mechanics' labs, electrical labs—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is a matter for The Department of Education—technical schools.

Mr. Newman: It still is a fact, I think, that the department is probably better outfitted and equipped to examine the schools than is The Department of Education, for safety.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, I would think that the inspectors of The Department of Education who are charged with supervising the manual training and other technical classes, and the equipment with which the schools are supplied, could make the appropriate inspections.

Mr. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, are they trained inspectors for this type of operation or are they simply educational inspectors? Mr. Chairman, I would still like to know from the hon. Minister if these fellows have any training for the inspection of this equipment.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would be glad to make inquiries of The Department of Education. I have no knowledge of this.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question with regard to construction safety inspection. My question is prompted by a news dispatch of last June, datelined Chatham, the first paragraph of which reads:

Ontario's recently enacted Construction Safety Act is being hobbled by the failure of many counties to appoint the inspectors required under the Act.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member missed the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Did I?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes. We were discussing the matter before the hon. member came in.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, just let me come to a question:

T. M. Eberlee, assistant deputy Minister of Labour, revealed that 20 of the province's 38 counties had made no move to look after the safety of their construction workers.

My question to the hon. Minister is, six months later: How many of the 38 counties now have inspectors?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think that 22 of the counties have appointed their inspectors. All told, under the scheme, there are some 300 inspectors appointed and qualified under the municipal arrangements under the existing legislation. As recently as yesterday I met with the county council association who, in their official capacity, are enthusiastic about this method of dealing with inspections. Granted there is a popular segment or some areas in the municipal field who are not enthusiastic but the vast majority of them are. And of the numbers of those counties where action has not been taken—I do not mean to run them down but I would have to put them in a category where I would say that those municipalities and counties most active in the construction field have co-operated with the department. We are also proceeding with a group of seminars for their instruction. A fine showing.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, how many of these inspectors the hon. Minister was talking about are full time, and how many are just people that have half a dozen other jobs and are designated this job, too?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, I cannot answer that. I would think that in some municipalities where there is no construction going on they might have several other jobs. It is commensurate with the amount of construction.

Mr. Bryden: I think this figure of 300 is a very misleading figure, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us how many people in his department are specifically concerned with the matter of construction safety?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Nineteen persons.

Mr. Bryden: And they are engaged, I take it, apart from administrative duties, in training inspectors at the municipal level. Is that their major responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Assisting and advising. There are qualifications required on the part of the people seeking appointment as municipal inspectors.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact, I think, that revived interest in safety on the part of the government, perhaps also the public, dated from a tremendous tragedy in construction work. That was the Hogg's Hollow tunnel disaster, which led to a coroner's jury, ultimately to the appointment of a Royal commission. The Royal commission looked into the whole question of safety in employment in all its phases and made a comprehensive report. Its report included extensive recommendations with regard to construction safety, the subject that started the whole thing off.

Following the report of the Royal commission we had legislation brought into this House which subsequently became The Construction Safety Act. We have had experience with The Construction Safety Act for some substantial time now, Mr. Chairman, and I think it has to be said that the Act has been a failure. It has not met the needs of the situation. As far as the statute is concerned, it looked all right, except on the one point of inspection, but otherwise its provisions appeared to be satisfactory. This demonstrates very clearly the whole problem in the field of labour safety. The best legislation in the world is useless if there is not proper provision for enforcing it. I submit to the government once again, as I have done many times before, as have other hon. members in this House, that it should reconsider its stubborn refusal to accept responsibility for inspection under The Construction Safety Act.

The government stands in splendid isolation on this point and always has. There is nobody that I know of who agrees with it that this responsibility for the enforcement of a provincial statute should be palmed off on municipalities. I do not think anybody agrees with it. The McAndrew commission did not agree with it. The McAndrew commission made it as one of its specific recommendations that the provincial Department of Labour should take responsibility for inspection in this field. The labour movement thinks so. I believe that employer associations in the field believe so. I do not know about the recent meeting of municipalities that the hon. Minister is talking about, but by and large the municipalities certainly think that the provincial government should take responsibility. They object to having this responsibility thrust off on them.

This is a provincial responsibility, or should be. There may be some areas of co-operation, and there are undoubtedly in the bigger municipalities people who are working in the general field who could be helpful to the department, but basically the responsibility must be taken by the department if we are ever going to make progress in stopping this carnage in construction work.

The hon. Minister has certainly had the reports of coroners' juries before him. I am sure he has. Here is one I have clipped from the Toronto Daily Star of October 3, 1963, with regard to an inquiry into the death of a 20-year-old man called Elio Fracassi. Unfortunately when one reads of these construction deaths, Italian names recur frequently. I noticed in the latest issue of Corriere Canadese that two more of them were killed. They are particularly vulnerable in this field. This is the type of work a great many of them are engaged in and the lack of protection for them, in my opinion, is criminal.

Newspaper editorials have been written time after time suggesting that the government should take over responsibility in this field. Nothing seems to move the government, not even the continuing appalling accident-and-death rate on construction. Sir, I suppose it is useless to try to appeal to the government, but still, the matter is so serious that I think an attempt should be made once again to appeal to it to forget the stubborn attitude it has taken, that the municipalities are going to have to do the inspection job whether they darn well like it or not. Let us accept the recommendation of the McAndrew commission, and the recommendation of coroners' juries—as in the case I was talking about, of Elio Fracassi, where the coroner's jury recommended that safety procedures in Ontario construction jobs should be under the jurisdiction of The Department of Labour. This is one of many.

The hon. Minister made some passing reference, when he was talking about this a little earlier, to the advantages of municipal inspection. I would frankly like him to enumerate the advantages, because I cannot think of a single one. I cannot think of one advantage and I think the results speak for themselves. What is essentially a good piece of legislation has really been of very little value in protecting workers on construction work, and if the hon. Minister can see any advantage in municipal inspection, I would appreciate it if he would enumerate them because I have never seen any. I have never heard any enumerated in this House.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, we have said in the past week or two how happy we were about the introduction of The Industrial Safety Act. I am sure we mean it. We really want to see it do the job it is intended to do. We said the same thing when The Construction Safety Act was introduced about a year and a half ago. I am not going to repeat what has been said by the previous speakers before me, inasmuch as the municipalities did not want this Act thrust upon them. But they are not only saying this; they have completely ignored the Act.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This is not my information.

Mr. Gisborn: I will then give you some samples of—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am aware, I admit, there are some municipalities—

Mr. Bryden: Including the big ones.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But the majority of them approve it, and the county council association, representing the counties across this province met with me—

Mr. Bryden: What about the city of Toronto? What about the suburban municipalities, the ones that really—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: It is only counties and rural areas that have no problems.

Mr. Gisborn: I have never seen anything in the press to indicate to me since the Act was introduced that the municipalities want to participate in it. Wentworth county is in a schemozzle over it. I would relate what happened in Hamilton when a construction worker was killed about Friday, May 30. I will quote from the press release.

Thomas Draycott, a construction safety engineer with The Department of Labour, said Mr. Lucien Vasseur, 35 years of age, of RR 1, Stoney Creek, was walking about the concrete pier with no provisions for his safety.

I will not read the whole story, but I will quote another section:

He then stated that The Construction Safety Act brought into force in 1962 demands that every local municipality that has a population of more than 50,000 shall appoint a safety inspector.

Such an inspector has not yet been appointed in Hamilton, although the appointment is in progress.

"Nine months later and we still have no inspector?" Joseph Rocchi, acting for the Crown, questioned:

"Yes, that is so," Mr. Draycott replied.

I made some inquiries and I understand that the city council of Hamilton just a few months ago appointed an inspector. One inspector in the city of Hamilton would never serve the purpose in regard to keeping track of what is going on with regard to construction safety. So it does point out to us that the municipalities do not want this job thrust on them, but worse than that, they are flouting the law. I would direct this question to the hon. Minister: Has there been any penalty invoked upon the municipalities to date for not carrying out responsibilities under the Act brought down about a year and a half ago?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There have been no prosecutions of municipalities but there has been a continuing programme of liaison and education and discussion of the matter with them.

Mr. Bryden: I can understand that there are hon. Ministers over on the other side who are very little concerned about human life, but what we are discussing is the problem of human life. It is obvious the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) rambles on and on and on with constant streams of drivel. He would greatly assist the proceedings of this House if he would go elsewhere.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): We are sick of the hon. member for Woodbine.

Mr. Bryden: I am happy to know that the hon. Minister is sick of me. It must mean that I am doing a reasonably good job.

This is a serious problem. As far as I am concerned there is quite a lot more to be dealt with under it, so the hon. Minister might as well—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Let us get back to the labour estimates.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if the Ontario Labour Safety Council has, within the last six months or so, made any recommendations to him with regard to inspection under The Construction Safety Act as to who should take responsibility for it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have to speak from memory on that. I do not think on that particular point, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Bryden: Have they had this particular Act under review recently, or have their inquiries been in different directions?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, just a minute now. I outlined, I think pretty thoroughly last Thursday, the work that the safety council have performed with respect to—here we are: In the past year the labour safety council has considered and commented on, and made recommendations with respect to, foundry regulations, construction hoists, The Loggers' Safety Act, underground regulations, ionizing radiation regulations, The Industrial Safety Act, and The Operating Engineers Act.

Presently they have a major matter referred to them, having to do with education with respect to construction safety, and we are endeavouring to make available funds to meet the expenses which they tell me they expect to incur, and that is going ahead.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to now turn to some other phases of safety legislation and its administration. I made a note in my estimates book, when the hon. Minister was making his initial statement. I am not quite sure if I now understand it but it indicates—at least I think he said—that the staff, with relation to these safety and technical services, is now 155. Did I make a correct note there? Or perhaps the easiest way is just to ask the hon. Minister how many—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think the answer, the figure, was 151.

Mr. Bryden: One hundred and fifty-one, and he said there was an increase of 40 in the last two years.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The increase of 40 is in the past 12 months.

Mr. Bryden: The past 12 months. Could the hon. Minister enumerate, or give some general breakdown of, the duties of these 40? I imagine there are several different operations covered by this one vote and I imagine that they would have different responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well now, boiler inspection branch, 34; construction safety branch, 15; elevator inspection, 16—

Mr. Bryden: Are these inspectors or total staff?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Inspectors.

Mr. Bryden: Including the supervisors, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, including supervisors but not clerical staff.

Elevator inspection branch, 16; engineering services, 15; factory inspection, 52, and they are being increased. There will be a total of 59 factory inspectors. Let us start over because what we are shooting for at April 1, 1964, is: factory inspection, 59; engineering services, 18; elevator inspection, 16—as I stated—construction safety, 16; boiler inspection, 35; and operating engineers, 11.

Mr. Bryden: These are the figures which the new votes will provide for—is that the correct interpretation? Does this mean that it is envisaged that during the course of this year there will be an increase of seven in the number of factory inspectors?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. Bryden: Well, the number, I would take it, was down to 52 in the past year. It was down from a year or two ago, was it not? Did the department not have 55 to 56 on that sort of operation?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That arose from a transfer of staff from one branch to the other.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, I see.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think when the caisson problems developed—

Mr. Bryden: They are now in a different category, is that it? So that the department in recent years has had slightly over 50 and they are now going to go up to 60? I would suggest to the hon. Minister that this House would be happy to vote him money to take on more factory inspectors than that. Certainly, I can speak for this group. We would be happy to vote him the money. We would also be happy to vote him the money for the travelling expenses as well.

We have a new statute in this field. I will not go into it; we have discussed it at some length already. It looks to me like a good statute but, as everybody agrees, it will be as good as the inspection under it—and I just do not think that 60 inspectors are enough to do the job in a province of this size. It hardly more than keeps up with the growth of the province over the last few years. The thing has been stationary at 50 for a number of years.

I am sure the number of establishments to be inspected has increased, and I would like to see the hon. Minister make the figure, instead of 60, more like 75 as his objective for this fiscal year, and perhaps 100 for the next fiscal year. I think that is the sort of inspection staff that will be necessary in order to do a proper job on the new legislation which is now in the mill and will no doubt be passed at this session.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I think we have to point out as many cases as we possibly can. I think it is our duty to present the sins of omissions of the department and the inspection field in the past so that we can get the full effectiveness of our new approach—the new Industrial Safety Act and The Construction Safety Act—so that it does the job we want it to do.

I mentioned that Saltfleet township were having their problems in regard to safety inspectors. They agreed on a county inspector.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: And other matters.

Mr. Gisborn: And since that time, out of the ten municipalities, four have withdrawn their support for the one inspector. But just to point out the seriousness of the necessity of really doing a job in this field, the first report that the county inspector gave to the township council showed he had made 542 inspections and out of them there were issued 406 orders to comply and ten orders to stop work. This means that out of the 542 inspections only 126 they felt were really being operated in a safe manner. I think figures like this should disturb us and give us some initiative to really make the new Act provide what we want.

I would point out that I raised the question during the debate on The Industrial Safety Act in regard to section 22. I said that I had some concern as to the workability of that particular section, where it says—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What section was that?

Mr. Gisborn: Section 22, where it says:

No person who has reasonable cause to believe that any machine, device or thing in or about an industrial establishment is unsafe or in contravention of this Act or the regulation shall use or operate or cause or permit it to be used or operated.

The hon. Minister is aware of the situation that took place at Westinghouse last Friday, I believe it was, when 70 men walked out because one employee was trying to do a job that the rest felt was unsafe. The details I got were that he was to act as a “hooker-upper,” that is putting cables on heavy lifts on a crane and then the crane had to go down the shop over the heads of other workers; and it was because the load was going over the heads of other workers that they complained and because they did not get satisfaction they had walked out. The hon. Minister might comment on the results of it. This pointed out the discussion we had in relation to this section. What would happen in this case?

I understand they telegraphed the hon. Minister, and the department was to make an inspection to see who was to blame. This was after the walkout had taken place. So it does bring to our attention, when we raise these problems, that we have to look very closely at them to find out where we are going. I do not know what the results were of this walkout, but I would like the hon. Minister to comment on what should have happened in this case. Should the employees have done the job as the foreman said, and taken a chance of the load slipping and somebody getting hurt, or were they in order to walk out and not accept the suspension of the one employee?

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 1006 carried?

Mr. Gisborn: No, no! I want to carry on.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, we are still waiting for an answer on 1006.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: My information about the Westinghouse situation was that there was this alleged illegal walkout, arising from a work order to perform some work, which in the opinion of some people was unsafe. I think that is putting it fairly.

The company took a different view from the view expressed by those who organized the group connected with the walkout. Now, in any event, the matter was subsequently resolved, I presume, through the grievance procedure in the contract between the union and the company. My information is that the men are back at work.

I have an interim report on the matter, but it is not clear to give both sides of the question and I would think that, in fairness to both parties, I will just leave the comments there. I will be interested in following the matter up to see just what the actual facts were and what the return to work was based on.

Mr. Gisborn: I would like to make some comment on the subject that the hon. member for Nipissing raised, Mr. Chairman, the fatalities which happened in Sudbury. This is a question that is close to my heart because I have operated this particular type of machinery for some time. It was in regard to a crane with a 35-foot boom touching a high voltage wire, and the employee on the ground having hold of a cable attached to the crane, and of course the circuit went right down through and killed him.

It said in the report from the inquest—they quoted the operator as saying he knew the power should have been disconnected before starting to work under the wire. This was not done. He said he had repeatedly warned fellow workers not to touch any part of the machine while he was working close to the wires and had warned Mr. Liittela—the name of the deceased—only a moment before the accident.

I saw several identical cases to this in the past couple of years, fatalities through high boom cranes touching high voltage wires; in fact, three in Hamilton I believe, in the last two years. In each case, the inquest report emphasized the fact that someone should be responsible to see that the power was shut off in the immediate vicinity. Here, the operator knew it should be shut off but he went on working. Someone there should have had the authority to say that machine does not move until we are absolutely certain that the hydro wires are cut while we are going to do the work in this particular area.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What I do not understand is why the man went ahead with that himself.

Mr. Gisborn: That is the human element problem that the hon. Minister spoke about. He might have been told to go home if he had stopped the machine and the foreman came along. This is a question we have not yet cleared up in regard to this section, and I hope that we will get it clear to workmen that they should stop; but we will give them protection against disciplinary action as far as their employment goes.

He mentioned the fact that many are operating this equipment without licences, and this is also a fact. I know it might be a hard job to police, in regard to certificates, but something has got to be done, because the new types of hoisting equipment are not what we would call an easy type, or a safe type, of machine to operate. High speed, hydraulic—the least little touch of these hydraulic levers and they move quite quickly. They are quite different to the old-fashioned steam machines and I think our attention to people getting licences should be increased.

I would like to make some other comments regarding The Operating Engineers Act as to the need for training operators for these machines. When they had the steam machines there were always two men, one a fireman, because he had something to look after, the boiler and the firing of the machine. Now it is a one-man job in a sense but we are going to have to apply a lot of thought to this type of equipment inasmuch as it must be a two-man job for two factors—the safety, and the training to be eligible to get your certificate to be an operator. At the present time this is one of the problems; we are having men operate them without licences because they are not being trained in the proper way, and have not got the procedure to get up to be a licensed operator.

Vote 1006 agreed to.

On vote 1007:

Mr. Davison: Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss vote 1007.

Over the years I have hoped that the hon. Minister would see fit to include age in the human rights code. I would just like to point out a few of the facts. I wonder what would happen, in this province today, if we were to pick up the daily paper and see that 25 per cent of the jobs that were open had in there, "Do not apply if you are coloured." I think there would be an awful hue and cry in this province.

Here is a picture of a daily paper in Ontario and this is discrimination because of age. Everyone of those circles includes a job that one cannot get because there is an age limit on it.

I think it is time that we took a real serious look at this. This is something that has been brought up for the last four years. The former Prime Minister told us, sir, that the job that had to be done was an educational job. There has not been much of an educational job done because we are still getting newspaper advertisements of this type.

This not only happens in the cities but even in the small towns. I was down in the library the other day and I picked up a small-town newspaper; in fact it was my old home town newspaper in Orangeville. There was only one advertisement in there for employment, and that was for a carpenter, but it had an age limit: "Don't apply unless you are between 20 and 40 years old". This was for normal house-building.

Lately we have been hearing the story that one of the big remedies is that we have to have a pension plan. They are telling us that when we get a portable pension plan that maybe this will be cleared up—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Before the hon. member goes on, I am trying to follow him in this presentation but I gather in the house-building industry they try to select people between the ages of 20 and 40.

Mr. Bryden: And many other industries, as the hon. Minister knows.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But what I am coming to is that I do not understand this, because of this bonus, from the federal government, of $75 a month if you will hire anybody over 45 during the winter months.

Mr. Bryden: They are abandoning that now.

Mr. Davison: I am only explaining to the hon. Minister the advertisement that was in the paper, and if he wants to go down to the library he will see this advertisement.

But the two main things that have been brought up by this government are, first, that the public has to be educated. Now, the job certainly has not been done when we have 25 per cent of ads in newspapers still with age discrimination.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What newspaper is it?

Mr. Davison: This is the Globe and Mail of Toronto, dated Saturday, January 11, 1964, so it is a fairly recent newspaper. Lately we have had the story that if we get portable pensions in, that this will help to remedy the problem. The way the portable pension set-up is going right now, I would not know when we are going to get it, it does not look very promising. The federal government realized that this is a problem and is giving incentives to manufacturers to hire some of the older workers. This, no doubt, is helping to some extent. I think in nearly any manpower programme that is set up now they take a serious look at the older workers to see if some remedy cannot be found. Practically any time there is an educational seminar set up, one of the main problems is also the older workers. I think the time has come when we have to take a serious look at this main problem, because it is definitely one of the biggest problems with us today.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): What does the hon. member suggest then?

Mr. Bryden: Let us amend the Human Rights Code.

Mr. Davison: If they would even do that so there could not be discrimination because of age that would be one of the biggest helps. I have here—and this is from the Labour

Gazette of December, 1963—a piece about an American group, the W. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research, of Kalamazoo, Michigan, which has recently published a report called “The Impact of Technological Change”, the American experience. This report lists in the order of their importance the factors affecting displaced workers. Heading that list is age, followed by education, level of skill, sex and race.

For the last 20 years I have worked in industrial plants. Most of the unskilled jobs are starting to disappear. Most of the assembly lines where the older person was working are disappearing; most of these are being done away with as we get automation in. So, as time goes on, this is definitely more of a problem and I think the time has come when this government has to take a real serious look at at least trying to protect the older worker on the basis of discrimination because of age. It is going to hurt no one to have this in the Human Rights Code. As I say, for four years they have been stalling on this, and I think the time has come, and I hope the hon. Minister will have something to say on this.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The area covered by the Human Rights Code—we have discussed this in the House on other occasions—is an area which I do not think you attack by swinging an axe or a sledge hammer at all. We are on common ground when we refer to the need for education and a progressive programme to acquaint people with their duties and their obligations with respect to their fellow citizens. Accordingly, when against that premise the human rights commission has advanced its programme of investigating these complaints and of going to see the people, I think that is something for which the people of this province should be very proud. Since the human rights legislation was enacted we have had no prosecutions for offences, when matters have been brought to the attention of the offenders, and after an explanation. Let us be quite frank, in some instances the explanation has taken several meetings. But, in any event, either through these discussions between a field representative and the individuals concerned, or in the more extreme case where an inquiry has been directed where the alleged offending parties have been brought before the commissioner or a commissioner appointed, even in that situation the commissioner has been able to make progress and no prosecutions have resulted since the fall of 1962.

We have a long way to go, there is still much work to be done, there is ground to be covered. But I think that we are making good headway. It is not tortoise-speed headway either. We are making noticeable headway and we are getting co-operation from the citizens of this province. Quite frankly, when we get down to a subject of this nature and when people stop to think about it, we are finding that most people in this province are pretty responsible people. And the age issue is something that falls into this same situation. It is all right, Mr. Chairman, for the hon. member for York South to nod his head because I doubt if I handed him a gold brick on a platter it would ever satisfy him. We are making good headway in this field.

Mr. Bryden: Not on the question of discrimination.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, yes, we are. I just challenge the headway we are making in this province to be compared with any other jurisdiction in Canada.

Mr. Davison: The hon. Minister went on and explained about the Human Rights Code, but I would like to know does he himself feel that the time is coming when age discrimination will come in under the Human Rights Code?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I can visualize that, and I do.

Mr. Davison: Does the hon. Minister visualize it very shortly or—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, I think we have a further period in this area through which we must pass before that time comes.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Why?

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute, Mr. Chairman, let us sort out this difference that exists between the hon. Minister and me. He said that we have certain common ground when he was commenting on the comments of the hon. member for Hamilton East, namely that education is necessary. But, let's face it, this government passed that point ten years ago.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I doubt if we have passed it.

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute. Up until ten years ago, it was not against the law to discriminate, we were just educating. Then the point was reached where it was said: “Well, fine, we have educated enough, and from this point forward we are not only going to educate, but if you violate the law, you have to face the consequences." All we are suggesting is that there is no need for procrastination any further. If you have a page, from a paper such as the Globe and Mail, that is just dotted with violations in terms of discrimination on the basis of age, I suggest that the time has come when it should be made illegal. There may be no more prosecutions than you have on the basis of discrimination for the other violations under the Human Rights Code, because then people say, "Well, fine, I can't get away with it, I won't do it"—except in the rare case when you sit down and you plead with them, you will have to go through the same process as the hon. Minister indicates now exists for charges against other kinds of discrimination.

All we are arguing is that the time has long since passed when we need to just talk about these things. We should put it in the Act, and by the very fact of putting it in the Act, I venture the suggestion that that page of Globe and Mail advertisements would become a clean page. Only once every few months would there be somebody attempting to do this.

This proposal is not pioneering. New York state has had it for years and just to show you how far behind you are getting, even the Social Credit government in British Columbia, than which there are few more reactionary governments in the world—ask Davie Fulton, if you do not believe me—yesterday, according to a news story, introduced an amendment in which it is going to make it against the law to discriminate on the basis of age. We just ask the hon. Minister to catch up with Social Credit. Now, that surely is challenge enough.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is quite a challenge.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the topic of discrimination because of age is one that is found too commonly in my own area. Just last Saturday I had a fellow approach me—49 years of age—who had applied for work in one of the local industries and was told, "Well, you are just too old." I think the time has come when we have to write this in legislation and the time is now, and not later.

I would like to ask of the hon. Minister if the publications by the human rights commission are made in languages other than English and French.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Some of the publications of the commission have been published in as many as eight languages.

Mr. Newman: In eight other languages? Thank you.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there has been discussion with regard to an area of discrimination which has not yet been covered by the Human Rights Code—that is discrimination on account of age. I would like to associate myself with the comments of the hon. member for Hamilton East. But I would like now to turn to an area that is already covered by the Human Rights Code. I think it is section 5 of the code: Discrimination on account of sex.

I have a question on the order paper which, like all questions, never seems to be answered. I decided, however, that one can put these questions on the order paper and then, when the estimates come along, the hon. Minister can be considered to have been given due notice. So I am going to refer him to page 8 of today's order paper, question No. 3, standing in my name. There are five parts to it. To begin with, at any rate I will read only the first part. With regard to section 5—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I can give the hon. member the answer to the whole thing at once.

Mr. Bryden: Well, that is fine. Would you read out the questions while—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The question on the order paper has to do with section 5 of the Human Rights Code dealing with discrimination between male and female employees. How many complaints have been received? I am instructed that there have been none as to discrimination between the sexes. In many cases the commission was able to effect a settlement and the rest of the questions do not apply.

Mr. Bryden: All the rest of the question falls in view of the answer to question 1.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Apparently everybody is satisfied.

Mr. Bryden: Well, apparently everybody is not. What the hon. Minister means is that the question is a complete dead letter and is meaningless.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Now I ask: What does the hon. member mean by that?

Mr. Bryden: I will tell the hon. Minister what I mean by that if he will just wait. I will agree with the hon. Minister with regard to the first—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Just because legislation is effective does not mean that—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister has not got all this sex problem under control.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am suggesting that—

Mr. Bryden: I know what the hon. Minister was going to say. He was going to say that the fact that there are no prosecutions means they are doing a wonderful job. It may also be that if there are no complaints, a wonderful job is being done.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: And everybody is satisfied. Let us leave it.

Mr. Bryden: Well I am ready to leave that phase of it, but I would like to get back to what I started.

I do not know what surveys the hon. Minister conducted, Mr. Chairman, but, as far as I am concerned, I want to consider only section 5 of the Ontario Human Rights Code.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is sex again.

Mr. Bryden: I will agree with what he said a moment or two ago—that the work of the human rights commission with regard to sections 1 to 4, inclusive, has been excellent work. I think one can say that very great progress has been made in that field. I do not suppose that we will ever achieve the situation of perfection where there is no discrimination, but we are certainly making progress. There are one or two sections of the code that I would like to see improved, such as the one relating to accommodation; but by and large I will agree with the hon. Minister that tremendous progress has been made in that field in the last ten years.

I am on the point of suggesting to him, however, that section 5 for all the good it is doing, might as well not be in the Act. I am rather interested to note—I have noted it before in this House—that in that certificate or diploma-looking affair that the government has published and distributed very widely, which is a reproduction of the Human Rights Code without the enforcement section, the government is so lacking in pride about section 5—or so ashamed of it; I do not know what the reason is—it just does not bother to include it as one of the human rights that are protected. The certificate stops with section 4. It does not include the enforcement sections, and I would agree that that is not necessary, but I should think the forms of discrimination which are declared to be contrary to public policy should have all been reproduced.

Mr. MacDonald: It is one of the hon. Minister's mistakes.

Mr. Bryden: Section 5, however, has not been reproduced. I think the omission is valid; the section means nothing; there has not been a single complaint under it, but not because there has not been all sorts of discrimination as between male and female employees in this province. That is not the reason. The reason there have been no complaints is because the section is unenforceable. There is a joker in it. This complaint was raised when that legislation was first enacted as a separate statute—it must be close to 15 years ago, long before all this legislation was consolidated into the Human Rights Code.

The section provides that there shall be no discrimination as between male and female employees who are doing the same work in the same establishment; and the slightest variation in the kinds of work done, as between male and female employees, makes the section inapplicable. When this legislation was first before the House, it was suggested that the phrasing should be similar to the phrasing in United States' statutes—it should be men and women, or male and female employees, doing work of substantially the same nature, or of a similar nature. Some such wording as that. As soon as the word "same" is put in the section becomes unenforceable.

This law has been in effect—in the Human Rights Code and in the legislation that preceded it—for pretty close to 15 years I would venture to suggest; and yet, according to the answer the hon. Minister just gave me, there has never been a complaint in all those 15 years.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, no, no! I would not say that.

Mr. Bryden: I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I said since the passage of The Ontario Human Rights Bill in 1962.

Mr. Bryden: Well then, in two years there have not been any complaints and I will bet, if the hon. Minister checks back on his records—I agree my question only asks about that period so naturally that is all he would answer—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think there had been complaints before then—

Mr. Bryden: I would doubt it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Since the fall of 1962? Are you saying there have not been any complaints, which would therefore indicate an improvement in the situation?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I would suggest that the hon. Minister might—I would not want to put his department to any trouble, but just for his own satisfaction I suggest he might—look back into the previous history. I am willing to bet there have not been any complaints since the original Act was passed; and if there have, they have been mighty few, and I would like to know what the disposition of them was. However, I would suggest to the hon. Minister that this, like the—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think maybe I should make the record clear. Prior to 1962, there had been a very substantial number of complaints—something, within recent memory, of more than 100.

Mr. Bryden: On this question of discrimination on account of sex?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. Bryden: Well, perhaps the hon. Minister will bring the exact figure in because—well, I will tell him now, I am going to put a question on the order paper to find out what happened in some of those cases. I still suggest—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Maybe next time I had better not answer the hon. member's question. In other words, it is obvious there has been an improvement in this situation.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I do not think there has been very much improvement from my observation and I am suggesting to the hon. Minister that the section as it reads is very difficult to enforce, and could be much more readily enforced if a slight change were made in the wording. I will not press the matter, but I am interested in finding out about the experience prior to the consolidation in the Human Rights Code. I will not expect the hon. Minister to produce an immediate answer but perhaps at some opportunity he can give me the information.

Vote 1007 agreed to.

On vote 1008:

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, are questions on workmen's compensation in order under this vote?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We are going to deal with it after the votes.

Mr. Nixon: Under no vote at all?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Under no vote. I might say under this vote 1008, which is called a capital item, that we do not have capital as such in this department. It is payment of claims, payment out of the cashing of vacations-with-pay books, and we owe that much money, and we need the legislative authority to pay the money—

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, under this vote, payment of claims made on vacations-with-pay stamps. I want to thank the hon. Minister very much, for last year under these estimates I asked him if he would do something about a resident of my riding who had lost his vacations-with-pay stamp book in 1960; and, finally, when this hon. Minister came to the department, we got action. I want to thank you and your deputy Ministers that had anything to do with it.

Vote 1008 agreed to.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, if there are no further questions on 1008, I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister the difficulties that the agricultural community is experiencing in working with the—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Is 1008 passed?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, it is.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Right.

Mr. Nixon: —in working with the workmen's compensation board. I do not mean to imply a lack of co-operation, but the fact that the farm workers are not covered to any degree in the province is a very serious matter and one which you and your colleague, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), should be considering seriously.

It has come to my attention that many farmers who employ labour look after their personal responsibility in this regard by buying certain types of insurance which will assume their liability if court cases indicate that they are liable if an accident occurs. Surely this is not sufficient protection for the workers concerned. The worker, if he is injured in a farming accident, and if he is going to collect under these circumstances, has to go through the involvement of a court case and get a judgment against his employer before he can get any assistance.

It is true that the agricultural community is exempted from the obligatory requirements, but it seems to me that co-operation between The Department of Labour and The Department of Agriculture would go far toward extending this coverage into the farm community. I would like to hear his comments on it, particularly since an editorial in the Rural Co-operator today indicates that there is a policy in the workmen's compensation board that really discourages the involvement of farmers.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, the question of the inclusion or otherwise of persons engaged in agriculture under the provisions of the Act is to me a very important one and it is a matter which, during the past year, the hon. Minister of Agriculture and I have discussed on numerous occasions, including as recently as this morning.

This is a matter where the need for the coverage and the protection that compensation laws provide for injured agricultural workers looms large in my mind. I find it rather distressing to discover and be informed of numerous accidents in agriculture where there is neither an accident insurance policy nor is there compensation.

I do not want the hon. members to miss anything, because I have been waiting for this moment all day. If I might digress for a moment, we have a lot of criticisms from the other side of the House directed over here. We do not mind that sort of thing, but in looking at the hon. members of the Opposition parties, Mr. Chairman, we find one party jumping up and competing with another co-worker for the floor, and similarly, hasty consultation, even consultations across that aisle. It seems to me that one of the things in this session that I would like to ask, through you, Mr. Chairman, is this: In view of all we see on this side of the House, would the real leader of the Opposition now please stand up.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister of Labour to have noted that the hon. member for Eglinton leaned across the aisle and asked me a question a moment ago and I was glad to answer it. Now let him not draw any hasty conclusions—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member is excited. I was—

Mr. MacDonald: I am not excited. I just wanted to give the hon. Minister a few facts.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: —with a tilt to the south.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is tilting to the south. Now what was he going to say before he interrupted himself?

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member for York South tell you that I hurriedly replaced myself, and got back in the position where I wanted to be.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, but with a bit more information than he had before.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, coming back to this matter, and it is an important one, there are conflicting views on this subject. The coverage under The Workmen's Compensation Act is available but the fact is that it is not being taken advantage of.

Mr. Nixon: The reason it has not been taken advantage of is that because the coverage is so slight, involving just a few farmers, that the rates are extraordinarily high. It is only the farmers who are carrying on a risky operation who have this coverage. I think the rates were extraordinarily high.

Mr. MacDonald: In fact, how many are there now?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The rate at the moment is $4.50 per $100 of wages paid.

Mr. MacDonald: How many are there in that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: At the moment 1,900 farmers come under The Workmen's Compensation Act. But it would be helpful to me and the government in dealing with this matter, and particularly in my department, and certainly the board since Mr. Sparrow, the chairman of the board is here with me, if the hon. member for Brant could state his views. Does he advocate coverage on a mandatory basis?

Mr. Nixon: I do not advocate the coverage on a mandatory basis, but I do think that if your department, The Department of Labour, co-operated with The Department of Agriculture and went out on a real selling programme, from township to township, they could cover 95 per cent of the farmers involved and bring the rate down to within a few dollars of what the ordinary insurance is that the farmers are now getting, which offers very little coverage to the workers concerned.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Organized agriculture does not ask for this. I put it to the hon.

member, I am not arguing with him, I am just putting the situation to him.

Mr. Nixon. My neighbours on the farm have asked me to bring this up and I have done this. I am asking for the hon. Minister's views. He is the responsible Minister and I am asking for his views.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would think that if a greater number of farm people participated under the plan that the rate would come down—

Mr. Nixon: We think it would too.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Wait now, that the rate would come down, probably, I said, but not necessarily. I have to tell the hon. member that, it is a matter of actuarial fact.

Mr. Nixon: And the department has made no investigation about this?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, yes, these are our findings and this is—

Mr. Nixon: It might, but not necessarily; is this the actuarial finding?

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That is a very good finding.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is a good finding because it reflects the truth of the situation.

Mr. Nixon: And the flexibility of the hon. Minister's attitude on the thing.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We are open-minded about this thing completely, but I am surprised the hon. member does not take a more definitive position in the matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I will suggest some definitive action because we have discussed this every year for about four or five years before the committee on agriculture and we got nowhere. We are right where we are now, with something like 1,900 farmers in the whole of the province of Ontario coming under The Workmen's Compensation Act. I would suggest to the government that it should do one of two things, either do something about it or get out of it. Nineteen hundred farmers being covered by workmen's compensation is nothing in terms of what is required.

The basic problem that the hon. Minister faces, and this we have thrashed through in the committee on agriculture, is that because the number covered has been reduced to such a low level, the rate has become so high that now the department is caught in a vicious circle; it cannot build its numbers up.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister that there are one or two solutions to it, either the solution that the hon. member for Brant has suggested—that you have, in conjunction with the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, a real drive to promote workmen's compensation, which is a definitive solution—either that or alternatively—

Now, my problem is to get the attention of the hon. Minister while he is talking to his colleague; we all have this problem.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No. I am listening to the hon. member; I am reading his lips.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh? I have not given the hon. Minister my alternative yet.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: As a matter of fact they come over here loud and clear.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if the hon. Minister would just be seated until I give the alternative.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I just like to keep the debate going in the spirit in which the hon. member is raising it. The fact is that the workmen's compensation board carried out a programme of interest to the people in the rural communities, the farmers, in participating under the compensation legislation; and I believe the present hon. Minister of Agriculture was also connected with that movement, Mr. Chairman, and they drew what amounted to a blank. And it was a genuine, sincere effort, covering the entire problem.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I hate to get into an argument with the hon. Minister, particularly when he is in such a genial mood, but if an intensive job was done by the workmen's compensation board, I would judge that the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, which has its ear fairly close to the ground on this issue, has not heard about it. Because each time we discuss this, each year before the committee on agriculture, this is the problem as it has been raised. I know that on occasion the workmen's compensation board look into this; they should look into it. Because, I repeat, it has got down to only 1,900 farmers being covered. The department should either get out, or get in and do the job, one or the other.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, we do not move in such an extreme way as that.

Mr. MacDonald: It does not move, period.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Now, just a moment. The hon. member wants us to move to take the benefit away from the 1,900. Let me tell the hon. member this: There was a man in the field for three years; he did nothing but promulgate information, meet groups of farmers, associations and that kind of thing. This was the situation, it was a genuine effort. And I tell the hon. member that; so when he says they are withdrawn when they are not, I think that is not a factual position. Because we want anybody who wants to enjoy the provisions of this Act, who wishes to, to opt into it.

Mr. MacDonald: One of the hon. Minister's colleagues to the left here is suggesting that I want it to become compulsory. May I say that I do not suggest it be compulsory, so that he will be satisfied for a moment since he is interjecting and muttering over here.

Now, let us come back to it. I suggest there is one of two alternatives: Either you have a really intensive kind of campaign—and it must be intensive enough so that it is effective, to get something other than 1,900 farmers—I do not know what the number of farmers now in the province of Ontario is—but 1,900 is certainly a very small number. Or, alternatively—and this may be the only alternative—for a time the government must be willing to subsidize this to get the price down so it is at least competitive with what the insurance companies are now offering. Because, at the moment, the government is licked by the insurance companies. I was talking with somebody in connection with the farmers' union, and he is one of the provincial council of the farmers' union, who said, "I would not buy workmen's compensation because I can get it cheaper from one of the insurance companies". This is the problem.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is not the same coverage, and the two situations are not comparable. In a debate like this it is easy to say one can get insurance cheaper, but what does one get in relation to what one gets out of the compensation board? In any insurance policy there are time limits on treatment and extended treatment; and the limits, and all that sort of thing, frankly, are quite different from the benefits available under the Act.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I would say this: I know of no group which is more canny in terms of assessing what they are getting for their dollar than the farmers; and I find it a little strange that they will be buying from a private insurance company if they get a better deal from the workmen's compensation board. The hon. Minister asked for a definitive suggestion and I am offering it to him for his—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, I was speaking to the farmer member.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister was putting it to him?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: We have farms in York South, we have little backyards where we plant vegetables.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): They have a special rate then, as vegetable farmers.

Mr. MacDonald: Have they? I would suggest the definitive answer is the government should have either a successful promotion job to get a significant number of farmers in to build a base so that it can get its rates down; or, alternatively, it should subsidize it to get its rates down so that it can encourage farmers to come in. And in that fashion it will build your base—one or the other.

However, Mr. Chairman, I do not necessarily know; I am just casting a few ideas.

Mr. Nixon: I want to ask a question, Mr. Chairman, just before we leave this and I quote from the latest issue of the Rural Co-operator, an article by Miss Corinne Hughson:

In recent years the workmen's compensation board has discouraged individual farmers who apply for coverage for themselves and their employees.

Would the hon. Minister comment on that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, the present definition in the Act involves the farmer as an employer. Therefore he starts with a hired hand and at that stage he can include himself in; so therefore there is a platform, if I might describe it as such, of the farmer himself plus one employee to form a basic or starting unit.

Mr. Nixon: Has the workmen's compensation board discouraged that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That compares with the same situation in the logging industry where the operator must have one employee.

Mr. Nixon: I still do not feel that the question has been answered. Is it the policy of the board to discourage farmers applying? If it is illegal or is not in the regulations for individual farmers, that is a different thing, but is the hon. Minister discouraging the extension?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am instructed by the chairman of the board that no discouragement is directed toward any applicant, and to the contrary.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, last year during the debate on Bill No. 83, an amendment to The Workmen's Compensation Board Act, the then member for Oshawa asked a question of the hon. Minister about the number of persons put on 66½ per cent and 55 per cent. At the time, the hon. Minister did not have the information and, later, it was the same member who repeated it when the estates of the department were up. And I do not see anywhere in Hansard that the information was given. Did the hon. Minister give it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There are 478 pensioners at the 55 per cent rate and there are 4,700 at the 66½ per cent rate.

Mr. Troy: And at the same time, Mr. Chairman, while we were on that same debate on Bill No. 83, I presented the plight of those who had been injured years ago, some with either one leg or both legs amputated, and I asked the hon. Minister to consider this problem. I noticed in the report of 1954, of the Honourable Mr. Justice Roach, that he referred in his section to increased compensation in respect of past accidents, and he had recommended then that additional monies, necessary to provide the increase in compensation, should come out of the consolidated revenue fund. I know the hon. Minister was quite sympathetic last year when we discussed this problem.

I wonder if any decision has been made by the hon. Minister. I know—at least, I do not know, but I have been informed—that the province of New Brunswick has increased the percentage. Is the hon. Minister considering, and the government considering, amendments to The Workmen's Compensation Act this year to take care of situations of that nature?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am familiar with the matter to which he makes reference. The government has before it presently the amendment to the compensation Act, and tonight I am not in any position to tell the hon. member what action will be taken on this particular point. The point is before us.

Mr. Troy: I thank the hon. Minister. In The War Veterans' Allowance Act, consideration is—that is the federal Act—for common-law wives; they are considered as wives under the Act and, if necessary conditions are met, they come under the same privileges as wives. So will there be any provision for the common-law wife?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think, in the spirit in which we are discussing this matter, having in mind the fact that the amendment to this particular legislation has yet to be brought down, if I answered the question in these terms it might give some indication to the hon. member I have spent a very considerable time being instructed as to the merits and demerits of common-law wives, and the allowances as to which they might or might not be entitled when common-law husbands suffer injury or be otherwise incapacitated.

Mr. Troy: Well, as long as that particular problem is being considered, because certainly the federal government has accepted its responsibility in that regard for the common-law wife, and even now it has been brought under The Pension Act—rather we are seeking it under The Pension Act as well as under The War Veterans' Allowance Act—so I think it certainly should come under this Act, too.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are two other points in connection with workmen's compensation that I wanted to raise. One is to renew a plea which has been made fairly regularly in this House. I hoped that it would have been covered in the amendments to the Act last year but it was not. It is to cope with the situation involved in what seems to me to be a growing range of accidents where there is not an actual organic injury, where you cannot fix on a specific time and place when an accident took place. I have two cases before me that I just want to illustrate for purposes of raising it in the House at the present time. One is a case that we have discussed with the hon. Minister's officials in the workmen's compensation board for a considerable length of time. It involves a miner in Timmins who when he started working in the mine, was conceded by everyone to have had normal hearing. After he had worked in the mine his hearing had been seriously injured. Nobody suggests that there is any other place where he could have sustained this damage to his hearing but in the mine, and yet because there is not a specific time and place that can be fixed, he is not compensable.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Still not compensable.

Mr. MacDonald: Still not compensable, yes.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: In connection with the medical report that the hon. member for York South is talking about, is it not a fact that it has been shown to him that the medical reports indicate that this man could not have suffered any type of injury to his hearing and there is nothing wrong with his hearing, except that it is a nervous condition? I know of the case—I have forgotten the man's name—but I know the case well and I was fortunate enough when the gentleman came into my office to tell me about his problems that there was a man in the office who was a miner of 30 years' experience. I called this man into my private office so that he—my friend, the other miner—would be able to give me—I have never worked underground in a mine—some information as to what this man's problem was. He said, "Mister, I have worked in the mines for over 30 years and it is absolutely impossible for this man to have suffered the injury that he claims to have suffered in any kind of an accident involving the particular work that he was doing at the time he claims to have been injured." But the evidence—the medical evidence—seems to be quite complete that it is a medical condition, not an accident condition at all.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not going to get into a continuation of this argument. This has been going on for quite some time.

Let me give the hon. members another case. In another context I will come back to the whole situation with the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond). I do not know why the hon. Minister of Health always gets drawn in on these labour situations—but some while ago he received from Sarnia a brief with regard to injuries received by people who work in the Dow Chemical Company, as a result of mercury poisoning—I do not know whether this is the correct technical term. Apparently they have not been able to get satisfaction from The Department of Health with regard to adequate inspection. It is laughed off by the department, and my information is that if it is not laughed off by the department, it is certainly laughed off by the management of the company.

However, that is not the point at the moment. Here is another case, in which they state specific instances of people who are seriously disabled today; so badly disabled that they have been demoted from where they were working to doing minor janitorial jobs, all because of this mercury poisoning. This is not compensable. My general plea is that quite apart from the dispute we have on this instance here, that if you do not happen to have a specific injury at a specific time that can be nailed down—an organic injury that does not qualify as a compensable case under workmen's compensation—it seems to me that a degree of flexibility has got to be introduced. Beyond any shadow of doubt, apart from the Couture case that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs is disputing with me, there are cases where people suffer injury while on the job and they still cannot get compensation.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What was the date of the Couture incident?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: About two and a half years ago.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: And the situation, I take it, would be at the Dow Chemical—

Hon. Mr. Spooner: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It would be of equal length, a year or more? I will tell you, why I ask is this: The definition clause covering the word "accident" was extended last year, but the extension of the meaning of the word "accident" would not be applicable until the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor gave consent last spring and also would not be retroactive to cover accidents or incidents at this place prior to that time. It will only cover them from the date that the definition of the word "accident" was extended.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. Minister suggesting that that case would now be covered if it had not been for that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am.

Mr. MacDonald: What about—the mercury poisoning case would be covered?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am suggesting that the definition under section 1(a)3 now reads:

This accident includes disablement arising out of and in the course of employment.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I could go back and argue the Couture case but I do not think we are going to get anywhere on it. If the hon. Minister is, in effect, saying that there is now a flexibility of interpretation possible here, I should be interested to explore why it does not cover the kind of cases such as the mercury poisoning in Dow Chemical at Sarnia. Perhaps we can do that before we get to the health estimates.

There is one other situation with regard to workmen's compensation that I would like to raise. I think we in the province of Ontario, despite a rather persistent flow of complaints that comes to every member regarding the treatment one gets at workmen's compensation board, have reason to be proud of it. I think it is one of the best compensation boards in the world and I say that notwithstanding the fact that undoubtedly some of my own constituents and some of my own supporters will come in and really try to put me on the mat on the issue because of their particular experience.

The reason why the compensation board on occasion gets an unfavourable reputation in the minds of the workers, is because of arbitrary action and I want to bring one such act to the attention of the House. The hon. Minister knows this, in fact I tried to talk to him on the phone and he went into orbit. The launching pads at Cape Kennedy had nothing to match his going into orbit as soon as I mentioned the name of the case. It is the Talbot case.

This is a case—and I will just give this brief background to the House to indicate that I recognize it is a very mixed situation—of a person who came before a compensation doctor. He contends that there were extenuating circumstances. He had taken an overdose of pills and he was very nervous and he struck the doctor. He was charged with assault and he was brought before a magistrate out in Willowdale. He was convicted and he was fined $25.

I have just two comments to make at this point in the story. One is, he was brought before a magistrate and he was convicted, so that whatever fault that he was guilty of, he had suffered the consequences. The second thing I conclude is that if it was as bad as I am sometimes led to believe by the compensation board, I would think that he would have suffered something more than $25 consequences. In fact, however, there was no suggestion of further damages in magistrate's court.

I know the legal officers on the compensation board say the judgment should have been a lot rougher. There are many occasions when I think decisions by the courts should have been different than they are; but in our society, you either accept the decision of the court or you appeal it, one or the other.

I now come to the point. Having isolated that, having agreed that Talbot was a difficult case, having said that many of his actions were indefensible, what happened was that he had—beyond any shadow of doubt—$1,500 in claims. The board decides in its wisdom, arbitrarily, that the doctor may sometime later want to lay a claim against Talbot and so they arbitrarily say they are going to withhold $1,200 of the money to which even the board concedes Talbot is entitled.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think the doctor was injured in the assault, was he not?

Mr. MacDonald: He was injured in the assault, I agree, but—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: $25 was only one item. The doctor was beaten up.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. Right.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Is not that the right language? The doctor was beaten up.

Mr. MacDonald: He was assaulted. That is what he was charged with, assault. Let not the hon. Minister go into orbit again.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, but this is the truth, the fact.

Mr. MacDonald: Agreed. But what I want the hon. Minister to face up to is: I want to find out what legal right the board has, when a man is entitled to $1,500, to arbitrarily decide that $1,200 of that $1,500 is going to be withheld from him. It was an arbitrary decision to begin with. The figure they chose was arbitrary, and to my knowledge he has not yet got it. Now, how do you explain or defend that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Now I am speaking somewhat from memory, but my recollection of the principle that was involved is this: The doctor who was injured is an employee of the workmen's compensation board itself and he has compensation, which he drew—in whatever degree, I do not know the details—but he drew benefits from the board itself. The board then becomes subrogated to his rights and the board has the right to recover from the wrongdoer, which in this case happened to be a man with a credit to his account in the same board. So it is a matter of cross-entry and cross-claim.

It is an unusual set of circumstances. I know of no other. I doubt if we would run into one in ten years like this. But here, the doctor who was injured himself drew compensation benefits from the board. The board became subrogated to his rights and have a claim against the first worker.

Mr. MacDonald: Are the doctors who are working for the board covered by workmen's compensation by the board?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: They are staff employees and, I am instructed, are covered.

Mr. MacDonald: So that your legal contention is that you could withhold that $1,200 because you might ultimately have to pay it out?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is my instruction. That is the instruction that has been given to me about the point. As a matter of fact, I think the case is before the courts on another issue at the moment.

Mr. MacDonald: It definitely is before the courts?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is a writ out on the matter.

Mr. MacDonald: When was the writ issued?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, this is rather interesting because I think there has been a lot of waffling and suggesting of issuing a writ—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, no waffling at all. None at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Actually, the doctor was off work for only two weeks.

However, I come back to the general proposition. One can argue the legal points of this, and I am not a lawyer, and therefore I am not on home base in arguing legal points, but I am on home base when I say to the hon. Minister that if he wants to cease injuring the board in the minds of workers who have had association with the compensation board, he should not indulge in this kind of arbitrary act.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Does the hon. member want us to breach the Act governing the conduct of the board and the handling of the funds and the eligibility of claims, or does he want the compensation board to comply with the Act? I take it he is asking me to direct the board to breach the Act and pay claims so that certain people will not get annoyed. Analyze it. Is that not what he is saying?

Mr. MacDonald: No. Since the hon. Minister is asking me I will tell him what I am saying. This man was entitled to $1,500 and

I think he should have got it. This is a new explanation that the department had to compensate the doctor. To my knowledge I had not heard it up until now. The argument up until now was that this man could not really be trusted, and if he had taken the $1,500 the board would never be able to get it back.

This may or may not be true, but that the board has a legal right to withhold the money to which the man is entitled—to arbitrarily decide it is going to withhold that $1,200—I suggest to the hon. Minister is a questionable proposition.

Mr. Davison: Mr. Chairman, I have one question I would like to ask the hon. Minister. I understand they are bringing in some amendments to the compensation board. I will tell him one of the problems we are running into now and see if there is any remedy to it.

In the Hamilton area in the last few weeks, I have had three cases, one from Ontario Hydro and two from Hamilton Hydro, where employees have been hurt and paid compensation. When they were able to go back to work and take light jobs on doctors' orders—in the one case with Hamilton Hydro—the superintendent said, "Yes, the job is here, you can come back. I can give you a light job." But the personnel manager told the worker there was no job for him. But this happened to two men. Another was a fellow, who was burned, in a compensation case in Hamilton.

I am wondering if the compensation board puts any pressure on the companies, or the industries, to take these people back to some type of light work. Certainly in the case of two of these fellows now, it is definitely hard for them to get other type of work because they are permanently injured. They are still getting partial compensation but at the place where they were originally hurt they have just been told there is no job for them there.

Does the compensation board try to convince the companies they should take these people back and find light work for them, or are they just left out on their own?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I suppose the fact is that in this area we are faced with a problem of trying to educate and get co-operation from a group of recalcitrant employers, because I would think, and it has always been my understanding, that the sooner you can get a man who has had an accident back on his feet and back into some form of occupational therapy, which might include work itself, the better it is for him all around.

I would think, Mr. Chairman, that cases like this would have to be considered on their individual merits. I suppose most of them differ as to the facts and circumstances.

I can see an hiatus there in the sense that if the compensation board doctor certified him as fit for some form of light work and he went back and the company doctor said, "No," or the company, through some official, said, "No, you cannot work. You are not fit for another two or three days," then you would have a gap, and there might be a lessening, on the part of the board, of his compensation. I would think that the principle the hon. member raises has a lot of merit, and merits some careful consideration as to just where the impact falls.

Mr. Davison: I would just like to point out, in these two cases of Hamilton Hydro, both these fellows now have other types of jobs, both very poor-paying jobs. They have no opportunity of going back to Hamilton Hydro at all. I think this is even worse than having to wait a few weeks and then go back.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am quite interested in that point and I would be glad to have a look at it myself and discuss it with the compensation board.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, are students engaged in the Canadian vocational training programme, and their instructors, eligible for workmen's compensation?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The instructors are, but the students are not as yet. They are not workmen per se.

Mr. Newman: Is the government giving any consideration to including them?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, they are not workmen within the concept of compensation legislation. They are students.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of The Department of Labour.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, I never miss an opportunity to speak on compensation and I would not want to be cut off at this stage of the game. I have heard—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Get on with the question.

Mr. Bukator: Well, I do not know that I have to take any instructions from the hon.

Minister. He should mind his own business and I will mind mine. I think I am here to do a service for my constituents and I think I am entitled to ask questions, so the hon. Minister should not tell me when I should or how I should; that is not his department.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I feel terrible.

Mr. Bukator: I think the hon. Minister should.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I feel terribly bad. I was trying to co-operate with the hon. member, that is all.

Mr. Bukator: I do not consider that co-operation. No, not a nickel's worth. I have sat here and listened to the hon. Minister of Labour insult us on this side of the House—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bukator: As for intelligence, I sometimes wonder whether any intelligence comes out of the hon. member for Woodbine. I have read Hansard a bit and I cannot make him out.

Mr. MacDonald: Ask your question and get on with it.

Mr. Bukator: Oh, do not push.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, I do not like this business. There should be order when I get on my feet.

Mr. Chairman: Let the speaker ask his questions.

Mr. Bukator: I would like to get back to the subject. Did the hon. Minister say that the workmen's compensation board has broadened its compensation to people who have been injured such as, let us say, heart attacks on the job?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Bukator: What was it that the hon. Minister read out of that particular booklet that he had before him pertaining to a man being disabled?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I read section 1, the definitive section of the Act, including the re-definition of the word "accident".

Mr. Bukator: I see. It is rather confusing but I will accept that for the time being.

How about the gentleman who lifts a chesterfield, let us say, and gets a hernia through that particular effort? If he can prove he slipped or something to that effect, he will get paid, is that right?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, if it is in the course of his employment. I assume, because of the circumstances to which the hon. member refers, that he would be in the house furnishings moving business, and lifting would have been part of his work and the injury would have arisen through his employment; then he would be eligible for compensation.

Mr. Bukator: There are cases where men have been ruptured on a job by lifting and they have not received workmen's compensation.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Where the statement of the hon. member would be valid would be where the claimant had not proved or established evidence that the act caused the injury complained of.

Mr. Bukator: It all depends on who tells the story. Your experts investigate, I realize that. And after they make a settlement—recently they settled with a man, who was totally disabled, for some $22 a month. Is this the customary thing or are they entitled to two-thirds of their pay if they are totally disabled?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, I do not know where the hon. member gets his information, but the basis of settlement may be tested against the maximum awards available which are 75 per cent of the person's earnings or wage rate, up to a wage rate of $6,000 a year. So that a total disability would involve payments by the board of $4,500 a year. That is, based on $6,000. Now a partial disability would be a percentage of $4,500 in that case; or if a man were earning $4,000, it would be 75 per cent of $4,000, or $3,000, and a percentage of that, whatever the partial disability was rated at.

Mr. Bukator: Well, I know of a case where a man collected $22 a month. He is supposed to be totally disabled and I do not know how he can live on that amount of money.

The hon. Minister has been complimentary here tonight to the workmen's compensation board. I cannot go along with that type of reasoning. I have found in many instances—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I did not hear what the hon. member said at the start.

Mr. Bukator: I said the hon. Minister has been complimentary, or someone was complimentary, to the workmen's compensation board but I do not go along with that wholeheartedly. I think in many cases people have to wait much too long for their money, for their settlement; and then there are cases when they have come to a settlement but their cheque does not come through for them. A year ago I think something like 270,000 or 280,000 cases were handled through the workmen's compensation board here in Toronto. I understand, according to the record, that some 6,000 people were not satisfied with what happened to them, about two per cent.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is a small percentage factor but it does not total 6,000 by any means.

Mr. Bukator: It does not total 6,000?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No.

Mr. Bukator: But it is still about two per cent, from what I gathered from the report of a year ago.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It was a low percentage figure.

Mr. Bukator: Well, 6,000 people in the province of Ontario being not too well treated—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, I said it was not 6,000.

Mr. Bukator: Well, then. I might add another thought to what has already been said. I believe that in industrial areas, such as we have in the Niagara peninsula and other parts of the province, there should be regional offices where people can be treated quickly and get their settlement very fast—much quicker than they get it now anyhow. When a man is sick in bed, and finds himself without funds, in many instances he has to borrow to maintain his family until the workmen's compensation board decides to make some kind of settlement and sends him his cheque. I do not think this is the way people should be treated.

I have said this here before, and I say it again to the hon. Minister now, that people who are injured—and I do not know the length of time which has to elapse before any money comes into that house, but there are many cases where the people do not get their money until such a time comes that they are nervous wrecks, through the thought that they are in bed and there is no money coming in and no one is taking care of their problem—should have a regional office which would bring this settlement about much quicker. I would hope the day will come when the workmen's compensation board will handle their problems similar to the unemployment insurance offices, that they would have offices in areas, industrial areas, where people can get their treatment and get it fast, and get their settlement and the money to which they are entitled. I do not believe that the workmen's compensation board is paying enough.

I realize that you assess the employer two per cent or four per cent, whatever the case might be, as his fee. I am not one to burden the employer to that extent, but it needs to be a little bit more percentage-wise to assist these people while they are disabled. It is something they should have, and are entitled to. There is not sufficient money coming into a home to maintain that home and maintain that man's family at the amounts the workmen's compensation board hands out, and I realize that it is public funds. I think you should upgrade that amount of money until they get back on their feet again.

The other point I want to make as forcibly as I know how, is that I do not believe the workmen's compensation board settle their cases, Mr. Chairman, as quickly as they might if they had regional offices.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, if I might add one remark that is complimentary to the workmen's compensation board. In my area—which is a heavily industrialized area—a tremendous number of these claimants come to me asking my assistance to have claims settled. When I take them up—

An hon. member: Where is that?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I do not have to mention it, surely, an enormous part of this province—the great Northwest. I am not being facetious or joking at all; I am serious. I have had the greatest co-operation from the compensation board. As Mr. Sparrow will tell you, in the great number of cases I have eventually taken to him, I have had the greatest satisfaction.

True, all these cases do not qualify for compensation, and there is not the amount of money paid that we would like to see, but I would say on an average the workmen's compensation is doing a great humanitarian job in this province and we are ahead of any other place I know of in the world. The hon. members can check on that and see if that is not a correct statement. So, I just wish to add my compliments, Mr. Chairman, to the workmen's compensation board and say that I have had a great deal of satisfaction in dealing with it.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Mr. Chairman, I might say that I have had several compensation cases, and as my hon. friend has mentioned, often when I checked with the workmen's compensation board, I found that these doctors had not sent their reports in, which caused delay. We have many of those. It is not really the fault of the workmen's compensation board, it is the fault of some of the doctors. They do not send their forms in completed.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Just a final word on this. I think we have to bring some finality to the debate. Each claim must, of course, be determined on its own merits. The figures still stand. I have not got them for 1963 as yet, but they will run to about 290,000 incidents that might give rise to claims. About 290,000 actual items are handled by the board during the year and of that number, probably 72,000 or 73,000 end up as being compensable. Every effort is made. This board is equipped with the most modern machinery, electronic equipment, and so on, to deal with these matters quickly, because it recognizes, as does the government, that people are dependent on the cheques for their subsistence. I would record this, that of all of the claims that are compensable involving the payment of money, 92 per cent receive cheques within three weeks of the date of the accident.

Mr. Troy: I have one last question, Mr. Chairman. I notice, in reading Mr. Justice Roach's report, that I think there was a review of the Act in 1932 and one in 1954. I think it was recommended that this Act should be reviewed, as in other jurisdictions, every five years. What is the hon. Minister's last comment on that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is reviewed every year, in fact.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. members, this definitely concludes the estimates of The Department of Labour.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves that the committee of supply rise and report it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, before you give up your chair, would it not be desirable to draw attention to the attire of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) since his return from dinner and the resemblance it has to the attire worn by a man of another political belief in Ottawa?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Shocking as it may seem, it bears a resemblance to one of the hon. Minister's own colleagues in the Cabinet. All I would like to inform the hon. Minister is that, since dinner, the revolution has come and gone.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House I would like to state that on Thursday the estimates of The Department of Insurance, followed by the estimates of The Department of Health, will be considered.

Hon. Mr. Cass moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.00 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, February 20, 1964
Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Thursday, February 20, 1964

Sixth report, standing committee on private bills, Mr. Gomme	757
Election Act, bill to amend, Mr. MacDonald, first reading	757
Registry Act, bill to amend, Mr. Cass, first reading	757
Investigation of Titles Act, bill to repeal, Mr. Cass, first reading	757
Custody of Documents Act, bill to repeal, Mr. Cass, first reading	757
Estimates, Department of Insurance, Mr. Cass	758
Recess, 6 o'clock	787

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature, in the east gallery, students from Eastwood Collegiate, Kitchener, and in the west gallery, students from Dorchester High School, London, and St. Francis of Assissi Separate School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark), from the standing committee on private bills, presented the committee's sixth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill No. Pr32, An Act respecting Assumption University.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill No. Pr17, An Act respecting the city of Toronto.

Your committee would recommend that the following bill be not reported:

Bill No. Pr33, An Act respecting the city of Port Arthur.

Your committee would recommend that the fees, less the penalties and the actual cost of printing, be remitted on Bill No. Pr32, An Act respecting Assumption University.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE ELECTION ACT

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Election Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member give us an explanation of the bill?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It can be summed up very briefly. This is a bill seeking to amend The Election Act to reduce the voting age from 21 to 18.

THE REGISTRY ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Registry Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, this is not only the usual annual amendment of The Registry Act, but another step in the codification, if you will, of the laws which relate to the registration of documents and matters of title in registry offices. It will include, as two separate and new parts, the former Investigation of Titles Act and the former Custody of Documents Act.

THE INVESTIGATION OF TITLES ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to repeal The Investigation of Titles Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE CUSTODY OF DOCUMENTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to repeal The Custody of Documents Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, these bills will be referred to the committee on legal bills for full discussion.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to direct the following question to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts).

Has the hon. Prime Minister received a telegram from the president of local 2995 of the Lumber and Sawmill Workers Union, asking for a Royal commission to be established to investigate the deaths of three men and other matters relating to the strike of the members of that local against Spruce Falls Power and Paper Company Limited; and if so, will the hon. Prime Minister indicate what action, if any, the government plans to take in response to this request?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did receive a telegram, but at the present time an application for leave to appeal to extend the time for service of notice has been launched in connection with the sentences imposed on those who were convicted. I believe such application will be disposed of some time next month. Until such application is dealt with we do not propose to take any further action. When the decision is rendered, the government will then decide what action it will take.

Mr. Troy: May I ask a supplementary question of the hon. Prime Minister? Has he had any information, from any sources, that there might be trouble brewing in that area again this year?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the hon. Attorney General. Has the report of the police commission on the extent of organized crime in Ontario been received by the department; and if so, when will it be released for public consideration?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is "no". But I would say, for the information of the hon. member inquiring and all hon. members of this House, that when the report is received it will be released as soon as practicable, except only for those parts which are the type of information which undoubtedly the police commission will recommend should not be made public knowledge, because of the undoubted results which would flow from certain things being made public. But the report itself, as soon as practicable, will be released.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the hon. Attorney General? Is it anticipated that this information will become available to hon. members of the House prior to the hon. Attorney General bringing in his estimates?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I would think so. From such information as I have, I would think that the report should be available within the next fortnight.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister if there is any change in the time of the sitting of the Legislature for tomorrow, in view of the fact that we are to have important personages here on a visit to the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I intended to speak about this before the House arose today. We will sit at 10.30 a.m., and what I would like to do would be to adjourn at twelve-thirty and reconvene—if that is the term—at two o'clock, when the official party from Quebec will be here. In this way we can be here to welcome them into the chamber. Then, when those ceremonies are completed, the House will rise.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The twenty-ninth order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE

On vote 901:

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister in charge of The Department of Insurance): Mr. Chairman, introducing, as I do for the second consecutive time, the estimates of one of the smaller but very important departments of this government, I do not propose to make any long introductory remarks. I would like, however, for the information of the House again, to have recorded in Hansard the scope of the functions and actions of the department, and also advise the House as to some internal reorganization which presently is being made effective in this department.

Those of you who were in the House last year, or who will have read the reports of Hansard of the last session, will find therein recorded certain statistics with respect to the scope of this department's functions and actions, and I would like to bring that information up to date, so that it may be available to each hon. member of the House and those who do peruse Hansard.

There are still eight Acts being administered by this department, but as of April 1, 1964 it is proposed to add a further Act, The Bailiffs Act.

At the present time the Acts being administered by this department are as follows: The Insurance Act, The Loan and Trust Corporations Act, The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act, The Investment Contracts Act, The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, The Credit Unions Act, The Collection Agencies Act, and The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act.

As one contemplates the list of Acts administered by this department, one would be struck by the fact that there are two types of Acts being administered—those connected in some very normal way with the business and industry of insurance, whether it be life or general or what have you, and those which are regulatory and inspecting Acts, such as those that regulate the business of a business broker, or a credit union, or a mortgage broker. We have now started to divide The Department of Insurance into two branches. One branch is the insurance branch, which will administer The Insurance Act, The Loan and Trust Corporations Act, The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act and The Investment Contracts Act. The other branch is a registration and examination branch, which will administer the other type of Act—namely, The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, The Credit Unions Act, The Collection Agencies Act, The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act, and effective April 1, next, The Bailiffs Act.

At the head of each of these branches, under the Superintendent of Insurance, there is a director. We have as the director of the examination branch Mr. W. M. Jaffray, who has been associated with the department for many years and has great knowledge and experience.

One of the difficulties in The Department of Insurance over the years in connection with the change in superintendents has been that there has been no senior official in the department who is also a lawyer. Those of you who have had anything to do with insurance will realize that there are a great many technical matters upon which legal advice and a legal mind can best be brought to bear. So, we have been very fortunate in obtaining Mr. F. J. Sexton as director of our insurance branch. He has been with us now for a few months.

These two directors, and the staff and personnel under them, are responsible to the superintendent of insurance, who is also the deputy Minister of this branch, Mr. Richards.

Under their direction, we are reorganizing the department so that we may do two things. One is to provide the type of service the insurance industry has always felt it should receive from the insurance department of the government, namely, from people who are experienced in insurance matters and do not have a lot of ancillary things to clutter up the scenery. That is being done, through the director of the insurance branch.

Secondly, we are making it much easier to have a uniform standard for registration and inspection of those other people and corporations whose job, and whose work and objects, come properly under the inspection of the regulations of government through this department. As I have mentioned, Mr. Jaffray is the director of this branch and he has had many, many years of experience with this type of business and government administration.

The statistics for the function and work of the department during the year just closed do not vary greatly from those of the previous year. Under The Insurance Act there have been 197 Ontario and extra-provincial companies licensed, 402 Dominion-registered companies, making a total of 599 insurers registered with The Department of Insurance in Ontario.

The examination and detection of the solvency of Dominion-registered companies, of course, is under the supervision and control of the Ottawa department and Superintendent of Insurance.

One of the great fields of work and responsibility for the superintendent and of The Department of Insurance, Mr. Chairman, is the licensing and regulating of insurance agents, brokers and adjusters. The figures that I will now read to you will indicate the great amount of work that is necessary to process these, especially when one realizes that there are several thousand applicants every year and that there are renewals for each of the people who is granted a licence. This renewal must be taken out each year.

There are 9,300 licensed life insurance agents in Ontario. There are 8,500 agents for insurance other than life and there are 870 insurance adjusters, making a total licensing in the insurance industry by this department of 18,670.

The Loan and Trust Corporations Act provides some further interesting statistics. Last year there were eight Ontario and extra-provincial corporations registered. Already to date in 1964 there have been ten. Last year there were six Dominion loan and trust companies registered, and to date this year there have been eight. So you can see, Mr. Chairman, that there has been an upsurge in the business of going into loan and trust corporation work.

Trust companies come under this Act and under this department. Last year, we had 19 Ontario and extra-provincial companies registered and to date this year we have had 20. Last year in 1963, we had nine Dominion companies registered and eight to date this year. Both for several years past, including 1963 and so far this year, we have had three foreign companies registered. This made a total last year of 45 loan and trust companies, and this year so far a total of 49.

At the present time, Mr. Chairman, I think for the information of those hon. members who come from that area, I would like to mention that awaiting registration in the department at the present time is the application of the District Trust Company of Hamilton, Ontario, and the Kent Trust and Savings Company of Chatham. They have already been incorporated and they are now awaiting registration.

Awaiting incorporation is the Lincoln Trust and Savings Company of Niagara Falls, Ontario. In due course, I presume, the formalities will be completed in all three cases and incorporation and registration will proceed in the normal course.

At the present time there are no petitions for loan companies, either awaiting registration or even awaiting incorporation so far as we in the department know.

Now again, as with life or other insurance companies, the examination and protection of the solvency of Dominion-registered loan and trust companies is under the supervision again of the federal department and Superintendent of Insurance.

Under The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act there are some 2,700 brokers and 5,500 salesmen, a total of 8,200 people doing business as licensed brokers or salesmen in Ontario in real estate.

We have under The Credit Unions Act some 1,500 active credit unions. Examinations of their operations and their books are made, not only by departmental examiners, but also by 26 examiners employed by the three federations of credit unions. This means that, by and large, the credit unions are kept under pretty fair scrutiny. I have found in my time that the most excellent co-operation and liaison exists between the examiners and personnel of The Department of Insurance and those of the head office of the Credit Union League and the other two federations of credit unions. Among them I think they are doing a very creditable job.

As before—and there is no change, I believe—we have three investment contract companies registered under The Investment Contracts Act, and we have 39 prepaid hospital or medical plans registered under The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act.

There are 135 collection agencies registered under The Collection Agencies Act, and 700 mortgage brokers under The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act.

So you can see, Mr. Chairman, that the amount of routine work that is required by the departmental officials, not only on new applications, but each year for the re-registration for thousands of agents, adjusters and brokers is a very onerous and very important part of the work of this department.

There are a great many matters, both of principle and of practice, which since the estimates of this department were last before this House have come to the attention not only of the public, through newspapers and the press, but of my department officials and of the now-existing select committee on consumer credit, which could be discussed on the floor of this House.

There are matters with respect to the operation of this department, in all the branches and areas that I have mentioned and others as well. I think we would be, perhaps, wasting the time of this House if I went on at any great length now to outline these matters, or to state what has been done. I will say this: That so far as it has been practicable, action has been taken under the existing law to deal with the problems that have arisen. I would hope during this session to bring forward some further legislation in many of these areas. But they will never really satisfactorily control the problems we have because, as the House knows, Mr. Chairman, this vexed field of credit covered by the mortgage brokers and certain others is one of divided authority, with the federal authorities having a certain sphere and we in the province having a certain sphere. But within those limits we do hope to be able to present to this House at a later date and as quickly as possible, some legislation that will be of great interest to the hon. members and of great assistance to the public.

So I say, Mr. Chairman, that I will be delighted to receive today the views, helpful comments and full criticism of the hon. members. I will explain not only items in the estimates, because these are rather round-figured and summarized, but will receive questions on any matter with respect to the operation of this department and the Acts under which it operates. I will also give, to the best of the ability of my advisers who are here and who are very experienced people and of myself, the answers which we may, and to do, as I said I would do last year, and I believe we have done, whatever is necessary to correct any abuses or any matters which on the floor of this House today appear to require further action, whether it be legislative or administrative action within the department.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I found the remarks of the hon. Minister most interesting. The statistics concerning the various sub-branches of this department indicate, at least, that they are capable statistic gatherers. Just how effectively the various branches of this department are run is something that some of us may have some different opinions about.

I propose, Mr. Chairman, to deal with two aspects that concern this department, and I am going to turn my remarks first to the latter part of the hon. Minister's comments. I note with interest that he does plan to bring forward new legislation dealing generally, if I can word it in this way, with problems dealing with consumer credit. In using that phrase in its broadest sense I would think that this would perhaps relate to money lenders, to mortgage brokers and mortgage brokers registrations, and so on.

I have watched with some interest the deliberations of the committee on consumer credit and certainly some of the fields of investigation that this committee has embarked upon—merely because it has embarked upon these fields and because the publicity has been directed to abuses that have existed in our economic life—have been all to the good. But committee publicity dies very quickly and unless there is a programme of continuing action not only initiated by government legislation, but enforced through the other branch of government that the hon. Minister concerns himself with—The Attorney General's Department—then the odd flurry of publicity really does not mean very much.

One very interesting legal event that happened in recent months was the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada when it held that The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act was within the powers of the province of Ontario. This cleared the way, I would think, for substantial action on behalf of this government to control many things about which there was some doubt about its powers to control while this matter was pending before the court. The Supreme Court of Canada, however, has removed the doubts in connection with this matter and has held that Ontario can legislate in this fashion.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, the comments of some people and the press concerning The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act. One lawyer, if I remember correctly, said he had a dozen or more cases in his files pending the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in this matter. It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman—the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) has not taken me into his confidence yet as to what he is bringing forward in legislation—but it would seem to me to be well worth the while of this government to bring forward in legislation some method of assistance to those people who may find themselves in the position of being victims of unconscionable transactions. This perhaps gets into somewhat of another field—that whole question of legal aid for people who get caught up in the ramifications, or enmeshed in the complications of the law, and are unable properly, by reason of finances, to defend themselves or to protect themselves, and the whole question of the role of government in assisting these people.

But it occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that since the Supreme Court of Canada has set down certain ground rules and established them firmly for us, that there is an abundant field of exploration at least, a very good field of legislation now available to us, to let the government enunciate clearly and distinctly that it is prepared to assist people where they have been improperly victimized.

I recognize that by reason of the hon. Attorney General's remarks that my remarks today may be a bit premature and I am going to reserve the right to comment after he brings in his legislation. I would certainly hope that there will be provisions in this legislation for methods of assistance to people who find there is no other way to protect their rights. I think this is an important chore of government; government must provide the machinery whereby this can be done. It is not just sufficient to have some of these statutes on the books; it is not just sufficient to say that the government has expressed its view. There must be the mechanics available to enforce the law where offences against these statutes have taken place. The machinery must be, I would think, part of the duties of the chief law officer of the Crown, the Attorney General, sir, and I think he must be prepared to act on those occasions where it becomes obvious to him that breaches of statutes have occurred.

This is one of the very serious problems of our modern life—the whole question of consumer credit, of citizens being victimized by fast-talking, fast-writing confidence men. We have only begun to nibble at establishing in our statutes, methods of protection, rules and regulations, licensing, and so on. We become entrapped in the complications of jurisdiction—whether the jurisdiction belongs in Ottawa or whether it belongs in Queen's Park. Some of the air has been cleared by the decision and it is not a simple question at all.

I am not going to say too much more in connection with this field at the moment but I will await with interest, certainly, as will my hon. colleagues, the new legislation that the hon. Attorney General promises. If the legislation does not provide a responsibility on the Attorney General to enforce it, and does not make available to those citizens who are wronged, Mr. Chairman, some reasonable method of getting to the courts, then I think that we are going to express our views very firmly in his regard.

Mr. Chairman, I want to talk as well, for a few moments, about the question of insurance and I note that this was talked about in the House on these estimates last year. One question I put to the hon. Attorney General last year dealt with the proclamation of section 339 of The Insurance Act. That section has been on the statute books for—what is it?—30 years, Mr. Chairman, or something like that—a long time in any event—and it has never yet been proclaimed. That section gives the government of Ontario the right to control insurance premium rates. A Legislature of a former day, in its wisdom, thought it was fitting and proper that that be put on the statute books. No subsequent Legislature has seen fit to remove it. But the fascinating thing that I have been completely unable to understand is the fact that no subsequent Legislature or no subsequent government has seen fit to proclaim this section, to bring it into force. And so while the section has been on the statute books for lo! these many years, no one has done anything about it, nor has it any force or effect of law and there is no control in this government at the present time over insurance premiums.

I know it is going to be suggested, Mr. Chairman, as I raise this point, that really there is no need to control, that the insurance companies come in and they discuss with the chief of this branch, whatever you call him, the Registrar of Insurance, their premiums, and there are analyses of a sort. On the select committee dealing with automobile insurance, at least to my satisfaction in any event, it was established that there really have not been in the past the facilities within the insurance branch to properly analyze from an actuarial point of view or from a statistical point of view whether or not these rates are proper. There are discussions.

The head of this branch in past years—not the present gentleman occupying the office—admitted to the select committee that he had examined the various requests for rate changes with interest. Occasionally he had commented but on no occasion had he, that he could recall, requested that they be changed upward or downward. Therefore, I would suggest that if the answer comes back that there is control, it is a control of the sort that really does not mean anything. And I would think that the insurance industry should know, the people of Ontario should know, whether this power is exercised or not, or whether it was ever found necessary to exercise this power or not, and that it does lie within the control of this government to control insurance premiums if this becomes necessary.

It is the simplest thing in the world, Mr. Chairman. All that has to be done is to proclaim section 339 of The Insurance Act.

Not only do I submit this argument on my own behalf, Mr. Chairman, but I refer to the recommendations of the select committee on automobile insurance, which has twice unanimously recommended that this be done. And the government, for some reason best known to itself, at least it has never bothered to enunciate it on the floor of this House, has refused to take the advice in these reports; and section 339 of The Insurance Act still remains unproclaimed.

Along that same line, Mr. Chairman, I think it is incumbent upon the insurance branch to have within its civil service—perhaps not on a permanent basis, or perhaps even on a permanent basis—sufficient advisors, who will be able to examine actuarially and report to the head of the branch, and subsequently to the Minister in charge of The Department of Insurance, the validity of requests for changes in rates. As I have been able to understand it, in the past these facilities have not been available in the insurance branch. I did not hear the hon. Minister say that they were available today and I presume the same situation still pertains.

I would certainly commend to his attention the suggestion that, if the government is going to exercise control over insurance, he should arm the insurance branch with sufficient advice of a very competent nature. And he is not going to get this advice by hiring more clerks. He is going to have to hire actuaries, people who understand these things and know about them.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Those terrible people.

Mr. Singer: Those terrible people. The department is going to have to hire some of these people, terrible or not, to advise it; and I suggest perhaps—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Touché!

Mr. Singer: Enough said. The hon. Prime Minister was two steps ahead of me on that point.

The other point I wanted to mention, Mr. Chairman, was the report of the select committee on automobile insurance. To my mind, this committee is one of the best select committees I have become familiar with in the time I have been in this House. This committee worked hard over a period of a few years, brought in reports which substantially changed the nature of automobile insurance for the better, and provided Ontario with a system of automobile insurance that is certainly much better than the one it had before the sittings of this committee. The incidence of insurance, or the number of insured, has risen from some 90 per cent to 98.5 per cent, if my statistics are correct.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Ninety-eight point eight.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister corrects me—98.8. This is a very substantial achievement. The limits on automobile insurance have been increased from the $10,000 minimum up to $35,000 across the board. The rate uninsured persons have to pay into what used to be the unsatisfied judgment fund has been increased from $5 to $20, so that it has driven home forcibly, to those people who choose to drive without insurance, that they do not just throw a $5 bill away; they are now throwing $20 away and really getting no protection for it. And, having been put into this position, they might just as well go out and buy automobile insurance.

So the achievements of this committee, Mr. Chairman, as a result of the deliberations and the pretty well unanimous recommendations of the committee in these various facets and others which I have not mentioned, have been a substantial achievement, I think, for the good of the people of Ontario.

But my disappointment, Mr. Chairman, is with the fact that since the final report of this committee, which was submitted to the Legislature in March, 1963, there has been no action at all by government in connection with the very important recommendation providing a system of compensation without fault, within the limits set out in this report.

This was a decision that was almost unanimously arrived at by the committee. Certainly the government hon. members of the committee, including the chairman, the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), went along with it. Certainly the hon. members of my party went along with it. The one hon. member of the NDP went along with it, but did add the rider that he thought that this was better than nothing, but there could be certain substantial improvements made if automobile insurance took a different direction. At least to that extent all the members of the committee were unanimous that some form of compensation without fault should be provided.

As I say, this report has sat as a document submitted to this government since March, 1963. There was very little mention of it, that I noted, sir, during the campaign that culminated in September. There was no reference to it at all in the Throne Speech, nor has there been any indication whatsoever from the government that it is planning to do anything about these very important recommendations.

It has been the opinion of many people, Mr. Chairman, that should Ontario choose to adopt these provisions for compensation without fault, which are included in the final report of the select committee on automobile insurance, Ontario then would be able to say, proudly and correctly, that it would have probably the best system of automobile insurance in the whole of North America, probably in the whole of the western world. And it would do this without any serious dislocation to the economy of the country; it would do this without any serious dislocation to the insurance industry; and it would do this, generally, for the service of the people of Ontario.

Some of the history lying behind this recommendation, I think, is important. The original recommendation, or at least one of the two recommendations that motivated the committee to come to these conclusions, was submitted by a committee of the benchers in the Law Society of Upper Canada. The benchers of the law society chose a number of their members to sit on a select committee and these people included Terrence Sheard, QC; the then Edson L. Haines, QC, now the Honourable Mr. Justice Haines, a justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario; W. S. Martin, QC; Brendan O'Brien, QC; Ralph D. Steele, QC; and R. F. Wilson, QC; all outstanding men in the legal profession. And among other things that they said in this submission that they made to the select committee, they recommended this system of compensation without fault. These are people not without knowledge and not without interest in this field.

Then, too, Mr. Chairman, there was the recommendation of the All-Canada Insurance Group. This is an organization, as you know, that consists of all the people in the insurance business, all of the insurance companies, who band together for purposes that they have in common, who maintain offices in Montreal and in other Canadian centres, and who hire very competent people to act on their behalf.

These people came forward to the committee—Mr. Piper and his assistant, Mr. McArthur—and provided a very complete and intelligent, in my opinion and in the opinion of the committee, presentation in connection with this system of compensation without fault. The committee was impressed, Mr. Chairman. The committee certainly was impressed because, as I said, the nine members of the committee agreed unanimously, with the reservation that the NDP member reserved to himself and is set out here in the report.

The nine members of the committee agreed unanimously this would be the system which, if adopted in Ontario, would vastly improve the whole field of automobile insurance.

What was said, and I think it is important enough, even though it is in this report, to read it into the record, and I am reading from page five of this report:

As noted earlier, the provisions enacted during the year 1962 arising out of the second interim report have increased the number of insured vehicles on the roads of Ontario from 91 per cent to something approaching 98 per cent. The Unsatisfied Judgment Fund has given place to The Motor Accident Vehicle Claim Fund, which is operating expeditiously to indemnify the victims, of the remaining small fraction of uninsured, of hit-and-run and of stolen vehicles. The net result of these changes is that in Ontario at the present time more people have access to indemnification at a reasonably adequate level than ever before. Moreover, they are able to obtain settlement of their claims much more quickly than ever before. The committee is, of course, concerned that some form of remedy should be available to all persons injured in automobile accidents. This, after all, must be the ultimate objective of any automobile insurance system.

I think this principle that the committee enunciates so clearly should really be the guiding approach of this Legislature to the whole question of automobile insurance—that is, the concern that some form of remedy should be available to all persons injured in automobile accidents.

The committee sees the wisdom in the views of certain eminent persons who believe that the traditional fault liability system sometimes falls short of providing justice to those involved in or affected by automobile accidents.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that I need to quote any long list of authorities or the remarks that they made, but suffice it to say that in addition to those members of the special committee of the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada can be numbered people like Dean Wright of the University of Toronto law school, Chief Justice McRuer of the Supreme Court of Ontario, and many, many others.

There is no point, as I said, Mr. Chairman, in repeating these arguments. These arguments have been heard at great length and perhaps there is another time and place to repeat them at greater length, but the committee did see the wisdom in the views of some of these people who believe that there are traditional fault liability systems that sometimes fall short of providing justice.

To put the problem in its simplest terms, society can no longer be entirely satisfied with the idea that fault in every accident rests with an individual or individuals, and that the financial consequences, whatever they may be, should therefore rest with an individual or individuals. We have to remember, Mr. Chairman, that what really is tried in the courts so often after a lapse of a year or 18 months or two years or three years, is an event that happened in a fraction of a second that people have forgotten about, that clever lawyers on either side have tried to reconstruct in their minds. I am not criticizing my profession, but this is what happens. A judge, or a judge and a jury, days, weeks, months, years after the event, tries to reconstruct what happened in the fraction of a second, tries to assess liability, tries to determine degrees of negligence, and people are put to all sorts of suffering because of the inadequacies of our present system of law in this regard.

In this automobile age, society as a whole is perhaps responsible for traffic accidents and their consequences to a greater extent than we have thus far realized or admitted. It may also be, as was suggested in the first interim report, that the task of establishing responsibility, amid all the complexities of today, is quite frequently an almost impossible burden on those who adjudicate these cases.

I am not saying this is anything revolutionary, Mr. Chairman. Anyone who has studied the sort of adjudication that has to take place will agree with this I am sure. Surely, Mr. Chairman, having arrived at this point, there must be some sense in establishing in the province of Ontario some sort of system of compensation without fault.

This report is not radical in that it suggests doing away with all of the legal remedies that have been built up over the years, but it goes a part of the way. It urges the government to adopt in legislation the recommendations that are made here so that at least this step can be taken to benefit the people of Ontario.

It is no longer good enough for us to say that all those who are not entitled to indemnification under the traditional fault liability system—the surviving dependants of the negligent party, the negligent party himself who may be disabled for life, or the small child who dashes in front of an automobile and is permanently crippled—do not deserve a remedy of some kind for damages. The fact of the matter is that they need a remedy.

Mr. Chairman, the fact of the matter is that this Legislature should act in view of what every hon. member of this Legislature knows to be a fact, and the fact of the matter is that this report has been in the hands of the government since March, 1963, and there has been no indication whatsoever on behalf of the government that it has any intention of doing anything about this particular set of recommendations in this report.

The committee is gratified to note that the insurance industry has indicated its willingness to co-operate in the establishment of a new application of accident insurance in this province, which would, in the committee's view, afford at least some measure of the remedy which is so obviously required. The insurance industry has in fact submitted to the committee for its consideration, an outline of a plan and an estimate of its costs and the plan is as follows:

There are benefits payable for bodily injury or death and there are certain benefits to any driver or passenger of an automobile. There are benefits available to the insured named in the policy, the spouse, and any dependant relative residing in the same dwelling premises as the named insured, when as an occupant of the insured's car, or as a pedestrian, struck by the other private passenger automobile.

There are benefits spelled out in dollars, such as death benefits for married males and married females, and additional benefits if there are dependants. The maximum limits of these benefits as suggested in this report are $5,000 in the principal sum, plus additional amounts for dependants and certain other amounts set out for the children. There are additional sets of benefits recommended for certain dismemberments, loss of sight and that sort of thing. There is a recommendation that there be an indemnity provided for medical payments to the extent of $2,000 for reasonable expenses incurred for necessary medical, surgical, dental, ambulance, and hospital expenses are those in excess of those paid by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. There is a recommendation that provision be made for payment for funeral expenses. There is a recommendation in subsection 5 of this report that there be certain weekly benefits, such as $35 a week payable to an employed person when totally disabled from work, up to a limit of 104 weeks, with provision for additional benefits, perhaps on certain conditions, at a later time; or $25 a week payable to a housewife when she is totally disabled from work, and so on.

The fascinating thing about this, Mr. Chairman, is that this was not drawn out of the air. This was something that was carefully researched, studied and examined, first of all by the insurance industry itself, by the All-Canada Insurance Group. It put its actuaries to work on it and said this can be done and very simply. By compelling everyone who buys insurance in Ontario, every policy that is bought or sold in this way, to have an additional clause that will provide for these things and at the roughly average cost of some $7 per person who buys this policy, all of these things can be paid for.

This is not a great image or dream made by some member of the committee completely on his own. This has all been carefully researched and studied by the people who should know the most about it. Surely, Mr. Chairman, this type of recommendation is something that this government, I would have thought, would have been anxious to embrace. It is not all that revolutionary, but in these days when the automobile plays such an important part in our life, there must be such a recognition of the problem. The government must do more by means of its control over insurance than it is presently doing.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge that we get, before this Legislature prorogues, during this session, some definite sort of commitment from the government that it is prepared to act on what I think is one of the most responsible suggestions that has ever come before this House from a select committee of the Legislature.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, my remarks will not be lengthy because I shall not repeat what the hon. member for Downsview has just said, and some of my remarks might have overlapped.

I would like to break them down into two aspects. One has to do with the question of consumer credit, and here, Mr. Chairman, I find myself in a bit of an embarrassing position, because as a member of that committee, I can assure you I have files bulging with material I think at some point should be brought before this House.

At the last meeting of the committee a month or so ago, it was agreed that a report would be brought down—a final report, so to speak—at least on some aspects of our investigation, particularly with regard to second mortgages. Therefore, I am not going to attempt to judge in advance what might be in that first draft which has not been compiled and brought back to the committee. I guess I can make this general comment, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that in coming to grips with the problem of protecting consumers today from the kind of operators that are in many fields, one must guard against operators whose actions cannot, in my view, be described as other than varying degrees of racketeering. On one hand there are certain fields in which the government has power. And the thing that has puzzled us—puzzled me and some of my colleagues—is why it was necessary for the government to have the assistance of the kind of public support that was created as a result of publicity emanating from the select committee on consumer credit before it was willing to move, for example, in relation to certain small loan companies and second-mortgage operators. I think it was quite clear from the testimony to our committee by Mr. Simone that there was some degree of power, but he did not feel that he was in the strongest position to be able to exercise that power until we had testimony with regard to the activities of some of these people.

The fact of the matter is that the testimony we got was nothing new as far as Mr. Simone was concerned. He knew who the people were. In many instances he had been trying to catch up with their activities and had been exercising powers of a civil servant that at least one member of the committee chastised him for—and then later did a bit of a back flip and chastised him for not exercising it. However, that is just to show the ambivalence of some members of the committee—on the government side, I might say.

I hope now that there will be a willingness on the part of the government to make certain that the civil servants who are desirous of exercising powers of the statutes or regulations will be given the assurance that they should proceed to do so. It seems to me a little short of scandalous that a civil servant should come before us and relate his conversations in relation to the operation of one man in the second-mortgage field whom he had pressured, I guess this is the correct term, into returning money to a client who had been deprived of it in rather a questionable fashion. After considerable questioning this man, in effect, said: "Just give me another year and a half and I'll make a million, and you can take my licence", or words to that effect.

When a man makes that kind of comment, clearly he not only is an operator but he knows he is an operator. He knows he is operating beyond the bounds of the law. It is a bit absurd that a civil servant should not be in a position to move with the power that he has, and the assurance and backing of the government, to step in without the kind of publicity the committee gave.

However, I shall leave the question there for the moment until we hear from the hon. Attorney General about whatever new legislation he is planning to bring down in the consumer credit protection field. Or, alternatively, until the committee has an opportunity to pursue its investigations. That is a rather alarming range of fields in which, theoretically, the answer is to say to a person: If you feel you have been done an injustice, the courts are there for you to launch a civil suit.

But as was pointed out, in the instance of the used-car business by even the Toronto Globe and Mail, when you have a wide range of cases of racketeering in a field, then clearly the problem rests not in the individual taking civil action but in some strengthening of the law, or the establishment of some sort of a bureau which will give the public at large the protection they are entitled to. This, I assume, is what the hon. Attorney General has in mind, and I shall respect his suggestion that we leave further discussion of the topic until he has brought down his proposals to the Legislature.

On the car insurance question, Mr. Chairman, I am a little at a loss to know whether this is really in order today. I think the appropriate place for its discussion is perhaps under The Department of Transport, but since there has been considerable discussion up to this point, I should just like to make a number of brief comments. There were two, not just one, major recommendations brought down by the select committee on car insurance. One of them had to do with the payment of claims without regard to fault. The second one had to do with providing broader coverage. In other words, we recognize that in car insurance today the problem is not simply met by the traditional coverage of collision and public liability, but that there are many other needs which flow from an automobile accident in terms of death benefits, funeral benefits, out-of-work benefits, dismemberment benefits—all of which have been in operation as part of the Saskatchewan public car insurance programme for some 16 years now.

This was a second recommendation, sir, a unanimous one I understand, coming from the select committee. And I, with the hon. member for Downsview, am deeply puzzled about why the government goes to the expense, time and effort involved in a select committee, and gets recommendations of the import of these recommendations, yet sits on them for virtually a year. I suggest that if the government was treating this whole issue seriously—instead of using a select committee as a means of postponing action—they would have done so. This is really the last resort of a government that does not want to move when they know that they cannot withstand public pressure any more—they set up a committee to look into it, the purpose of which is really to postpone action.

Why did the government not move, for example, prior to the election? I would say that there could have been few things that would have more fully met the needs of the people. I think they would have been popular with the people as a whole, but whether they would have been popular with some branches of the insurance industry, I do not know. As the hon. member for Downsview has pointed out, at least on these recommendations, public pressure has built to the point where the insurance industry was willing to compromise in order to protect as much as they could. Therefore, they too had come to the committee with proposals that were not too far removed from the recommendations that were made by the select committee.

So my question, together with that of the hon. member for Downsview, is this: How long have we to wait now before the government will move in implementing these two recommendations that were returned to this House unanimously and with the support of the spokesmen for all three parties?

There is a final point, and I just make this in passing. If you really want to bring the insurance rate down, there is only one way to do it. That is to move into what the hon. member for Downsview rather euphemistically termed “going off in another direction in insurance” with a public insurance programme. Why is public insurance preferable? It is simply that in a private insurance programme, generally speaking over the years, approximately 54 cents of every premium dollar is paid back in claims. Only 54 cents.

In a public insurance programme that has been proven down through the years, no less than 84 cents of the premium dollar is paid. It has risen in some years to as high as 88 or 89 cents. In other words, you can save 30 per cent of the premium dollar, which today is wasted, an economic wastage caused by something like 200 companies competing in this field.

The interesting thing about the hon. member for Downsview is that he quietly lapsed into silence on this issue. A little earlier in the session I reminded him, or suggested to him, that some years ago he had agreed with us on public insurance—back in those days when he was seeking the leadership of the Liberal Party. He disputed this and I told him that I would see if I could find the clipping back in my files.

I shall let the House judge this one small point, Mr. Chairman, because I will concede to the hon. member for Downsview that there is a certain ambivalence in the statement that he will likely—as a lawyer—be able to argue that he is right. The source is in the St. Catharines Standard of April 10, 1958. This was the last leadership campaign, the one which was won by Mr. Wintermeyer. To put it in a kind of context—and this will really interest the House—the hon. member referred to himself as a left-wing Liberal. He suggested something should be done about all those who are making profits out of the distribution of gas, and then he said:

National gas distribution was comparable to the Ontario Hydro which had been proposed by Sir Adam Beck in 1900. It is no more socialistic than what Sir Adam Beck sponsored in 1900.

We have not heard anything about that since the leadership campaign in 1957. Then he was in favour of public ownership of distribution of gas. However, to get to the point—

Mr. Singer: So was the hon. member at that time, and I have not heard him speak of it since.

Mr. MacDonald: We still are. It is in our programme.

Mr. Singer: I still am.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): The insurance companies got to him.

Mr. MacDonald: They got to him on this. I am quoting again from the St. Catharines Standard.

Compulsory automobile insurance, and the use of a government insurance company, has been proved in Saskatchewan, he said. Later he explained that this does not mean that the government company would have a monopoly.

In Saskatchewan the government company does not have a monopoly. In the basic coverage they do, but in the coverage for the package policies beyond, they do not. So that whether I was reminding the hon. member accurately or not, he will be able to take half the quotation and say that I was not. I still have a vivid recollection of one newspaper quote of him saying that he was in favour of a plan just like the plan in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Singer: We have not found that one yet. I will go back into my clippings and get one, too.

Mr. MacDonald: Good.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why did the hon. member for Downsview not get the leadership?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the final area in the insurance department on which I wanted to make a comment, and ask a question or so of the hon. Minister, is with regard to the reorganization of the department he has indicated. Basically, I think the kind of division that he has suggested is a valid one; I think this was an overburdened department. Obviously it was impossible for the kind of supervision to be conducted, all across the province, that was required. But in the course of the reorganization—and this is one question that I would like to put to the hon. Minister—he apparently has run into some serious differences of opinion within his department.

The Toronto Globe and Mail of December 19, 1963, carries a story which is headlined: "Disagreed with chief, two civil servants quit."

And the story is, briefly, that of the resignation of J. R. Hawthorne, registrar of the insurance brokers' agents, and Douglas Kilgour, an examiner—one of whom had been with the department since 1950 and the second since 1958—who disagreed with what ever was happening. And because they disagreed—this is rather a unique kind of situation—they resigned. Sometimes disagreement is carried to the point of almost indignity without resignation, but here was one instance where the civil servants resigned.

I am not interested in getting into the personal aspects, if there are personal aspects here, but I am curious to know what underlying principles there could be in which there would be such basic conflict that two civil servants, one of them a senior civil servant, would, in effect, resign and leave the public service altogether.

The second question I want to raise in connection with The Department of Insurance, or with regard to The Department of Insurance, is its exact role. The hon. member for Downsview, sir, has touched on it when he raised a very pertinent question as to why section 339 of the Act has never been proclaimed, and why, in any meaningful sense, the department has never exercised the power that legally is there on the statute for control of insurance rates.

I do not suppose there are many topics which capture public headlines any more frequently than the question of increasing rates, particularly in the car insurance field. What, exactly, is, in the view of the hon. Minister, the role of the department in this particular field? Does he feel that it is the responsibility of the department to exercise some control over rates rather than an automatic rubber stamping of any increase that is brought before them?

I am reminded, for example, of the revelations that came out of the combines investigation of the breweries in this country a few years ago when they revealed what happened to price increases in the Liquor Control Board of Ontario. The evidence was very substantial, in fact, convincing, that what happened in this instance was that the breweries wanted an increase; they brought it to the liquor control board and they rubber-stamped it and it was made—at least some years ago, whether or not it is happening now.

I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that this is the kind of thing that happens in the insurance field. If the insurance companies want an increase they bring their case and perhaps go through the motions of justifying it; but there is no real investigation of the justification for the increase, it is pretty automatically rubber-stamped.

Indeed, it brings me to my final point and this is a new one. I have raised it in the House before but, particularly with a considerable number of new hon. members in the House, I want to raise it again. I can illustrate it in terms of a specific case with which I happened to become familiar about two or three years ago; this was of a person who found that his car insurance was cancelled without any reason being given.

Mr. Chairman, as many hon. members of the House may be aware, the Act does not obligate the company to give any reason. They do not have to; so he suddenly found himself out, and there was a lot of scuttlebutt as to exactly why his insurance had been cancelled. Having been cancelled by one company, he then found it difficult to get insurance from another company because something of a blackballing procedure operates. Sometimes this has a pretty serious effect on his livelihood, to say nothing of the question of civil rights involved.

When he brought it to my attention I called the then Superintendent of Insurance. He reminded me that the company did not have to reveal why it had cancelled the policy under the statute; this I knew, but he agreed to look into the issue. When he called back and reported to me he said that he had looked into the issue; that he was not in a position to give me details, because the statute left the insurance company free to withhold this information. But he could assure me that, in his view, the reasons for the cancellation of the policy were justified. I could do no more than accept it under those circumstances and left the matter there.

But an interesting thing happened. Because the whole matter had been raised the insurance company apparently took fright. They re-examined the situation and, to the astonishment of the policy holder, he received a letter saying that they were willing to reinstate the policy. At that point he wrote back a letter indicating where they could go and take their policy, because he would not buy insurance again from this company under any circumstances.

The interesting question is this, Mr. Chairman: The company itself, upon reconsideration, decided that they were wrong. There was no redress up until there; there was no possibility for review, but the company decided they were wrong and offered to reinstate the policy. But, in the meantime, the Superintendent of Insurance had told me that he believed their reasons for cancellation were valid.

So the very nice question, Mr. Chairman, I think was raised: Is it the function of the Superintendent of Insurance to protect the insurance companies against the public or to protect the public against the insurance companies? This is the nub of the issue, and this is the question I would like to put to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman. What is the role of the Superintendent of Insurance and the insurance companies? This is the root of the issue and this is the question I would like to put to the hon. Minister: What is the role of the insurance company, of the Superintendent of Insurance and The Department of Insurance? If the hon. Minister is not willing to proclaim section 339 so that there is some sort of meaningful investigation of the request that is normally rubber-stamped, to increase the rates of insurance, then is The Department of Insurance really not left in the position where it is protecting the insurance companies against the public, rather than protecting the public against the insurance companies and unnecessary cancellation of policies or unnecessary charges in rates?

I might say this in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that I think the bar association was sufficiently exercised by this that, a year or so ago, it was going to set up a committee to look into whether or not there was not an infringement of civil rights in the cancellation of policies and all of the effects that might flow from that. I tried to check this morning with a member of the bar association who was involved in the civil rights committee at that time. I have not been able to get a reply, but it is a matter of concern even in legal circles. Whether or not they have come to any conclusion, I do not know.

I would like to put these questions to the hon. Minister: One, what was it that led to the resignation of top civil servants in the reorganization of his department; and two, what in his view, in the context of the remarks I have made, is the role of The Department of Insurance?

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, I too was quite interested in the remarks of the hon. Minister in regard to the reorganization of The Department of Insurance, and the mention he made of the principles of this department and the re-examination of such, plus the existing legislation and the enforcement of this legislation. In my riding we have had a situation revolving around section 392 under The Insurance Act, and the enforcement of this Act in recent months has divided the community of Amherstburg and thrown a cast of doubt and suspicion upon the insurance agents in that community.

Before I ask the question of the hon. Minister which possibly could clarify this situation, sir, I would like to give some of the background material. This too, revolves around the situation which was mentioned by the hon. member for York South in regard to the disagreement and resignation of the two civil servants and it happened during the same time.

The gentleman in question is the town foreman of a community, and in a small community the town foreman is a very vital person. This gentleman, 63 years of age and due to retire in two years, was forced to resign his community position in order to carry on an insurance agency. I would like to read into the record a letter from Mr. Hawthorne, which was written on December 4:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 29, 1963, with reference to the above-named gentleman in Amherstburg. While this may seem like a rather sudden decision in the light of the information you have available to you, the writer feels that he must point out that this matter has been under discussion for some years past.

I checked the files and it goes back to 1945, which is 18 years, and indeed, one year ago, the gentleman was advised that he could not expect to have his licence renewed again this year unless he was able to show us at that time that he is able to devote 100 per cent of his time to the insurance business.

If he wished to proceed with a part-time licence containing restrictions to centres of population of 5,000, which the community is, his other occupation must not be within the list of those prohibited by regulation 392 under The Insurance Act. I believe the prohibition is that an insurance seller may not work for a municipality. Apparently this gentleman has been working for the municipality for 18 years and been getting exemptions.

There has been a great deal of reference in the area press to this. As I say, a cloud has been thrown over the shoulders of other agents in the town, because it is my understanding that a complaint must be made to the department in order that action be taken. I would like to determine whether this is one isolated case of the department, and if not, whether it is a new, revitalized and strong policy of the department to enact the laws of this province. I would certainly like to commend the hon. Minister if this is the case and I would so ask this question.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister indicated that certain legislation was coming in in this matter of consumer credit. There are just two items that I would like to draw to his attention.

One is that the other day I brought to the attention of the House a suggestion that contracts which were signed at the door at the insistence of door-to-door salesmen might well have a four-day waiting period before they become valid. This was picked up, as you know, by the press, and an editorial was written. From that editorial, since that time, I have had a great many phone calls and letters and personal calls regarding it. I would simply read a portion of one letter to illustrate the feeling of many door-to-door salesmen who are doing legitimate business:

Your proposal to enact legislation giving the consumer four days in which to change his mind is of so much merit that I wish I had thought of it myself. As a direct salesman of many years' standing, I believe that merit is that it will eliminate the huckster, the pitchman, the charlatan and the general all-around nuisance who does not dare face his customer a second time. It will make it easier for the courteous, the tactful and the sincere to secure a hearing. It will re-establish public trust, faith and confidence in the genuine salesman of genuine articles of service. It will make it mandatory for sales managers to hire quality rather than quantity. It goes without saying that the genuine salesman makes this type of refund without question or compulsion, but unfortunately so many people have been taken for a ride that they do not believe it any more. Congratulations on bringing this matter to the floor of the House. If you think there is anything I can do to promote this cause, please let me know.

(signed)

Wilfred Pasque.

In other words, I think this is the side of the suggestion which this House ought to be aware of—that many legitimate salesmen are anxious for this kind of legislation.

The second matter which I wish to raise is the matter of the people who are now waiting with bated breath for the kind of legislation which the hon. Attorney General indicated is coming. I have in my hand a contract which came in the mail this morning. It is between the Family Publications Service of Canada, with offices at 2405 Lakeshore Boulevard West, Toronto, and a certain Mr. McGill, a new Canadian who came from Britain very recently. Just a few days after his arrival the salesman arrived at the door and asked him if he was interested in publications and he said yes, he was. He would like to learn more about Canadian life and would like to get Canadian publications. So the salesman gave him the business and they got his name on the contract.

That evening a neighbour came in, who was a Canadian of some standing and looked at the contract and he saw this: Life, Popular Mechanics, Humpty Dumpty, True Story, Saturday Evening Post. He said, "You may have had a Canadian salesman, but you are certainly not going to get much of Canadian life from these magazines." When he looked at the price, he found that the average price being paid per year for these publications was $8.88. I checked today with the Davis Agency and I find that the average one-year subscription for these should amount to $5.24, let alone for a two-year contract such as the man had signed.

Fortunately, or whatever you might say, this man went to the bank the next morning. He stopped payment on his cheque, so that the deposited cheque was not honoured in the bank. Now the company is pressuring him for payment and he is sitting tight because he thinks the government is going to do something about this, and he wants to wait and see. In the meantime, he is a bit jittery as to his legal position.

This morning I had two calls from people who had been "taken" by the kind of salesmen mentioned in the House by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) the other day—freezer salesmen. They paid something over $500 for these freezers. I asked them to send me a memorandum which they promised to do, and which should be here tomorrow. When they complained, they found in checking prices that they had paid far too much. The company said, "Send them back and we will refund your money." So they were sent back, and the company gave them credit for $180 apiece for these freezers. They were secondhand goods now; the company was buying back secondhand goods. The status of these people at the present time is that the credit company is now pressing them, and has already begun court proceedings against them. My question to the hon. Minister is simply this: Where do these people stand? They know that some legislation is contemplated, they are waiting, and they are hoping that perhaps through remand they might be able to postpone the settlement of these cases until such a day that legislation may come.

Is there not some way that the hon. Minister can work this out and in cases like this give these people some hope? Is there not some statement he might make or some interim legislation that might be brought down which will enable these people who are now in this position to find that they are not finally the victims of this kind of shyster? I know there are some difficulties here. But it well might be that these cases are settled at a certain date, then two days afterwards legislation is introduced which might have saved them.

So I would ask the hon. Minister if there is anything that he can do at this point to give people who are now in this position some hope that they might come out of it with a whole skin?

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I noticed the hon. Minister is not answering the questions immediately, which is probably a good way of looking after this particular estimate, so I have a question also.

I understand that all real estate agents, whether they are brokers or salesmen, are licensed in the province of Ontario. My question would be this: Are lawyers, who are engaged in the business of selling real estate, bonded as real estate operators are? My reason for asking this question is as follows: Because there are many lawyers—I had better be careful with the one sitting on my left—who are engaged in real estate activities which are substantially greater than some of the brokers that we have in some of our smaller cities and smaller towns in the province of Ontario.

I think I am correct in saying that I noticed a year or so ago, in reading some accounts of the meeting of the law society, one of the spokesman stated that in the majority of instances when lawyers went bankrupt—

Mr. Singer: Or when the funds vanished.

Mr. Whicher: Or when the funds vanished—I was trying to be kind. But when the funds vanished, these lawyers who are in offices where funds vanish are invariably people who deal in real estate transactions. Therefore, my question to the hon. Minister would be: Are barristers and lawyers, engaged in the real estate business, bonded or not; and if they are not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, may I just say that on matters of principle I would like to have questions from the Opposition, and from any hon. members of the House, which I will try to answer. And then, when we come to the particular matters, such as the hon. member for Bruce has just raised,

I will be glad to answer immediately. But I think perhaps there might be someone else over there who wishes to speak to the principle.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, there are two or three matters relating to this estimate that I would like to comment on briefly—although in one case I do not think I will be able to make any comments until I elicit certain information.

One suggestion I would make to the hon. Minister, for his consideration for another year, is that this vote might be broken down into at least two votes since he now has the department organized in two branches. I think it might be of assistance to hon. members if there were at least two separate votes. As it stands, everything is lumped together under the one vote and we will have to sort these various items out as best we can.

The question of consumer protection has been raised by the hon. Minister himself, and other hon. members have made some comments on it. Since he is now apparently considering certain legislative action in this field, there are a couple of suggestions I would like to make to him for his consideration.

First of all, I would like to suggest that the whole field of TV repair be looked into. The consumer—and also, let it be said, the honest TV repairman—is in a very difficult situation at the present time. The average layman, and I am sure most of the hon. members of this House are in this category, has absolutely no way of knowing whether a TV repairman is reliable and honest.

Some of us will remember that, a few years ago, Mr. Pierre Berton, when he was with the Toronto Daily Star, conducted quite a series of inquiries. The basis of his approach was to obtain a set that had been checked over by experts and found in perfect operating condition, except for one small defect that could be remedied in a minute or two at quite low cost and without any expenditure on parts. He would then have one of his agents—or operatives, I think he used to call them—summon various TV repairmen to come and look at the set. And the operative got quite an array of suggestions as to what was wrong with the set, most of them involving substantial expenditures both for time and parts, when, in fact, an honest man who knew his business would have advised the person that it was a very small trouble—and the only charge would have been the regular service charge which naturally should have been levied.

I undertand, in the city of Detroit, TV

repairmen are licensed; and in any advertising they do they must display the licence number so that any consumer who ultimately has reason to believe that he got unsatisfactory service can always check with the central licensing authority and lodge a complaint there. The repairman can be readily identified by his licence number, and if the central authority considers that there is a possibility of fraudulent activity they can look into the matter; and if they find that there is fraudulent activity there are procedures for cancelling the licence. I think that sort of protection might very well be considered.

Another matter where I think the consumer is badly in need of protection was brought to light with the famous—or, shall we say, infamous—Piccadilly Club episode a while ago. The basic facts of that case, as I understood them, were that a certain gentleman collected substantial sums of money from various citizens with the idea that the money was to be used for purchasing a chartered flight to Europe for them. The trouble was that he used it for other purposes, and these people did not get their charter flight to Europe nor did they get their money back.

One of my constituents was in this category. He came to me—I am not a lawyer, of course, but my colleague in that constituency, the hon. federal member, Mr. Brewin, is a lawyer. I referred it to Mr. Brewin to see if he thought anything could be done about it. He told me he was satisfied that this Piccadilly Club and its proprietor were absolutely judgment-proof, and therefore the man would simply be wasting his time and money to try to collect from it.

I might say this is not by any means the first time that this sort of problem has arisen. It is the first time, probably, where it has arisen where the people have been left at home—which may be a certain advantage, because there have been cases where people got as far as Europe and then were left high and dry over in Europe. The promoter of the project had run off with the money that they thought was being used for a plane to bring them back home. And of course he got a 30-day head start on them, because they did not know until 30 days had elapsed that there was no money put down for taking them home.

It seems to me that in this business, where sums of money are being taken from the public for a service that is to be provided in the future, there should be some pretty stiff bonding requirements. I think the promoters of this type of project should be licensed, and should be required to post bonds for the full amount that has come into their possession until such time as the services that were purchased have been rendered.

Those are the two specific areas into which I would suggest the hon. Minister might look. But I think the number of suggestions that are now being made to him—and I think hon. members could make a great many over and above those that have already been mentioned—suggest that the hon. Minister may not be approaching this problem in the most effective way.

We run into situations where people have been swindled and then think of ways and means of improving the law to prevent somebody else from being swindled in the future. Unfortunately this world is full of crooks, and there are crooks who will always find a new gimmick and there are suckers who will fall for the new gimmick. I think we will have quite a merry chase in the years ahead in this Legislature, trying to keep up with all the gimmicks that crooks can devise. I think we should try to keep up with them, but we are going to have quite a job.

I am going to suggest to the hon. Minister a more effective approach to this whole problem, along the lines that the former member for Oshawa used to suggest regularly to the government—that we should have a consumers' bureau that will have the whole problem of consumer protection constantly under study. It would propose, of course, appropriate legislation, but it would also have some general powers—I think one has to be careful to make sure they are not so general that they become coercive and dictatorial—to give satisfaction to consumers. At any rate it should be a bureau to which consumers can bring their complaints; that can be constantly in touch with those complaints and constantly make recommendations to the proper enforcement authorities.

I notice that President Johnson in the United States has recently established an office that he calls the President's Special Assistant for Consumer Affairs. A lady by the name of Mrs. Esther Peterson has filled that office and she is accumulating, according to the report I have here in the Toronto Daily Star, quite an interesting array of information ranging all the way from the type of blatant frauds that we have been talking about to more subtle frauds which some of our largest corporations indulge in, such as deceptive packaging. We have laws about disclosure on packages and so on, but it is amazing how much of the time and effort of intelligent people corporations devote to ways and means of, in effect, evading the law.

The meat packing companies are one example. A few years ago the Canadian Association of Consumers suggested that they should have to desist from the old practice they had of having red lines across the cellophane window on their bacon packages. The federal government amended the law to that effect. Then the packers devised new methods where they showed only the rind, so you still could not tell whether the bacon was fat or lean. There is also the problem of odd sizes in packages. A package that may comply with the law by having the content written on it in very small type somewhere—maybe about 25 per cent bigger than is necessary for the amount in it—and a misleading impression is given to the consumer.

There is also the old business of stating the weight in grams, sir. Nobody in this country understands grams except scientists. Why can't they state the contents of packages in the measurements that are commonly understood in this country, and also in even numbers? These are all matters on which I think a consumers' bureau could give very useful information to the government and to the public at large.

In some cases it may not be a matter of legislation at all. It may be a matter of information to the public, to warn people of the sort of tricks that are being played on them. The motto, as I understand it, or as it is disclosed in this news account of President Johnson's assistant on consumer affairs, is that the ancient slogan caveat emptor—let the buyer beware—should be changed to "let the seller make full disclosure." I think that is a very sound motto. It would be a good motto for a consumers' bureau in this province, if we could ever persuade the government to establish one.

I am happy to learn that the hon. Minister is considering some action in the area of consumer protection, but I think this is now a sufficiently complicated field that it requires action on a broad front. The best way to do that would be by the establishment of a consumers' bureau in addition to the enactment of specific statutes that may appear to be necessary.

Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of other items relating to the department that I would like to mention briefly. The department has now been organized into two branches—one, the insurance branch and its function is quite clearly understood; the other is the registration and examination branch which is something of a catch-all. In fact, I think the hon. Minister, when he was making his introductory remarks, stated that it was found necessary to relieve the insurance branch from a great many other responsibilities that were cluttering up the scene. I think that was the expression he used.

I was a little unhappy to learn that the administration relating to credit unions was one of the items cluttering up the scene. I think the government has the wrong approach on credit unions. Under The Department of Insurance and under this new branch, there is supervision of the affairs of credit unions, which is necessary. Obviously, there should be inspections of credit unions to make sure that no officer of the credit union is tempted by the large sums of money in the treasury of the union; and to make sure that the people who have invested their money in the credit union are fully protected. But I think there is a much greater function than that to be performed in regard to these institutions called credit unions, which, in my opinion, are wonderful examples of democratic self-help on the part of citizens. I think that we should not only approach credit unions with a regulatory function in mind, which essentially is the approach of the registration and examinations branch of this department—and is necessarily the approach of that branch—but I also think we should think in terms of encouragement of credit unions and of assisting consumers by encouraging them to set up organizations for their own protection, of which credit unions are one of the most important.

In fact, I would put it more broadly than that. I would suggest that the whole field of co-operative legislation should be put under a single administration. It is now scattered. I think some of it is under The Department of Agriculture and I think the incorporation of co-operatives is still under The Companies Act, I am not quite sure—that would place it under The Provincial Secretary's Department. I think we should have one single administration dealing with co-operatives and dealing with the whole concept in a positive way, not only of inspecting and examining, but also of encouraging and assisting consumers who wish to assist themselves in establishing organizations—democratically controlled organizations—through which they can assist themselves.

I would suggest that this is a function that could be coupled with the function of consumer protection that I was talking about a moment ago and which I suggested could be dealt with by a consumers' bureau. I think the government should give consideration to setting up a separate department, which might be called a department of co-operative and consumer affairs. It would perhaps be divided into branches, one in the realm of consumer protection and the other in the realm of the administration of legislation relating to co-operatives in all their forms. I think it quite likely that there would have to be several branches under that general category because there is a variety of types of co-operative organizations.

Are we really going to get seriously into the consumer field? In my opinion the consumer is the forgotten man. We are all consumers and we all have protection in almost every aspect of our lives except in our capacity as consumers, which probably is our most important economic activity—I think there should be a positive rather than merely a negative approach to the whole question of the consumer's position. I would suggest that the way to do that would be through the establishment of a department along the lines I have suggested.

Now finally, Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions that I would like to ask with regard to the administration of The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act. The hon. Minister may answer them now or later as he sees fit, it does not matter to me, but I may want to ask supplementary questions after he has given his initial answers. I am not quite sure how the administration of that Act now fits into the new setup, but as of a year or two ago the administration of that Act was entrusted to an official, a very conscientious and capable official, by the name of Mr. Simone. He had, I think, one assistant and one or two stenographers in his office. He had not only the responsibility for the administration of The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act, but had two or three other statutes to look after as well. He and his assistant and one or two stenographers in the office. Now, in the new setup, is there going to be a larger staff for the administration of this particular statute? Are there going to be more people who will be able to give attention to it?

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): The hon. member for York South has raised some questions concerning the resignations of two officials of The Insurance Department. One, I understand, is a senior civil servant and it is my understanding that this was his career. I am wondering whether there are not shades of the Cudney affair here, because I have been told that these two officials of The Department of Insurance referred to by the hon. member for York South first heard of their resignations when they read about it in the newspapers.

I would be most interested in hearing of the circumstances surrounding the retirement of these two men. My query is: Did they resign or were they forced to resign because a man was going to be brought into the department?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, I will endeavour, as best I may, to give the information and state the government policy, or departmental policy, with respect to the items raised by the various hon. members during this interesting discussion. If by any chance I should miss a point, I would be glad if the hon. member would raise it again. Most certainly when we deal with these general matters I will be very pleased to have supplementary questions because the many matters which are the responsibility of this department, are in effect, as the hon. member for Woodbine has said, of interest to each one of us in this province of Ontario. They are matters of vital importance to us.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, in a very short and, I hope, comprehensive reply to the statements and opinions of the hon. member for Downsview, with respect to The Unconscionable Transactions Act, that we are in a very difficult area. The Act in question, as worded, has been upheld by a majority decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

My advisors and myself have been trying to weigh the possibility of either amending that Act, or having supplementary Acts which would do what I think is necessary and what the hon. member has suggested. That is, to provide some sanction and help to the people who are victimized. The advice I have at the moment is that we are not in a position yet to be sure that any such changes we would make to that Act, or any changes that we would like to make in a new Act to accomplish the same thing, would not themselves then be declared ultra vires. It is that particular problem with which we are struggling. I can assure the House, Mr. Chairman, that if we can resolve that problem, there will be legislation at this session with respect to it.

The area of consumer credit, as we call it, is one which has caused a great deal of publicity. It has also caused a great deal of hardship and loss to people throughout the province, in fact, in the western world I would think, without publicity. It is a very difficult area. I can remember when I was a junior member of this House, sitting down at the end of this row, when the then Attorney General, now the Chief Justice of Ontario, was being questioned along similar lines. He got up and said, in as many words, that you cannot protect the people against themselves unless you wish to have a totalitarian state. So, as I think of some of the things that have been said just now, I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the hon. members of this House: We are presently in Ontario, a people who are inspected, who are regulated and told what to do to a very, very great degree and, in many cases, to an embarrassing degree so far as the citizen of Ontario is concerned.

It is my personal opinion that, insofar as it is possible, we should endeavour to protect the rights of our citizens and protect their property. But we should do so with the least possible interference not only with their personal and property rights, but with those of their neighbours and other people doing business in the community, in the province and in the country.

I fully agree with the hon. member for Woodbine that perhaps the old warning of caveat emptor is outmoded. I was intrigued by his quotation of an American saying, "Let the seller make full disclosure". Now, Mr. Chairman, I would draw to the attention of the House that this has been the principle which this government has put into its legislation for more than a decade past.

Our Mortgage Brokers Registration Act, The Unconscionable Transactions Act—all these things—provide for full disclosure. But it is not enough. And I say advisedly that it is not enough, because full disclosure, in many cases, does not even warn the individual citizen of the trap into which he is being very neatly and carefully talked. So I say, that that particular suggestion on the part of our American friends, conveyed to us, Mr. Chairman, by the hon. member for Woodbine, is of little value in the present situation because we have already reached that point and we must progress further.

One of the difficulties, and I am sure every hon. member on all sides of this House will agree with me, in bringing in legislation up to now on consumer credit, so-called, has been the fact, first of all, that we wish to have, as I have been getting today, the views and the suggestions of the hon. members. Secondly, we have a select committee of this House investigating this particular matter. It has been my hope that there would be, as the hon. member for Downsview, I believe, mentioned, an interim or partial report, at least in time for my law officers and legislative counsel to produce some legislation based upon the research and the opinions of those hon. members of this House, Mr. Chairman, who are members of that committee.

Now, I am beginning to feel that perhaps it will not be possible for me to wait for that particular occurrence, and that I will perhaps be bringing to you such legislation as we feel in the department is possible at this time. And then I may say, Mr. Chairman, that certainly we will be delighted to amend or change, at this session or later, that legislation to include and embrace any suggestions which the select committee may produce but which have not been included and which are proper for inclusion in that type of legislation.

I would say also, both to the hon. member for Downsview and the hon. member for Woodbine, that with respect to the estimates, as printed, and as they appear before the hon. members of this House today, they were originally made out in September of last year. Their form and their content are, in many cases, the absolute content that you see today.

As the hon. member for Woodbine may have seen from the organization chart I sent over to him, the effective date of the revision of The Department of Insurance was November 1. Actually, it is only now getting under way, and therefore, of course, the estimates had to appear in the same form as last year. I may say that next year, undoubtedly, the estimates will be in a different form, both with respect to The Department of Insurance and with respect to The Attorney General's Department about which I will speak when those estimates are here because there is certainly reorganization going on there.

I trust the hon. members will understand that this was not an attempt to confuse anyone. It was a case of the estimates having to go to the Treasury board to be approved and ready for the hon. Provincial Treasurer to include in his budget, long before we could put into effect the reorganization which we are now implementing.

I was interested, Mr. Chairman, in the comments of the hon. member for Downsview, the hon. member for York South, and I believe the hon. member for Woodbine touched upon it, although I am not sure. That is section 339 of The Insurance Act, a section which for many years—30, I believe the hon. member for Downsview mentioned—has been on the statute books of this province. During that period of time there have been governments of various political complexion on this side of the House, and over that period of time the consensus of opinion of each of those governments, and I would draw to the attention of the House that none of those governments was a government of the third party here represented; but the consensus of opinion of those governments was that the time was not yet, nor the necessity here, for the enactment nor the proclamation of that section. And it was said that since it has not been proclaimed, Mr. Chairman, that we have no control over the rates, that there is no way of the government knowing whether rates are proper or not, whether increases in rates—and they are usually increases—desired by the companies are justified and, all in all, that the insurance business, and particularly the automobile insurance business, is using the department as a rubber stamp when it comes to rates.

Mr. Chairman, this is very far from the truth. First of all, as I have pointed out, for a number of decades, through several governments of both the old political parties, nothing has been done because it was felt that that proclamation was neither desirable nor necessary.

Second, the hon. member for Downsview and the hon. member for York South made quite a bit about the fact that the final report of the select committee on automobile insurance, which included a recommendation that this section be proclaimed, has been in the hands of the government for almost a year.

Mr. Singer: The second interim report made that recommendation.

Hon. Mr. Cass: I would point out to the hon. members that these matters are very difficult matters, and so far as The Department of the Attorney General and its officers are concerned this is a matter which, apart from the insurance angle, presents many difficulties. It would take a great deal of time to deal with this.

May I couple, with the remarks I have made with respect to that, some observations with respect to compensation without fault also recommended by the committee and about which there have been resolutions presented to the government, both to the head of the government and to myself, and I am sure a few other hon. Ministers. Here again it is a matter of very great technical and legal difficulty.

I can assure the House, Mr. Chairman, that as far as the officers of the Crown are concerned we have given it great study. We feel that in the first place, as law officers, we cannot at the moment agree with the conclusions reached by the committee and other people with respect to this. I also would like to say, Mr. Chairman, to the House, that I understand, in fact I have named members to it, that there is a committee under the appropriate authority—and that is not the Attorney General—studying this particular matter. I presume that in due course there will be a conclusion reached, and I can assure you that this government acts very quickly and very soundly on the conclusions which are reached by committees, even though it may not be as quickly as some of us could hope and many people would expect.

Select committees of this House, Mr. Chairman, perform a very important function; and I was surprised that one of the older hon. members of this House, and a valued member of many select committees, should have said here, just now in debate, that select committees are used to delay matters or push them under the rug. I do not recall his exact words but that was about the size of it.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say this: Many of these matters, and most of the matters which are referred by this House to a select committee, are matters which require a great deal of research. A great deal of study must be done by someone before any conclusions are reached.

Mr. MacDonald: How about a central registry of automobile liens?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Oh, that one is coming. One of the most important functions of a select committee is to do this research, and hear delegations, and give to the House the benefit of the research which has been done and the opinions which have been formed. The hon. member for York South has mentioned one case which presented such difficulties that even yet we have not a solution, but normally within a reasonable time the government machinery and the laws can be changed and action is taken.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that a select committee of this House is a very important aid to the deliberations of this House, and a tremendous aid to the work of the department whose duty and responsibility it is, under the direction of the responsible Minister, to formulate policy and then carry it out.

There was some mention made, Mr. Chairman, by the hon. member for York South, about mortgage brokers and credit, and the fact that the government and my department did not take any action until there was a great deal of publicity before the committee last summer and last fall. In order that the House may understand that many of the things which are said, and read from newspapers in this House, do not accurately represent the true facts—because in some cases they are not known—I would like to give the House a little history of the two cases which received the greatest amount of publicity before that committee. It will indicate that long before it hit the committee the proper officials of the department had had a great deal of interest in these people and had taken certain steps.

The first case, Mr. Chairman, is that of one Jules Newton who was operating as the Forest Hill Investment Corporation, and was first licensed on July 1, 1960. Remember, this investigation was in 1963, or the committee hearing it was. My report is that there was a constant number of complaints to the department, but nothing could be done by the department about it because in every case full disclosure had been made.

Remember, the hon. member for Woodbine has just suggested that we must change caveat emptor to full disclosure, and I have pointed out that that has been our principle. So, full disclosure was made and these cases were investigated, but he was directed to, and did, on April 3, 1962, appear before the Superintendent of Insurance and was told that if he did not take that action which was necessary to stop these complaints, even though we could take no action, something would have to be done.

On July 10, 1963, he was ordered by the superintendent to discontinue his newspaper and radio advertising because of the content; and then, on July 26, 1963, and only then, he appeared before the select committee.

Mr. Chairman, this indicates that for a year before this the government department concerned had been taking all steps open to it under the full disclosure policy which, up to now, has been adopted by this House and this government to check this man. And then, on December 19, 1963, certain action was instituted which resulted in the surrender and cancellation of this man's licence on January 22, 1964.

Then if we would refer to the case of Sidney Rosenberg who operated as Northern Loan, and this was another of the famous cases in the press and on the air and before the committee last year. He, too, was first licensed as a mortgage broker on July 8, 1960, and again there were complaints almost from the beginning, and again there was very little that we could do. He and his records were examined periodically and they revealed that full disclosure appeared to have been made.

I point that out to you again, Mr. Chairman; the hon. member for Woodbine has said that the new thing is full disclosure.

Mr. Bryden: I did not say that at all.

Hon. Mr. Cass: I am telling you, Mr. Chairman, that full disclosure has been the policy of this government for many a day and it has not been satisfactory.

Mr. Bryden: I will tell the hon. Minister a few things.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, may I have order, please?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, I was very courteous and I allowed all the hon. members to say what they wished to say, and I listened to them, and I am now trying to answer them; and I would expect, Mr. Chairman, that I would receive this same courtesy from those on the other side of the House.

It was disclosed that Mr. Rosenberg was putting, in the papers which people signed, full disclosure of what he was doing. But on November 22, 1962, Mr. Rosenberg was required to and did appear before the deputy Superintendent of Insurance, and was then required to give assurances with respect to some of the practices which the department thought were not in the public interest. And again on January 10, 1963, Rosenberg appeared before the Superintendent of Insurance in a formal hearing to show cause why his registration should not be cancelled.

An hon. member: The department is certainly long suffering.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Further assurances were received from him that he would discontinue his practices and then, on July 26, 1963, he appeared before the select committee and eventually his licence was surrendered.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my reading this to the hon. members of the House is to point out two things: first of all that the department was busy on this long before these people appeared before the select committee, and secondly, to point out the failings, in my opinion, and in the opinion of my officials, of the doctrine of full disclosure alone without something more to it.

I would like to say merely one thing, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the observations of the hon. member for York South with respect to insurance, particularly automobile insurance. I think he was referring to that specifically when he mentioned about a public insurance company producing certain results that cannot be produced otherwise and telling the results. I am not an expert, I am not on the committee, and I have not had a very close connection with it. I would merely point out that my own knowledge from statistics which I have seen would indicate that certainly in some of the states to the south of us, the types of insurance referred to by the hon. member for York South have resulted in some very serious situations, leaving a great deal of the public uninsured, and creating an administrative morass from which even our ingenious friends in some of the states have been unable to extract themselves.

The hon. member for York South asked two specific questions, if I recall correctly. The first one, or one of them, was specifically: What were the duties of the Superintendent of Insurance with respect to the protection of the public, or was he protecting the insurance companies?

I merely say this, Mr. Chairman, and it is all I can say or anyone can say: The Acts this House have placed on the statute books of Ontario and the regulations issued thereunder, lay upon the superintendent certain responsibilities. Those responsibilities, to the best of his ability, he has been carrying out and he has not gone further than the law and his duties allow or require. He has done everything which has been within his power to ensure that the laws of this province as enacted here are carried out. He has actually gone further, as you may have gathered, Mr. Chairman, from the reports I have read on the mortgage brokers business and as we would gather from what was said by the hon. member for York South. In cases where the law does not give him the powers to do those things which he feels should be done, he has endeavoured by persuasion and perhaps the threatening stick of an authoritative position in government, to endeavour to see that matters are righted.

The other question which was asked both by the hon. member for York South and by the hon. member for Etobicoke, Mr. Chairman, concerns the resignation as reported of two members of the staff. I would say only two things with respect to this. One is that both were permitted to resign, and secondly, that in order that no harm be done to the careers of those two men, I will furnish to the two hon. members in question confidentially, the reasons why they were permitted to resign.

The hon. member for Essex South, whose little note, Mr. Chairman, I acknowledge and whose question I duly noted, has inquired as to the policy of the department, the policy of those in the department under the Act, and regulations with respect to insurance agents and their licensing part time if they are in other employment—if they are municipal employees and all the ancillary things, I believe.

Mr. Chairman, over the period of 14 or 15 months I have been responsible for this department I have had many such instances arise, such as the hon. member for Essex South has mentioned. Not in every case is the member a public servant also, or a municipal employee. I have found that the intent and the policy of the superintendent and those working under him, has been to provide for the public those people who first of all are competent—and they are presumed to be competent when they are first sponsored by an insurance company—and secondly, who pass the departmental examinations. They are presumed to be competent, so the first branch of the policy is to provide competent people, and the second thing is to give the public the best possible service.

There is a rule of thumb partially supported by the regulations, Mr. Chairman. There had been a determination that in certain areas a man can do a good job and earn a good living with a reasonable return for his work, if he only sells life insurance or only sells real estate, or only sells casualty and general insurance. There are other areas, Mr. Chairman, where it is quite impossible that the agent could make a living from doing that. We must also bear in mind that competition being what it is, if there were no restrictions on the other occupations and the type of work done by a person who sells insurance, we would have a great many people selling insurance as a side-line, after supper, during the noon hour, who first of all had not the competency to do it, and secondly, who were not giving service to the public, who were in it for the particular purpose of adding to another income.

During this last 15 months, I have had some difficulty with respect to this, because I might say, Mr. Chairman, that not in every case have I personally been in agreement with some of the decisions in the department. The matter of the part-time agents and what they can do when they are also selling insurance is under review. I would hope that the result of that would be that the few cases that I have seen where I think that perhaps the public interest has not been well served, and perhaps an individual has not been properly dealt with, will never occur again. But I must say this, Mr. Chairman, that one of the prime duties of The Department of Insurance with respect to licensing agents for insurance companies and real estate, mortgages, if you wish, and all the rest of it, is the protection of the public and service to the public. On those two principles the department will stand or fall.

The hon. member for Yorkview made some very interesting suggestions, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the types of law which might be enforced here.

I would mention to him that in England a bill has already been enacted which in some instances calls for the same thing as he has mentioned—that there be a waiting period after the signing of these contracts until they become effective, and that at any time during that period the contract may be rescinded unilaterally by the purchaser. We are in touch with the authorities there in an endeavour to ascertain how this works, how it can be enforced and what the general effect is. I can assure the hon. member that I personally, and my officials, are very interested in this approach. As yet, it is an experiment and whether or not it is one we should attempt here, I have not yet decided. When such legislation as I shall introduce later this session comes in, it will be obvious whether or not we feel the time is ripe for that, but I do thank the hon. member for bringing that to the attention of the other hon. members, because in my opinion it is definitely a very good approach and we are waiting hopefully to see if it does work.

To the same hon. member I would say, Mr. Chairman, that one of the great principles of law, normally, is that it should not be retroactive. The people should not have rights taken away from them that they already have. So I doubt if there will be help for those in need up to the time of the passing of any legislation in this House, in this session or at any future time. There will be little use of them hoping that the legislation which will come in now will be of any great assistance to them, if their difficulties have arisen through contracts or other dealings arising before the date that the Act received Royal assent.

It could be, and I do not want that statement to be dogmatic, that this might be one of the cases where a retroactive law would be a good principle. By and large, it is not a good principle, but in this case it might well be and I can assure the hon. member that we have in our files many such cases and that is a problem that we are fully aware of and one to which we will give the consideration of the very learned and experienced people in my department.

I was interested, Mr. Chairman, in the references made by the hon. member for Woodbine to the former member of this House, Mr. Tommy Thomas of Oshawa. I am sure that not only the hon. member's party but all of us in the House miss the very pleasant and genial personality of that former member, but also, many times, the very sensible ideas that he had. I have not forgotten his impassioned speeches year after year on behalf of the consumers' bureau. I had been for a long time a member of the Consumers' Union—I have forgotten the exact name—it issues consumer reports in the United States and it was a pioneer in that. We now have Canadian organizations. There is no question, Mr. Chairman, in my mind but that somewhere in the future there must be a place for the government to receive comments from the consumer and to act upon his or her views or complaints. I do not say that the consumers' bureau, such as mentioned by the hon. member for Woodbine, is the answer. I doubt very much if it is. But nevertheless, it is a good suggestion. I have always considered it over the years as one which will help to guide us to what ultimately will be the proper way to handle these particular matters.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bruce with, I presume, the tacit approval of his colleague to the left, inquired as to the position of members of the legal profession who engage in the business of dealing in real estate. I would read to the House now the provisions of The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, with respect to that, and with that I say no more:

Registration shall not be required in respect of any trade in real estate by . . .
(g) a person who is practising as a solicitor of the Supreme Court where the trade is made in the course of, and as a part of, the solicitor's practice.

That is plain, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Whicher: That is, registration was not necessary.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Registration, Mr. Chairman, is the basis for any action by the department.

Mr. Whicher: In other words, bonding is not necessary?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Nothing is necessary under this Act, if he is a practising solicitor. There are other ways, Mr. Chairman, we members of the profession hope, whereby our colleagues in that profession can become restrained from doing those things which are reprehensible under this and other Acts.

The hon. member for Woodbine drew to our attention a practice which has been much in our minds. That is the matter of television repairs. I think that every one of us has had some experience in that line. It is a vexing problem because we must determine how best to deal with it—whether it should be at the provincial level or whether it should be a municipal responsibility. Then, as I mentioned before, we people are pretty well saddled with officials of governments of all levels who are trying to tell us how to run our businesses and what to do and what not to do. While we are considering this particular field of television repair, I must assure the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, that I am not persuaded that what he has suggested is completely the answer.

Finally, Mr. Chairman—and I hope I have not missed any of the comments and questions—again, the hon. member for Woodbine gave us, I would say, a very short course in his party's views on credit unions and their place in society. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Provincial Treasurer, whose responsibility it is to raise money for things in this province that are necessary, would have had some observations to make with respect to the place of untaxed businesses in the province. For myself, I merely wish to say this, that credit unions and co-operatives perform a very useful service—I am a rural man and I am accustomed to co-operatives.

While I do not think it is the responsibility of this government to encourage their growth one way or another, I think it is our responsibility to make it possible for new ones to be formed and for those in existence to grow and prosper and flourish. I think that in pursuance of that, we also have a responsibility as the hon. member for Woodbine has said, to protect those whose small savings go into these credit unions and build up the great funds which many of them administer. It is toward that end that the efforts of the department will be directed and it is for that reason that the credit unions have been placed under the examination side of The Department of Insurance.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of points that the hon. Minister—

An hon. member: One at a time.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, first I would like to thank the hon. Minister for the comments he has just made on the credit unions. I had a question to put to him in the matter of credit unions, but before I do put the question, Mr. Chairman,

I would like to say that I am at the present time, a member of a credit committee of a credit union. If The Department of Insurance supplies money to the credit unions, does that disqualify me as a member of this Legislature?

I would like to thank the hon. Minister for the information he has given me. Being a new member, there were a lot of things I did not know. The question I would like to ask the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, is with regard to the inspection of credit unions. If I understand correctly, this inspection is done by someone appointed by some federation of credit unions, and I think in the case of the one that I represent it would be the federation of the Caisses Populaires of the province of Ontario. Is there a grant being given by The Department of Insurance for the inspection of those credit unions?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, one of the interesting things is that of all of the businesses and organizations which are registered with The Department of Insurance, the only one which does not pay a fee toward the services it receives from the Ontario government is the credit union. I hope to remedy that in the near future, Mr. Chairman. As a result, over the years, with the agreement of the credit union leagues and the individual credit unions and The Department of Insurance, there has grown up a double system of inspecting which is really a single system. The federation, the credit union league and the other two organizations to which the credit unions belong, have a staff of examiners and The Department of Insurance has a staff of examiners. There is an understanding that The Department of Insurance will not examine the books that the credit union league or the others have examined and vice versa. There is also an understanding that if the credit union people find anything which is not right they will immediately notify The Department of Insurance so that necessary action can officially be taken, and a Department of Insurance examiner sent in if necessary to provide the basis for any action.

Mr. Chairman, this has worked exceedingly well over the years. There has been wonderful co-operation between the examiners, and the officials of these credit union organizations, and the officials of The Department of Insurance.

I myself have had several meetings with the credit union league officials—who are members of the largest one of the federations of credit unions. I find that there is a great fund of good will, a great fund of understanding of the problems into which small and individual credit unions can get—because of the fact that they, first of all, are on a voluntary basis; they do not have any paid help; and, second, therefore the person who is keeping the books and looking after things does it at the weekend, or at night, or when he has time. Everybody is aware of that and so everybody in the credit union, the inspection staff, and the government is very careful to keep an eye on and help these small credit unions who themselves are not capable of hiring, for financial reasons, fully qualified and permanent full-time staff. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, if that answers the question but it is an outline of what happens.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, there were two points that I wanted to comment on as a result of the remarks of the hon. Minister this afternoon. The first one was in relationship to a section of The Insurance Act, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister was commenting—and I think my remarks would be more effective, Mr. Chairman, if I had the hon. Minister's attention.

Hon. Mr. Cass: You know, Mr. Chairman, the hon. members always have my attention, and I certainly am listening.

Mr. Singer: Well, the hon. Minister is indeed an unusual man.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Indeed, I am.

Mr. Singer: He can carry on a conversation and listen to the debate, too.

Hon. Mr. Cass: I thank the hon. member.

Mr. Singer: Well, recognizing the unusual capabilities of the hon. Minister, I will go on, Mr. Chairman.

He commented that the recommendation concerning section 393 of The Insurance Act really had not been before the government for too long a time, having only come in March, 1963. In fact, Mr. Chairman, it came in December, 1961, for the first time, in the second interim report of the select committee on automobile insurance, and it was on page 8 of that report, item No. 4, headed: "The granting of power to the government to control insurance premium rates through the Superintendent of Insurance."

Then the committee saw fit, because no action had been taken as a result of the second interim report, to repeat on page 10 of its final report the recommendation that had been made in December, 1961. So, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that this recommendation has been before the government since December, 1961, which, even for this government, I would have thought, would have been ample time to have come to some conclusion about it.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit me to say this? He, like myself, has had some experience with select committees; and they are like this House—a complete law unto themselves within the sphere of their authority. I have been chairman of a select committee and I have had interim reports prepared, and I have had the conclusions in the interim reports changed, and I would like to say this: Any government which acted on an interim report, knowing that a further report was coming would be taking a great chance in case the members of the select committee changed their minds and brought in a final report with a different conclusion.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the hon. Minister on his facile answers, in any event, even though they are not too complete.

Hon. Mr. Cass: They are very useful.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. Minister only had one ear, too.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the other point that I wanted to make was this: A bit of new information that came to us this afternoon. The hon. Minister said that there has been a committee, he had heard that there was a committee, appointed to investigate the report of the select committee, and then he said, "As a matter of fact, I can go further. I had occasion to recommend that certain people be on that committee."

This is a brand-new piece of news, at least to me, Mr. Chairman, insofar as the interim reports and the final report of the select committee on automobile insurance are concerned. And I think, if this is being investigated further, that the House should be entitled to know the terms of reference to the committee and the membership of the committee—when they were appointed, what they are inquiring about, and how long it is likely that they are going to sit before the House gets the government's decision in connection with this very important matter of public business.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, I would merely like to agree with the hon. member that that should be the case, and I am sure it will be the case, and I am sure that the Minister who has the carriage of this matter will, at the appropriate time, give all that information and, indeed, more to the House.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I was amazed at the way the hon. Minister flailed away at what I thought was quite an innocent, harmless little suggestion—that our motto should be not caveat emptor but "let the seller make full disclosure".

Hon. Mr. Cass: But the hon. member for Woodbine is away behind the times.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am not as far behind the times as the hon. Minister would like the House to believe. It is true that this principle has been incorporated, usually in a half-hearted way, into some statutes in this province, but there are large areas where nothing has been done. I suggested that there would be a way of extending this principle to much broader fields and not necessarily through restrictive legislation—although unfortunately that is required in some cases—but through the establishment of a special agency, one of whose functions would be educational. I guess one cannot possibly protect every sucker against himself, but educational activities can help a lot.

I have seen a lot of pretty slick deals for which people have fallen, that they might not have fallen for if they had been adequately warned of the pitfalls in some of the things they were getting into. However, I am not going to belabour that point.

I asked the hon. Minister a couple of questions with regard to The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act, and although he gave a very full statement in relation to what hon. members said, I think, that unless my attention wandered at some point, he overlooked this question I was asking with regard to the present administration—

Hon. Mr. Cass: Yes, I am sorry I did. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, I would like to say that the present registrar, Mr. Simone, is certainly going to remain and, I hope, have the opportunity of having more victories like the two I have just mentioned, because that is about what it amounts to from his opinion, I would think.

Second, I am not in a position at the moment, Mr. Chairman, to say exactly what is going to happen with respect to the examination branch of The Department of Insurance. When the estimates of The Department of the Attorney General come before the House there may be more information with respect to this particular branch of The Department of Insurance.

I would merely say to the hon. member that I feel, as he does—and I think my officials share that knowledge and that feeling—that it has been a very difficult situation in which our officials, not just in the mortgage broker legislation but certainly in the others, have been placed for the simple reason I have mentioned.

We have required full disclosure as the law in this province. And so long as full disclosure has been the law without sanctions or penalties—whether we are entitled because of the criminal law jurisdiction to impose certain penalties I do not know—that is a problem too. Because we have made full disclosure our policy, once Mr. Simone, who has been mentioned, and I use his name because he has very strong feelings, comes to the point that he and the other officials are satisfied full disclosure has been made, then the most they can do, Mr. Chairman, is what the hon. member for York South indicates to the House the Superintendent of Insurance did in another case: Use whatever influence and status and prestige they have to endeavour to correct what appears, morally, at least, to be an injustice.

I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that in the changes which are being made, and in the legislation which is presently under preparation, we would be able to present to this House legislation which will place these officials in a position where perhaps some greater assistance can be given.

And I can assure the House that the Treasury board of this government is a very careful board. They look after the money very well. They help the hon. Provincial Treasurer produce a budget just as we have had here a fortnight ago. But they are also very sensible people, many of them are businessmen, and if we have an organization which needs staff for that purpose I know the staff will be made available and that we will be able to give that protection which I think, personally, the public not only demand but are entitled to, in some measure at least.

And so my answer, very shortly to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, and I apologize for having missed it, is that the same officials will be in charge. I trust that they will have legislation which will give them some of the powers which they need, and that whatever staff they require to assist them, whether it be investigators or otherwise, will be made available.

But I would also say to the House, Mr. Chairman, and I say this honestly and I say it because it is so hard to understand, not perhaps by the hon. members, Mr. Chairman, but by the public, that we can pass these laws here and say we are going to do things but it takes time. And, regardless of the comments from the other side, it does take time to assemble the staff and to get things ready to take action. We will do whatever we have to do, whatever we can do, just as quickly, Mr. Chairman, as we can.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister how many brokers are now registered under The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Seven hundred.

Mr. Bryden: Seven hundred. That is a significant reduction from a few years ago, I believe, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Yes, and there is a reason for it, Mr. Chairman. Years ago real estate brokers were registered there and now they have been separated; so we have several thousand real estate brokers and only 700—

Mr. Bryden: No, but even since the separation was made. I think the answer I got to a similar question, about three years ago, was that at that time there were 1,200 registered, and I suggested at the time that was far too many, and obviously there should be some tightening up in the registration policy.

Hon. Mr. Cass: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that the 1,200 did include those real estate brokers who are also registered—

Mr. Bryden: So there has actually been no—

Hon. Mr. Cass: Very little change.

Mr. Bryden: No basic change in the number registered. Well, Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the comments the hon. Minister made in regard to the reorganization as it affects the administration of this particular Act. I can understand that he cannot necessarily give definitive answers to questions when he is in the middle of a reorganization. The reorganization looks like a good idea and I am sure that he and his officials will work it out in the best possible way.

In regard to his suggestion that some of us over here have been a little behind the times, I would like to point out to him that it is three years ago that I raised in this House the question of abuses under this Act, including in particular the company Forest Hill

Investments. I suggested at that time that The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act was not performing its function. It was nothing but a system whereby the government collected licence fees. The staff for administering it was so inadequate that it was impossible to provide any supervision of the people who were registered under the Act. Therefore, as long as they paid their fee—which I think then was $25, I do not know what it is now—they were registered. They could even advertise that they were registered under Ontario legislation, leading the public to believe that they had certain, well, that they were reputable people to deal with!

I may say that I would not like to create the impression that I regard disclosure by itself as the answer to all these problems. In this field I think disclosure may be necessary, but there is a lot more required. As a matter of fact, the only provision, as I recall, for disclosure the government has implemented is to the effect that the dealer or the broker must provide his client with a written statement giving certain information about the loan and, as evidence that the client has seen it, the client must sign. Well, I pointed out three years ago in this House that what happened—in a confusing matter of this kind—was that where there are all sorts of documents to be signed the crooked dealer simply says: "We have all the money you want, just come and have our simple service, we will look after you. All you have to do is sign here, sign here and sign here".

The poor fellow was so confused that although he was signing a disclosure document he did not even look at. I agree that there is no easy way to solve that problem. Obviously you cannot have an inspector from the department sitting in the office to make sure the fellow reads the document.

I do think, though, that there should be more energetic action by the department in relation to these people who clearly evade the disclosure provisions. I am pretty sure that Mr. Simone knows in his own mind which ones are obeying the law in letter and in spirit, and those who are taking some short cuts. And I think if he were given sufficient staff he would soon clear out the bad apples in the barrel. Then I think the fact that a company was registered under this Act would be a guarantee to the public that they were dealing with reputable people. But it is no guarantee at the present time, and indeed it may, in itself, be somewhat misleading.

Now, the hon. Minister has spoken capably about possible powers of inspection under this Act. Now I do not know if he is concerned about constitutional problems or not, but it would seem to me that if there is a licensing function, then the government has the authority to lay down conditions under which the licence shall be granted and retained. Therefore, inspectors acting on behalf of the government would or should have available to them some procedure whereby they can have licences cancelled if the conditions are not complied with. I, for the life of me, cannot understand why the government has not done that long ago. The disclosure principle is fine, as far as it goes, but as the hon. Minister himself says, there are many cases where it does not go far enough. So why do we not take the other step and—maybe he is going to do it this session, I do not know—bring in legislation—

Hon. Mr. Cass: I do not either.

Mr. Bryden:—which will really lay down enforceable conditions under which these licences can be cancelled? There have been two companies that they have gone after. I am not going to name any names. The real prize actually is Forest Hill Investments. Apparently the government has been after them for some time. They used to have a listing in the telephone directory, among others, entitled, Money Unlimited Corporation Limited. This was for the people who thought there were some people who had unlimited money that they would give to them.

However, the government has gone after a couple of operators in this field, yet it has apparently taken them a long time even to cut these two down to size. I think there are more than a couple that need to be cut down to size. And I think somewhat stronger powers for the registrar and his representatives would be very much in order. I also hope that in the reorganization the registrar is going to get adequate staff to handle this problem. I think perhaps he may need—this is an argument one might present to the Treasury board—that staff only for a relatively short period of time. After things have stabilized, the people can be transferred to other work. But for a while, I think he should have a staff that can get around and keep an eye on a lot of these fellows.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, we have been talking about consumer protection all afternoon and I just wondered whether the department ever considered the use of newspaper educational programmes. We know the chambers of commerce have a better business bureau that use the buses and newspapers, but their funds are limited. The department here naturally would probably have limited funds, too, but I think it could use the newspaper to fairly good advantage. Especially the ethnic newspapers, as too often those of foreign extraction find themselves trapped with problems that we have been discussing this afternoon. Is the hon. Minister considering any newspaper advertising as an educational programme?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, I certainly would be glad to take back with me the suggestion of the hon. member. At the present time, I must say the answer to his question is no. But I think it is a sound suggestion, and if we have money available we might well do something along those lines.

Mr. M. L. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have noticed in the remarks of the hon. Minister that he is going to review the setup of issuing insurance licences to people who sell insurance in the province. Am I right in assuming that at the present time in a municipality or villages of up to 10,000 people they can have a part-time licence? Am I right in my assumption?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Well, I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that if it is a village or a town, the figure is 5,000 of a population. If it is a township it is 10,000.

Mr. Belanger: I am making a plea for those people in such circumstances because I come from a large district, but at the same time I do happen to know in some of these municipalities that if they were to be entirely insurance men they would have a hard time making a living. Therefore, I would say that fact should be taken into consideration if you do make some revision in the granting of licences to people who do sell insurance.

Another point that I noticed in your remarks is that you mentioned you want to introduce some legislation pertaining to the findings of the select committee on consumer credit. I do hope that before you take any action in this matter that you certainly will consult with the chairman of the committee before you go ahead and introduce this legislation. I think you mentioned that if there was no report forthcoming before very long, that you may introduce some legislation yourself, and I am wondering—

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, unless I do introduce it myself, at the rate at which the report is coming in, it will never be in in time for this session. I want to assure the hon. member that I have been in touch with the chairman on several occasions. The chairman, quite properly, has not told me what he thinks is going to be in the report. But he first kept assuring me there would be a report by the end of January, then by the middle of February, now it is February 20 and, as far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I think that the matter is serious. As I said before, such action as we deem necessary in the department will be recommended to the government and then to this House. Then we will be glad, at this session if the report comes in, or at another time, to change it, to bring in anything which the committee produces.

May I say also, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the first statement: It was a statement rather than a question of the hon. member, that there is no question, over the period of years—I would say ten years, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) says 20 years—over a period of years, that there has been a great improvement in, first of all, the service given to the public by an insurance agent and second, in their ability and knowledge to sell the right kind of insurance to fit the needs of the person who needs insurance. A great deal of the credit for this has come from the licensing provisions of the Act, whereby the fly-by-nighter, and the fellow who is doing it for a supplementary income and could not care less whether he sold anybody what was right or not, or whether he learned what was right to tell him as long as he got the premium—are being cut out.

The result has been good. There is one other thing I think the hon. member should understand, Mr. Chairman. That is that, by and large, insurance companies themselves are anxious to have a full-time agent, not necessarily selling their company's business alone—if it is casualty or general; life insurance, yes—but they are anxious to have a full-time insurance agent because they know they can train him properly. They know that people will realize he is in that business, and is there to answer his clients' and customers' questions, to give them service when there is a loss, to do all those things. There has been a very great improvement, Mr. Chairman.

I understand the problem that the hon. member mentioned. I said, myself, I was not completely satisfied, because there are still some areas where perhaps the population figure is not the proper criterion. I am advised today—before I came in I asked that question, Mr. Chairman—by the superintendent that they are exploring some other criteria by which they can decide this; but at the present moment it is on the basis of being sponsored by an insurance company, passing an exam and then being in a municipality with a population under 5,000 if it is a town or village, under 10,000 if it is a township, for them to be part-time agents.

Mr. Belanger: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I still have a couple of questions. With regard to the question that was asked a little while ago about whether the insurance brokers were increased, I would like to ask—

Hon. Mr. Cass: Insurance or mortgage?

Mr. Belanger: Mortgage. What about the insurance agents in the province; have the numbers increased?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, I have gone over the lists, and they are here before me again, and there has been very little change over the last several years. It has not changed.

Mr. Belanger: Certain municipalities—

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member would just like to know.

In 1957-58 there were 10,131 life agents; and in the last year we have figures for, which is a year ago, there were 11,300, so there is little change there. Other than life, in 1957-58, there were 8,200; now there are only 7,500—a year ago. Those were other than life agents. Then there are salesmen, who bring it up to 8,000. Adjusters—there were 586 in that year, and now there are 627. Investment contract salesmen—back in 1957-58, there were 192; there has been quite an increase here, there are 303 of them now. Then motor club salesmen, that is something new, there are now somewhere around 650 of them, and there were none before 1960-61. So the total licences issued in 1957-58 were 20,446; and in 1961-62, which is the latest figures I have here, 21,895. There has been about a 2,000 increase, of which 650 are motor club salesmen. There is very little change, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Belanger: One thing I have noticed recently, Mr. Chairman, is that one can buy insurance sometimes right in the supermarket. I am wondering whether there has been some investigation by the department with regard to the people in some supermarkets doing this type of work.

Hon. Mr. Cass: I am advised, Mr. Chairman—and the superintendent is my adviser and I have no reason to believe that his advice is not always sound and accurate—and I am assured that, in the cases to which you refer, there is a licensed agent on the premises selling insurance. In some supermarkets there are. The man is not licensed as to what building he carries on his insurance; so there is nothing wrong that I know of, as far as the law is concerned at least, in the practice of him having his sales pitch in the supermarket. If the corner grocery store wants to compete, I presume there would be nothing wrong with another agent going to the corner grocery store.

Mr. Belanger: Surely, Mr. Chairman—I will take his answer to this, but I have a little doubt. If, when somebody is checking off my groceries—as they are going along—I see this insurance advertisement and I say, "Okay, I am going to take $10,000 worth of insurance"—or $5,000—and this clerk writes my application, then this is certainly taking the living away from the people who are licensed insurance men.

Last year, I brought to the attention of this House that certain municipalities have found that in order not to have to deal with so many insurance agents, they select a certain agent in the municipality and give this agent all their insurance. Then the other insurance agents in that municipality receive a certain amount from the city. This is agreed by all agents.

What about the province of Ontario; what does it do in cases such as this? Does it do the same thing? I know that this province must carry millions and millions of dollars worth of insurance. What does it do? Does it do business with one particular firm, and what about the other firms?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Chairman, that, of course, does not fall within my department, because my department is not the one for insuring the province of Ontario. I would say the hon. member either has not made any attempt to find out—or was missing a year ago—because during the estimates of this department a year ago this matter was discussed at very great length. I would just like to say this: I would say, from my little knowledge, that not millions and millions of dollars of insurance are carried by this government because, by and large, self-insurance is a very good practice and is carried on to a large extent by this government.

I would also say that so far as I am concerned, or the officials of my department, we have no connection whatsoever with such insurance policies, liability or otherwise, that may be carried by the government. Those are matters which fall within the particular department concerned. In The Department of Insurance there is no insurance of that type.

Mr. Belanger: Am I given to understand then that this government is in the insurance business?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Self-insurance.

Mr. Belanger: Self-insurance?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Well, the hon. member does not know what I mean by self-insurance. That does not mean you go and buy a policy from an insurance company, it means that by setting aside a fund each year, instead of paying premiums you build up a fund—it is like depreciation—you build up a fund out of which you can pay your loss yourself. Is it plain, Mr. Chairman, what I meant by that?

It being 6.03 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, February 20, 1964
Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Thursday, February 20, 1964

Estimates, Department of Insurance, Mr. Cass, concluded	791
Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond	791
Presenting reports, Mr. Yaremko	822
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	822

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1964

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE (continued)

Vote 901 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of The Department of Insurance.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, before coming to a consideration of the specific items in the estimates of The Department of Health, I would like to review for you and for the House a few of the highlights of the department's activities and its functions during the past year, and try to give you a preview into the things we hope to undertake in the year ahead of us.

As was noted by the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) in his Budget speech, in a province such as ours the health programme can never remain static. The advances in the health sciences, the changing concepts of public health, the ever-broadening vistas resulting from research, not only in medicine but in many other related fields, are all as much parts of the progress of our province and people as the other changes so typical of our times. Epidemic diseases, killing infections, fever and infection and isolation hospitals are all things of the past; but with their passing have come many new and different problems, equally great hazards to health, even greater challenges to all of us engaged in the many fields of health care.

Dramatic progress has been made, of that there can be no doubt. But all our gains can give us no cause for complacency when we realize that anything less than constant and watchful care would cause all of these gains to melt away far more rapidly than they were won. The dread and killing diseases of yesteryear are only held in check. They are not conquered. The distinct changes in our economy, from being almost wholly agricultural less than 50 years ago to predominantly industrial today, are posing problems in health just as difficult as did the epidemic diseases of half a century ago.

Public health today is concerned still with some of its early problems, such as immunization programmes, pure milk supply and a sanitary environment in which people may live and be healthy. But added to all this are new activities, new concepts, new words and conditions—industrial health, environmental sanitation, air pollution, rehabilitation, medicine and health problems of the aged and aging, programmes of re-activation or re-motivation and mental health programmes to mention but a few.

Looking first, Mr. Chairman, at the division of public health administration, we now have in the province of Ontario 37 formally organized health units, supported in part by this government through The Department of Health. These 37 units serve 2.7 million people and are directed by 52 physicians who are specialists in public health.

In addition, there are 13 formally organized public programmes in cities and large urban centres, each directed by a full-time public health specialist. These 13 provide complete public health services to 2.58 million people, so that more than 5,250,000 of our population now have available a complete public health service.

However, it is still a matter of some concern to us and to the department that the entire province does not as yet benefit from the service available and provided by health units. What has been accomplished so far has come about by the process of education and encouragement. This is being continued with diligence so that the remainder of the province may be brought into this programme. To completely cover the province would call for the establishment of five additional units.

During the year 1963, a number of municipalities were added to existing health units and a new unit, the Grey County health unit, began operations on July 1. In the coming year, it is expected that one new county council will approve the establishment of full-time public health services throughout a large area, and that several municipalities near the border will join the Metropolitan Windsor health unit. To support this enlarged public health service for this larger number of people will increase our appropriation in this area by approximately $400,000.

In the area of communicable disease control, our report for 1963 will show no cases of infectious paralytic poliomyelitis in this past year, and no deaths from poliomyelitis in Ontario for the last three years. This record, I think, justifies the greatest commendation to health departments throughout the province for their efforts in maintaining the highest level of immunization. We will continue in every way possible to persuade parents to accept and obtain protective immunization for their children. In addition, we are redoubling our efforts to encourage adults, particularly young adults, to avail themselves of this protective mechanism. So far, they have appeared rather loath to do this, but we are hoping for increasing numbers steadily.

The babies unfortunate enough to be born within the last year and a half with limb deformities due to the drug thalidomide are now between one and two years of age. We have now in the province of Ontario 25 such infants. Twenty of these infants have benefited from the programme of financial assistance set up by this government and the federal government to provide medical treatment, X-rays, drugs, application of splints and plasters, and surgical intervention to attempt to correct the limb deformities or to improve them. Seven children have received the bucket seats, or binky chairs, as was deemed necessary, and three have graduated to lower limb prostheses and are making excellent progress in learning to use these limbs.

Upper limb prostheses are also being used. Very intensive research is still being carried out to determine the best type of upper limb prostheses which will be of greatest value in the various types of deformity. These children, of course, are receiving the additional medical services they need, such as physiotherapy, as well as continuing instruction in the use of their artificial limbs.

Perhaps it will be recalled, Mr. Chairman, that last year we embarked on a new programme to provide a special type of diet which has been known for some time to prevent one particular type of mental retardation known as P.K.U. or Phenylketonuria. This diet, known as low Phenylalanine diet, is rather costly and this government undertook to provide it. We began this programme in June, 1963. There are three centres in the province, one at Kingston General Hospital, one at London Children's Hospital and one at the Sick Children's Hospital here in Toronto. This diet is provided for the parents of children who seek it and who need it. Also at the centres, this peculiar disease can be scientifically diagnosed. We have 41 cases under treatment and this, we believe, will mean that 41 children who otherwise could not have avoided being mentally retarded will be allowed to grow with normal brain development.

Another disease which strikes children, the treatment of which is extremely costly, is cystic fibrosis. The incidence and extent of this disease, together with the cost of care and treatment, have been very much the concern of the department and this has been under extensive study now for the last three years.

We are now in active discussion with the Crippled Children's Society of Ontario regarding those people afflicted with cystic fibrosis. It is our intention through those discussions to provide at least a measure of assistance to those sufferers by providing for them certain treatment services. The Crippled Children's Society will act as the agent of government in this matter, as they do in certain similar instances. This is further evidence of the very splendid measure of co-operation which exists between the department and a great many voluntary health organizations.

In the addiction research foundation, Mr. Chairman, you will note a more than $333,000 increase in the budget. This increase in the budget of the foundation is required, not only to maintain the present level of services to an expanding population, but also to provide for the establishment of new services.

A new unit is planned for the eastern part of Metropolitan Toronto to serve that rapidly growing area. The clinic, we expect, will be located in the Golden Mile region and it is believed it will be a very valuable adjunct to other health services. This will be a service provided completely by the addiction research foundation, which is provided with its funds through a grant from The Department of Health.

Increased funds are necessary for this foundation, also for continuance of work in the clinics already established at Sudbury, London, Hamilton and the Lakehead region. The amount of increase is estimated to cost them this year something in the order of $126,000. The drug addiction service began active operation in the old Hospital for Sick Children, as temporary quarters. Here treatment services and research are going forward, and will continue to go forward until a new home for the foundation is established.

The government had acquired land on the north side of Harbord Street for this purpose over the past few years and it was proposed in this year to erect a new building there. However, this land was required by the University of Toronto for part of its great expansion programme, and so, in exchange for this site on Harbord Street, the university has made available land on the campus just north of, and adjoining, the new psychiatric institute. Active planning for this building is now in progress. It is presently expected and intended that the proposed new building will provide 100 beds for alcoholic and drug addicts.

A very active programme of research continually goes forward under the direction of Dr. G. Harold Ettinger, formerly dean of medicine at Queen's University. I need not add, Mr. Chairman, and it goes without saying, that this is well directed. Dr. Ettinger is eminently fitted for this responsibility, having spent the whole of his professional life in medical research. I think the province is extremely fortunate in having the services of Dr. Ettinger in this most important field.

In a matter of air pollution control, the department continues its active interest in air pollution control. During the year we have acquired a great deal of additional information from some of the states where this problem has been comparable to that in Ontario, and we have studied their methods in handling the problem, and their experience.

Because of the very frequent suggestion, sir, that air pollution control should be entirely the responsibility of the government—and I might remind this House, sir, that the select committee of this Legislature set up to study this matter brought in such a recommendation some years ago, and yet we were not altogether convinced of that. Here again is evidence of a recommendation being submitted by a select committee which cannot be accepted by government because of additional and more technical information available to us.

Continuing our studies in this matter, as I have just said, we looked at the three states that were particularly troubled — Pennsylvania, California and New York—and we found that their effective programmes, some of which have been often held up to us here in Ontario as programmes worthy of emulation, were supported by the states, in small measure frequently, but were under the control and direction of municipalities, although usually on a county or a city area basis. Our department continued, and does continue, to offer a consultative service to municipalities. We provide laboratory and field service for air pollution control. We provide a service of initiating air sampling in specific areas of the province. We undertake local surveys for special air contaminants, and we approve plans and specifications for new industries with respect to possible air pollutants.

Beginning with the new fiscal year, Mr. Chairman, the department plans further assistance to municipalities. Because we believe, as a result of our studies, that air pollution control can best be dealt with at the local level, and being strengthened in this belief by the experience of other states, we propose, through local boards of health, to support approved programmes of air pollution control, on the same basis as we now support other public health programmes. In the case of public health boards not supported in other public health programmes by this department, their air pollution control programme, if approved, will be supported on the basis that would apply if their entire public health programme qualified for government support.

Since there is a very great dearth of persons skilled in inspection, the department will establish a training course for such personnel, and this training will be provided at no cost to the municipality. In addition, the department will continue to support certain research projects, particularly with reference to methods of eliminating pollutants before they are emitted to the air. Further to the regulations now empowering the department to approve of plans for all new installations, amendments will be sought to include existing industrial sources by prohibiting or regulating and controlling the emission of air contaminants from such industrial sources.

The efforts of the mental health branch during 1963-64 have been directed toward maintaining out-patient and in-patient services for the mentally ill and the mentally retarded. Two new Ontario hospitals were brought into operation and a large unit was added to one of the Ontario hospital schools to replace old accommodation. Further clinics and day-care centres were added to existing hospitals.

Construction is now under way—I am sure many of my hon. friends across the way will be glad to know—on the new psychiatric institute in Toronto. This is to be known as the C. K. Clarke Institute of Psychiatry, to commemorate Dr. Clarke, the first professor of psychiatry at the University of Toronto. This remarkable doctor was dean of medicine at the University of Toronto, professor of psychiatry, superintendent of the Toronto General Hospital, and superintendent of the Ontario Hospital, 999 Queen Street West, all at the same time. Construction is proceeding, also very well and very rapidly, at the new hospital school at Palmerston.

Surveys have been conducted into administration, nursing services, the boarding homes programme, and our educational services. Recruiting and training staff are of major concern. The Mental Health Foundation has established ten new bursaries for students interested in going into psychiatric services. Sixty nurses were graduated from our three schools of nursing in association with Ontario hospitals, more than double the number graduated in the highest year in the history of these schools. Ninety-four students have been enrolled in 1963. All of these factors have contributed in large measure to improved patient care.

Continued expansion of services is planned for the ensuing year. This will involve in-patient and out-patient services, as well as the opening of the new Ontario Hospital School at Palmerston.

Recommendation has been made for new construction at several Ontario hospitals to replace obsolete accommodation. In preparation for the rebuilding of the new Ontario Hospital at London—demolition work is at present under way and the first tenders for new construction, it is expected, will be called about May 1 of this year.

Sites have now been selected for new hospitals in northern Ontario and one has been procured.

As we expand and improve the provincial mental health service, efforts are continuing to encourage the development of local centres for the early detection and treatment of mental illness. May I remind you, Mr. Chairman, that five years ago we stated that this was our objective, to get the treatment of the mentally ill, the mentally disturbed, back in the community where it belongs since, in our belief, the mentally disturbed person was an ill person.

During the past fiscal year, two new community psychiatric hospitals were approved for development. These will ultimately offer a comprehensive psychiatric service in space no longer needed for the care and treatment of tuberculosis patients. These hospitals are each operated by a board of trustees, the province is responsible for the maintenance of the service, particularly those who are insured under the Ontario hospital insurance plan. For those who are indigent, of course, the province meets the entire cost.

The Community Psychiatric Hospital in Ottawa, approved earlier, completed the first stage of its development during the present fiscal year and now offers approximately 70 psychiatric beds with a very extensive out-patient and day-care centre. Approval has been given for the expansion of this service in the ensuing year. The anticipated expenditure for these three centres during the next fiscal year will be close to $2 million.

In the past few years a number of facilities have been established for early diagnosis and prompt treatment of mental disorders; for example, mental health clinics; the appointment of area consultants; psychiatric units in general hospitals, which continue to expand. We are now embarked on a new phase—to encourage psychiatric out-patient centres in all general hospitals of large enough size to maintain such units. It is now established, and accepted as good medical practice, that much of the assistance required by those who suffer from mental disorders can be provided on an out-patient basis. Modern thinking indicates as well that with the right accommodation and facilities, general hospitals could provide active treatment also for local residents. Psychiatric units in general hospitals throughout the province will supplement the services provided by the Ontario hospitals, and permit them to be community centres in the real sense of the word.

During the ensuing fiscal year it is our intention to provide full recovery of the costs of operating psychiatric out-patient services in eight public general hospitals. Five of these are new and three are former provincial mental health clinics which are located in the hospitals. These will be transferred to the care and operation of the hospitals and the total costs in 1964-65 of these programmes will be $700,000.

As the cost-sharing agreement with the federal government does not permit hospital insurance coverage for the mentally disturbed, the province of Ontario has, as part of its plan from the inception of the plan, accepted this cost fully. This matter of cost sharing was the subject of very extensive and intensive discussion between the provinces and The Department of National Health and Welfare at Ottawa during the past fall. Since every province submitted for the consideration of the Minister of National Health and Welfare that mentally disturbed patients should be brought in under the cost-sharing agreement, it hoped that this will not have fallen on deaf ears, and that this will be accepted in the session of the Parliament of Canada just convened yesterday.

The appropriation for the Ontario hospitals shows the largest part of this cost, but there is an additional amount for eight private hospitals and sanatoria, which were in operation when the hospital plan was introduced. In these eight centres there are something in the order of 432 beds. Reimbursement for their provided patients is made through the Ontario Hospital Services Commission but comes out of The Department of Health budget. The forecast for 1964-65 for this service estimates an expenditure of $2.3 million.

Mr. Chairman, new hospitals coming into service, total cost of patient care, the normal increases to cover the cost of maintenance of the Ontario hospitals and these forward-looking proposals for community support, all help to account for the increase in our estimates for this branch.

In the area of mental retardation during the past year we appointed Dr. Donald Zarfes as consultant in mental retardation. This is a new post created during this year. He has been very actively engaged in studies of this difficult problem in its entirety as it relates to The Department of Health, mental health branch.

Also during the year, the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) put at our disposal one of his top-flight people, who surveyed all of our hospital schools. On his recommendation, certain specific programmes will be undertaken in the ensuing fiscal year. Among these will be the attempted development of a full range of services in an experimental rural-urban community of about county size, a project under The Department of Health and The Department of Education to explore new methods of teaching and/or training groups of retarded at various levels, and a project, also under The Department of Health and The Department of Education, to train teachers and patient-care staff in special teaching and training methods, particularly applicable to the mentally retarded. We hope to undertake, also, a revision of educational services in all of our hospital schools for the mentally retarded.

As well as the opening in this ensuing fiscal year of the new hospital school at Palmerston, which, incidentally, Mr. Chairman, is the first small school of its kind to be developed by the government of Ontario, we plan to proceed with the development of facilities for the retarded in a wing of our hospital at Port Arthur. It is thus hoped to provide care for retarded children in the northwest part of the province nearer to their homes, and to prevent the inconvenience and great separation of families consequent upon their being admitted to either Orillia or Smith's Falls as now obtains.

There is great need to provide accommodation for retarded infant children who are also afflicted with severe and multiple physical handicaps. These seem to be increasing in numbers, at least one gathers that from seeing the conditions. We are now seeking such accommodation for at least 150 such patients. These are, in the main, so severely handicapped and requiring so much care and attention that they cannot be cared for by the family or in the home.

The Ontario Mental Health Research Foundation has now completed its first year of full activity. Several projects have been supported by it in addition to the screening by the foundation of all applications for project support under the national health grants. The foundation here also had much activity during the past two years in the planning of the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry, now under construction and which will be operated under the direction of the foundation.

Health education has caused us a good deal of concern during the past year, particularly, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) announced last summer that the government would provide increased capital construction grants for general hospitals. It was pointed out specifically that cognizance was being taken of the special needs of hospitals associated with medical schools and medical education. Since that time the Ontario Hospital Services Commission and The Department of Health have been conducting very active studies in this entire area. It is complex and involved, as I am sure I need not tell the hon. members here, sir, and no easy solution is envisaged. Nonetheless, we have gathered much useful information from which we hope to develop some workable plans. The growth of population and the expansion of medical and allied knowledge, the development of new techniques and procedures, all call for greatly increased numbers of personnel trained in the medical and paramedical skills and disciplines. Medical schools in Ontario are now producing graduates almost to the limit of their accommodation and facilities, and it becomes increasingly clear that if we are to maintain our present doctor-to-population ratio in this province, at least one more health scientist centre will be required as soon as possible.

With this in mind, I invited the committee of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons, the Royal College of Dental Surgeons and the Medical Deans of Ontario to study the matter and report with their recommendations. That report is now to hand and is being considered, and with it the views of this same group and others relative to the training of paramedical and para-dental personnel.

Mr. Chairman, turning to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, we find that the growth and expansion of existing services and the addition of certain new services are reflected in the increased budget being asked for by the commission. With the retirement in May, 1963, of the then commission chairman, Dr. Ian Urquhart, some basic reorganization was carried out. The active day-to-day operation of the commission was placed under the control of the new chairman, Dr. John B. Neilson and two full-time executive commissioners, Dr. B. L. P. Brosseau and Mr. E. P. McGavin.

Dr. Neilson was one of the original commissioners of The Ontario Hospital Services Commission Act. His entire professional career, with the exception of a tour of duty in military service, has been devoted to medical and hospital administration. Dr. Brosseau came to the commission some two years ago with a long and successful and enviable record in administration. He is now commissioner in charge of all hospital services. Mr. McGavin is a chartered accountant, who has been chief financial officer of the commission since its establishment. He now is commissioner of finance, and these three form the executive commission.

The Rt. Rev. Monseigneur John G. Fullerton, who had been vice-chairman of the commission from its inception, also retired last summer. Both he and Dr. Urquhart gave splendid service to the province of Ontario while on the commission, during the difficult days of bringing into successful operation and with so little disturbance, a plan of such magnitude as the Ontario hospital care insurance plan. I feel sure that all hon. members of this honourable assembly will join me in wishing Dr. Urquhart good health and happiness in his retirement, and Monseigneur Fullerton contentment and satisfaction in his large and busy parish, a work which I believe has always been his first and greatest love.

During the fiscal year, a complete reorganization of the various levels of management was undertaken and is nearing completion. It is estimated that $279,301,000 will have been expended through the Ontario Hospital Services Commission for active, convalescent and chronic hospital care in 1963. This expenditure would be almost $30 million greater than in 1962.

The rise in the cost of the hospital insurance plan is partly due to the upward trend in utilization of hospital facilities, made possible by a greater number of beds and, of course, in part, due to the expanding population as well. The principal factor, however, sir, I have to point out to you, is the steady increase in the costs of hospital care and particularly the salaries and wages which make up approximately 70 per cent of the operating costs.

I believe it is pertinent here, too, to remind you that the total cost of hospital care in Ontario was not the $279,301,000 which I have already mentioned. This was for public hospital services. The total, for Ontario hospitals, was $80,355,000, and for tuberculosis sanatoria, $4,800,000, giving a grand total of $364,456,000. This, sir, is the true cost of hospital care in the province of Ontario and it is met by premium income amounting to $94,197,000, a federal contribution of $129,477,000, and a provincial contribution of $145,267,000.

Last year again we showed an increase in the number of Ontario citizens insured under the plan, a figure which now stands at 6,370,168 people, or 98.1 per cent of the population, against a comparable figure at December, 1962, of 97.3 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, there has been much interest concerning the nursing situation, and I think it is necessary at this time to give you some actual facts, from the records of the commission, on salary trends and other improved conditions for the nursing profession since the hospital plan came into operation in Ontario.

There is much said about a shortage of nurses and, as reported in this House a year ago, we have been advised of the need to increase our number of graduate nurses over the next five years. This withal, it should be pointed out, sir, that Ontario in this regard holds an enviable position when compared with Canada and with the United States.

These statistics, sir, are from well-based sources. In the United States of America, the ratio of nurses to population is 1 to 355; in the Dominion of Canada, it is 1 nurse to 259; and in the province of Ontario it is one registered nurse to 147 population. The United States of America has 1,126 schools, graduating 31,000 registered nurses in the last year for which we have audited figures, which, I believe, was 1962. In Canada there are 176 schools, which graduated 6,200 registered nurses. If we, sir, in the province of Ontario, were to train registered nurses on a ratio comparable to the United States of America, we would graduate 1,000 nurses per year. The figure we actually did graduate was almost 2,500 last year. I submit, Mr. Chairman, United States hospitals must offer, to our nurses or to any others, high salaries and many other benefits to relieve their own desperate situation.

This is in no wise an excuse or apology for our own situation, nor will we lessen our efforts to expand training and educational facilities in every way possible to keep our present position and reach the objective we have been advised is necessary.

Looking at the ratio of professional nurses employed in Canadian hospitals to hospital beds we find there has been a marked improvement over the past nine years. In 1955, in the whole of Canada, we averaged one graduate nurse employed for every six beds, but in the year 1962 the comparable figure, sir, was one graduate nurse employed for 2.7 beds:

To the greatly increased number and ratio of nurses employed in hospitals over that same period of time, of course, we must add the auxiliary nursing personnel which have largely come into their own in that period of time—such as nurses' aids, registered nursing assistants who, in recent years, have taken their place on the nursing team to perform many services not requiring the qualifications of the professional nurse.

If we look at statistics relative to nursing staff employed in active treatment public hospitals of Ontario, as of December 31, 1962, the last complete figures we have, we find that we have one graduate nurse, full-time staff, to 2.3 beds; for qualified nursing assistants we have one to 7.1 beds. Other nursing personnel, we have one to 4.3 beds.

Nursing service and nursing education staffs in the hospitals of Ontario increased by about 50 per cent in the years 1959 to 1962, appreciably higher than the 31 per cent average increase in numbers for all services. In the same period, the number of hospital beds rose by 17 per cent. Salaries in the area of nursing service increased by 22 per cent, and in nursing education by 29 per cent.

Salaries and fringe benefits: Between 30 to 35 per cent of the total cost of hospital services in Ontario is paid to personnel in the nursing departments. This is half of the total salary and wage bill for hospitals.

Since hospital operating costs became subject to commission approval in 1959, starting salaries for registered general duty nurses have increased $100 a month, or 42 per cent. A nurse may now be paid $335 a month to start, as compared with $235 in 1958. At the same time, maximum rates for the general duty nurses have gone up 45.4 per cent, that is from a maximum in 1958 averaging $275 to a maximum of $400 a month now. The average annual increase in the wage index for Ontario is about three per cent.

The ranges approved for Metropolitan Toronto for the coming year are markedly increased. General duty nurses are from $335 to $400 per month; non-registered nurse, from $305 to $370; assistant head nurse, $345 to $410; head nurse, $385 to $460; supervisor, $400 to $500; and registered nursing assistants, $235 to $271 per month. In the case of graduate nurses, the increments are spread over a five-year period. In the case of registered nursing assistants, the increments are spread over a three-year period.

Under the new schedule, therefore, Mr. Chairman, a newly graduated nurse may be employed at $4,020 per year outstripping the average starting salaries paid to public school teachers. If she remains in general duty nursing, she may rise to a maximum of $4,800, provided she does not enhance her educational qualifications in the meantime. If she does that, she can qualify for better paid positions.

Head nurses and clinical instructors will receive, as a basic salary, $4,620 a year with progressive increases for experience up to $5,520 per year. Nursing personnel who have completed a one-year certificate course at university may receive an additional $300 per year, and those holding a Bachelor's degree in nursing may receive an additional $540 per year.

In announcing these ranges to their member hospitals, the representatives of the Hospital Council of Metropolitan Toronto made the following comment: "Your representatives are of the opinion that the foregoing arrangement is fair and equitable."

Additional considerations to the basic rate of pay are the fringe benefits enjoyed by nurses employed in hospitals. These include: three to four weeks' paid vacations each year; group life insurance and pension plans; employer participation in the cost of premiums for hospital and medical insurance.

Most of these benefits, I think it should be pointed out, were previously enjoyed by employees of only relatively few hospitals in the province of Ontario, but today they are the rule rather than the exception. The cost of fringe benefits in public hospitals has risen from $1.7 million in 1958 to $7.2 million in 1962, an increase of 330 per cent.

Coincident with the increased remuneration and fringe benefits for nurses and others employed in hospitals, has been a reduction of the work-week to 40 hours. This means that to the additional cost of salaries has been added the need to employ more nurses to provide round-the-clock patient service, since I must remind hon. members that hospitals never close.

Many nurses are married and wish to work preferred hours. It has been suggested in some quarters—and I make very clear that those quarters have been very few indeed—that the payment of shift differentials for the less desirable shifts would help to solve the shortage problem. The payment of shift differentials, especially to nurses, has been a practice in some hospitals in the province, but the general opinion of hospital boards and administrators is that it is not a solution to getting nursing staffs to work shifts which do not particularly please or interest them.

In 1963 the estimated number of in-patients treated in public hospitals was 937,943, for a total number of days-care of 11,459,387. The comparable figures for 1962 were 911,639 admissions, and 11,277,998 days.

The number of beds in Ontario hospitals at the end of 1963 was 43,669, or 6.7 per 1,000 population; and this, sir, I should point out, applies only to active treatment, convalescent care, and chronic care hospitals, and does not include the hospitals for the mentally disturbed or hospitals for tubercular patients.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Still thousands short.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: May I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that there are 6.7 beds per 1,000 population in the province of Ontario.

The hospital planning formula of 6.25 beds per 1,000, when compared with the situation at December, 1963, shows an apparent overall surplus of .45 beds per 1,000 population. These are average figures only and the problem of unequal distribution, of course, remains.

The increase in capital construction grants last summer, grants payable for active treatment beds and for auxiliary services, were increased by 60 per cent from $2,000 to $3,200 per bed. May I point out again, and emphasize, sir, this increase was made only by the government of the province of Ontario. For any hospital already under construction on that date, provision was made for a partial grant based on the percentage of work still incomplete on the effective date.

The increase in rates of grant means that the provincial contribution will amount to one-third of the cost of construction on the average project. In a few high-cost projects, for example, where a high proportion of private rooms are built, the grant may still be less than one-third of the cost. In many projects, however, the grant will exceed one-third of the cost.

Provincial and federal grants for hospital construction—the final estimate of provincial grant contributions to capital construction in 1963-64 is $12.1 million. The estimate for the ensuing fiscal year is $13,193,000.

The increase in anticipated spending is due to the revision of the capital grant regulations. New projects approved in 1963 were somewhat fewer than in recent years. Resulting from the tremendous building programme carried out during the past six years, most cities and towns in Ontario have now an adequate number of beds available for their present population. Some progress has been made in the Toronto area, with three major projects commencing construction during 1963 and three other major projects likely to get started during 1964.

As a result of the extensive building programme, the fixed sum allocated each year by the federal government has proven to be inadequate, with the result that the payment of federal grant claims has had to be delayed or carried over into the next fiscal year. It is estimated that claims from public hospitals on this federal fund will be $4.4 million short of the need and will have to be carried forward into 1964-65. This situation will worsen during this coming fiscal year by about $1.5 million.

I want to make very clear to you, sir, that these figures do not include a backlog of grants of approximately $6.9 million for mental hospitals constructed in recent years. That is to say, sir, that $6.9 million which would be the federal grant applicable to these Ontario hospitals has not been received by the government of Ontario.

In September of 1961, the government, through the commission, gave support to a two-year study of a hospital-based home care programme in conjunction with the new Mount Sinai Hospital and the Toronto Western Hospital. Experience to date has shown that community-based home care and hospital-based home care programmes complement each other and should be carried on together for best results.

The results to date indicate that the average cost of providing a day of care to a patient in the community programme is about $5, and limited experience with the hospital-based programme indicates that the average cost of maintaining a patient for one day is about $7.50.

Caring for patients in their homes is much less costly than caring for them in hospitals; the average cost of a day's care in hospital in Metropolitan Toronto area is about $26.

It is proposed that these two programmes be made available to all residents of Metropolitan Toronto and that all general hospitals in the Metropolitan Toronto area be given the opportunity to participate in the programme on a gradual planned process.

The home care programme is of particular value in an area such as this Metropolitan Toronto. It is estimated that a home care programme here would, by 1966, care for between 200 and 250 patients a day, at a yearly cost of approximately $450,000. To care for these patients in a hospital would require a $4 million investment in hospital construction with a yearly operating cost of approximately $1.7 million.

Because of statements which have been made in this House during the present session, sir, I think it is necessary to look briefly at the functions and the responsibilities of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. Much has been made by one member, I believe it was the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), of certain letters sent to hospital boards by the commission, as if to suggest the commission was overstepping its authority. This, I say to you, is the responsibility of the commission among other things. They have the responsibility to approve the establishment of new and additional hospital facilities, and to approve the distribution of capital grants for hospital construction.

I have already noted the vast expenditures of the commission, and I am quite sure if these monies were just handed out by OHSC without any checking or approval, that the same hon. members who have criticized us would surely censure the government, and rightly so, for laxity and sloppy business practices.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The hon. Minister misses the whole point.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh, yes, of course, of course. I miss everything.

Mr. Singer: Well, he had me ruled out of order.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course, the commission must approve plans for new hospitals, for alterations, for additions, and for renovations, and of course they must approve operating budgets. That is an inexorable law of life and I think it was repeated by one hon. member on the other side of the House. That law is that he who pays the piper must have some right to call the tune.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): He pays all the tune.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course he pays all of the tune. But this does not relieve hospital boards of all of their responsibility, Mr. Chairman, to administer their particular hospitals.

If hospital boards in Ontario ever adopted the attitude that was recommended here by the hon. member a few days ago, this province would be greatly impoverished. Hospital boards have done and do an excellent service to their hospitals, their communities and to this province, but I believe they would agree that this government had completely abdicated its responsibility if we simply handed out funds to them as they asked for them with no check and no control.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, without evasion or without equivocation, OHSC has never yet told a board that it could not enter into an agreement with any union or with any other bargaining authority. Every board annually submits a budget to the commission. This budget is very carefully screened, and if any feature of it is out of keeping with the provincial pattern the budget is returned to the board for explanation; and then if the board, in its turn, can give the commission a satisfactory explanation, even such a budget could be and might well be accepted.

But it is noteworthy here that 63 hospitals in Ontario have negotiated union agreements, and their budgets have been accepted by OHSC; and most of these agreements have been reached without publicity, but in no case has OHSC ever said the contract would be rejected. Perhaps, sir, this will help to set at rest some of the misunderstanding which seems to exist. But I do assure you, sir, and through you the hon. members of this House, that OHSC will continue to exercise a watchful control over hospital expenditures, at least until its terms of reference have been changed by this House.

On the other hand, having reference to the opinions of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), neither OHSC nor The Department of Health has any authority to police hospitals in the discharge of their duties. The commission has to see to it that an approved hospital has the wherewithal to provide accommodation, facilities and staff to carry out the function of a hospital, namely, the adequate care of patients. The doing of the job is the responsibility of the hospital board.

The hon. member for Woodbine made some references to the constitution of hospital boards and particularly to the fact that—and I put it in quotes—“big business” is well represented on many hospital boards. Herein, Mr. Chairman, my opinion is diametrically opposed to that of the hon. member. I am very proud, and I hope that the majority of the hon. members of this House will join me in my pride.

I am very proud of the fact that so many well-known and busy industrialists and businessmen and women are so active in this field. I am equally proud of the fact, sir, that many others less well-known but equally busy in their own respective spheres, whatever spheres they may be, devote so much time and energy, ingenuity and enthusiasm, to the various hospital boards of this province. I have often said that it appears to me that these people give more time to the affairs of the hospital board than they do to their own business or their own affairs.

I think the hon. member does a great disservice to the people of Ontario by his implication, and if I am wrong in drawing this inference then I apologize to him in advance. But I felt there was an implication that there was something undesirable and even sinister in this so-called self-perpetuation of hospital boards in office. I can tell him that I know very many busy people now, serving on hospital boards, who would gladly retire if good replacements would offer their services to take on the job. I believe the hon. member for Woodbine, after reflection, would agree with this, and I hope that all of those busy people, whatever their private occupation or avocation, will continue their great service to the people of Ontario on the various hospital boards of this province.

I would be careless and irresponsible if I were to brush aside or gloss over complaints of poor service or lack of service. I know these things do happen and will happen, and indeed they will continue to happen so long as health care is provided by human beings. The frailties of men and women cannot be corrected by legislation or by policing. By education, precept, by constant watchful care only, can these high standards, typical of our hospitals and health care, be maintained.

In the specific case referred to at length by the hon. member for Woodbine, these are lay opinions set against professional opinions. Only a Solomon could say which was entirely or absolutely right. But even if the professional opinions were all wrong, it must be pointed out that these unusual cases are the ones that are emphasized by the bright glare of publicity. Little is ever heard of the hundreds of thousands of cases where no human errors have occurred.

I might point out to you, sir, for the information of the hon. members, I believe the number seen in that particular hospital in the emergency department last year was somewhere in the neighbourhood of 50,000 people, treated for all kinds of ills and conditions. Little is ever heard of the hundreds of thousands of cases where no human errors have occurred. This is not to say that the bright glare of publicity is all bad or wrong; far from it. I believe it is a useful instrument in the constant struggle for the maintenance of high standards of care. I assure you, sir, that hospital boards, and medical and nursing personnel are all, I believe, more concerned by such happenings than we here are, and evidence of such concern is so patent that I will not take the time here to document it.

The hon. member for Woodbine also made reference to—and I quote insofar as my memory serves me—“the well-known proclivity of the medical profession to close ranks and spring to the defence of its members.”

Mr. Chairman, how wrong he is I could never hope to prove to him. Take it from me, sir, as a member of that profession, that if all professions, trades, avocations and groups were policed as rigidly by their members as is medicine by its own members, I believe even the hon. member for Woodbine would chafe and rebel at the restraints put upon him.

All of this, sir, we have taken as our sacred responsibility to the people of Ontario, a sacred trust given to us by this Legislature to police our profession, to maintain the standards bright and shining and as high as possible, recognizing always that every one of us is a human being and that every one of us is subject to the frailty and the weaknesses so common to human beings, all ready to make mistakes, Mr. Chairman, but all as sorry for our mistakes, and all equally ready to deplore them. Believe me, sir, our fellows in the profession are the first to criticize us, the first to censure us, the first to condemn us, the first to recommend that our privileges in the hospitals be taken away from us when we are found guilty or believed even guilty of human errors.

This is our responsibility, sir. This responsibility we shall continue to accept with the same zeal and enthusiasm we have taken before, ever keeping in mind that our duty and responsibility is to provide an ever-higher standard of care.

Sir, I throw the estimates of my department to the mercies of this House, knowing full well that you will pass them all without any argument.

On vote 701:

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt for a minute that the estimates of this department will pass. With the majority over there I feel that it can only go one way.

I just want to make a few general remarks on these estimates, Mr. Chairman. We have been treated to a great flood of oratory here in the last few moments by the hon. Minister of Health, and I wish we had had as much action in various parts of his department. It is one thing to say your estimates are going to go through, but certainly we are not going to be downhearted with this huge herd of seals here opposing us. We are going to examine the estimates of this department—

An hon. member: TB seals we are!

Mr. Trotter: One thing with me, you are not going to be quite so fortunate as with the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) whose throat gave out with laryngitis. I am going to promise you mine will at least hang out for a while anyway.

Mr. Chairman, there was one remark that the hon. Minister made during his opening remarks having to do with the cost-sharing of the health expenses here in the province of Ontario, and in that remark he seemed to sum up why the cost of medical services has gone up to the average person here in the province of Ontario. When the Ontario Hospital Services Commission was formed, the Ontario government said that it was going to pay one-third of the costs. It has consistently ignored the fact that prior to the forming of OHSC the Ontario government paid for the costs of mental hospitals and TB hospitals. This group of hospitals, the mental hospitals and the TB hospitals, was never meant to be a part of the services to be supplied, so that when the government comes forward and says it pays one-third of the costs, it is not correct. It is paying only slightly less than 20 per cent of the cost of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, and I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that if the government lived up to its obligation we would not have the sorry sight in the province of Ontario that we have today of the average worker having to pay half as much again for his premiums in order to be covered—

There seems to be an even more Tory attitude in a Tory government—since it won this huge majority—about the cost of health services. I noted in the paper a report of January 22 last where it was reported that Mr. J. G. Hagey, the chairman of the Ontario commission, examining the Medicare plan, said that old and sick people will have to pay more for medical insurance than younger or healthier ones.

Certainly we ignore one of the great principles of insurance in which we try to spread the cost over all the population, if, as Dr. Hagey says, when people are least able to pay and when they are old and sick they are going to have to pay most. If the provincial government is going to be guided by this principle I will say that as long as Tories are in power in the province of Ontario we are never going to have a decent health plan here.

We dealt with Medicare here in this Legislature a few weeks ago. I do not intend to delve in any more detail at the present time, except to say that it is obvious that the provincial government in the province of Ontario is delaying and delaying a most necessary plan. The unfortunate part about it is that even the plan that it has introduced is weak. We on this side of the House are going to persist until the province of Ontario gets a government-sponsored comprehensive health scheme that comes to all of the people regardless of—

An hon. member: A lot of doctors around here tonight to get you needled tonight—

Mr. Trotter: Then, Mr. Chairman, I have never seen a Minister ignore a major issue and try to whitewash a major issue in the way the hon. Minister of Health ignored the nursing crisis in the province of Ontario tonight.

An hon. member: Shame.

Mr. Trotter: We have been talking on this side in every Legislature—I know during the four years I have been here—bringing up this fact that there is a crisis not only in the nursing profession here in the province of Ontario, but in personnel throughout all of our hospitals. I got out the debates of 1962 and 1963 and turned to the debates of March 5, 1963 at page 1361, and the former Liberal member for Wentworth, Mr. R. C. Edwards, said this:

Ontario hospital costs are going up by leaps and bounds. It may be that if we made the maximum use of the facilities that we already have that we would not need to build so many hospitals.

And then he goes on:

But certainly I do not think the answer is to blind ourselves to the fact that there is a shortage, to go around with our heads in the sand, so to speak, continuing to imply that there is not a shortage while the facts speak otherwise.

And in that instance, he was speaking of the nursing shortage. Then the learned hon. Minister of Health came out with these remarks—a man who has been the Minister of Health for four years, and this is what he thinks about the nursing shortage in the province of Ontario. He says this:

Mr. Chairman, I do not know where the hon. member gets his information. He has read part of it from the OMA brief to the Royal commission, but my advisers here are the hospital services commission, and they know of no hospital in Ontario that failed to open, or is closed, because of lack of nurses. They know of certain wards and parts of wards—

And then he goes on:

They know of wards and parts of wards closed because there are not sufficient registered nurses, and for parts of the week only.

And then he says:

Nor does the commission have any information concerning any necessary operation ever held up for lack of nurses.

They have told me that with organization and proper management in the hospital, the shortage of nursing is not so acute as it would appear.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to point out a few of the places where the nursing shortage is very acute. We mentioned that the Ontario Medical Association—those remarks I read from Hansard—had gone before the health services commission in Ottawa, reading their brief setting out what a shortage there was in nurses.

Here in the hospital administration magazine—it is entitled, "Hospital Administration in Canada"—in the issue of March, 1963, Dr. T. P. Morley, he is the assistant professor of surgery at the University of Toronto and head of the neurosurgical division at Toronto General Hospital, says this:

What is surprising is that in one of our largest teaching hospitals whole floors of its magnificent new building have never opened their doors to a single patient since the building was completed four years ago.

It is a situation—and incidentally, I researched and it was the Toronto General Hospital—which is not peculiar to the hospital I have in mind, as many hospital boards across the country must be uncomfortably aware:

Everywhere there are scores of beds lying empty because there are no nurses to staff them. So, if the public has become inquisitive, it is surely entitled to be so.

That is what Dr. Morley, one of the leading surgeons in Toronto, had to say and this was the Toronto General Hospital. Then in the annual report—the 1962 annual report of the board of directors of the Northwestern General Hospital—they had this to say:

During the entire year of 1962 your board of directors was faced with the fact that because of the shortage of hospital staff personnel in the province, floors that were completely furnished and ready to receive patients could not be thrown open to the public.

The more your board inquired into the question of staff shortages which the Ontario Hospital Services Commission and The Ontario Department of Health deny exist, the more they learned that because of the shortage of personnel practically all hospitals in Ontario slow down their operations over weekends.

I will go into that point about the slow operations on weekends, later on.

And then, Mr. Chairman, there came out in August, 1963, a report on education and the provision of personnel by a committee for the survey of hospital needs in Metropolitan Toronto. On one page they say this:

Almost every hospital indicated on the questionnaire and during interviews that the nursing shortage was a threat to good patient care. Several hospitals reported that due to the shortage of nurses there had been a delay in opening new wings. Others reported that some nursing units had to be closed during the summer months because no replacements could be found for the over-worked and inadequate staff.

And then that same report, at page 22, pointed out the increase of registered nurses from over 50,000 in 1955 to 70,000 in 1961, indicating this is for all of Canada. But it said:

However, a serious shortage of nurses exists and will grow even more severe if greater efforts are not put forward to increase the number of graduates.

Mr. Chairman, we heard nothing about new efforts being put forward by this government to solve the nursing shortage that exists here in the province of Ontario. Certainly, it is chronic throughout the country but it is very severe in the large metropolitan centres here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know if the hon. Minister was using the figures of how many nurses we have per bed; if he realizes the fact that we graduate all kinds of nurses, and that there are a number in Canada as a whole and there are a number in Toronto and in Ontario—in fact there are 11,000 of them—who do not even practise their profession. When they use these figures that there are so many per bed and so many per patient in Ontario, they ignore the fact that thousands of them are not practising their profession—certainly not in the general hospitals.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would point out to the hon. member that the figures I used were the active nurses in hospitals. The figures I used referred to nurses actively employed in hospitals now.

Mr. Trotter: All right. I will read what they call the numbers game. I will go into some of these figures to show you how, but using numbers, you completely misconstrue the hospital situation. Obviously, from these authorities, there is a shortage. This hon. Minister comes along and wants to say that there are so many per ratio, or something, but the nurses simply are not there. If you visit anybody in a hospital the topic of conversation is the shortage of nurses. Everybody seems to know about it but the hon. Minister of Health.

Listen to this. Here is the difference. In Canada—all right now—they say we have a good ratio per population for nurses. In Canada, there is said to be one nurse for every 250 people and in Ontario one nurse for every 178 people, which is very good. This is one of the highest, if not the highest ratio in the world. This is what the Registered Nurses' Association for Ontario reported for 1963. But then this report says:

This ratio is computed by including the 44 per cent of nurses registered in Ontario who are not employed in Ontario.

Now there is a big difference. We have 44 per cent of the nurses registered here in Ontario who do not work in Ontario, and this is where these figures that are given by the government are completely cockeyed.

For example, here is how we compare: Nurses for 10,000 population. In Canada, of the nurses for 10,000 population we rank last behind all these countries: Sweden, the United States, New Zealand, Norway, Ireland, Denmark, the United Kingdom. We have 23 nurses for 10,000 population. Mind you, I know some of the Tories over there are deaf to any type of health insurance scheme but in the United Kingdom they have 48.8 nurses per 10,000 population, more than twice what we have here in Canada. And, of course, this is where we have to go to get our nurses in order to put them in Northwestern Hospital and overcome the shortage in Riverdale Hospital.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Whicher: Oh, dry up, and put on your Beattle cap.

Mr. Trotter: According to the report put out by the committee on the survey of hospital needs, there are in the city of Toronto 3,595 graduate nurses now working in the hospitals. And including the shortage in the mental hospitals, there is an approximate shortage of 759. By 1970, we in the city of Toronto alone are going to need 6,310. Right now we have about 3,600. We will have to have a tremendous increase. Where we are going to get them, with the present programme the provincial government has, I do not know.

They have the Nightingale School of Nursing, which has been an excellent success. In this year's graduating class, there are only 53 nurses. I hope none of them fails because it will mean that much less. But these are small amounts. They have started up a new nursing school at Ryerson. I believe this year, starting in September, 1963, there were 30 nurses. That is fine. It is a beginning, but it certainly does not begin to approach the problem. And just in case the hon. Minister of Health does not think there is a shortage of nurses in the province of Ontario, sir, here is one of the resolutions adopted at the annual meeting of the Ontario Hospital Association in October, 1963:

Whereas recent studies and discussions in which the Ontario Hospital Association has been an active participant, have established there is a shortage of professional nurses in hospital employment in the province of Ontario,

And whereas through the said studies and discussions it is also apparent that such a shortage will continue and possibly become aggravated in the future,

Therefore be it resolved that the Ontario Hospital Association, having given careful consideration to all the factors involved, recommends—

And among the things they recommended was that the physical facilities and teaching staffs be developed in order to double the number of graduates each year.

Even if you double them, you are still going to be a long way behind, because here is our problem: Between 1946 and 1960, a period of 14 years, 12,834 nurses left Canada to go to the United States. Still, those trained here in Canada, and most of them in Ontario, are going mainly to the United States.

We did import nurses—12,616 came to Canada—but even on the immigration we lost. I think our net loss was slightly over 200. In other words, even with all these imports into these hospitals here, especially in the large areas, we are still losing nurses to the United States. It is a shocking economic loss that over 12,000 Canadian nurses go to the United States. They are paid out of public funds to the hospitals, and in cases where the universities receive grants these people receive the money. We are exporting our most valuable asset, our brains. And we hear nothing from the government side of the House. They seem to ignore the problem. It has been going on for years and it will now have a cumulative effect as the demand for services increases and as the demand for hospitals increases.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): The public will not believe that.

Mr. Whicher: Why do not some of the hon. members opposite emigrate?

Mr. Trotter: Well, it would be a great improvement, I think, if some of them did, because in this general Toronto area, which I am most familiar with, there has been a nursing shortage at the Humber Memorial, at the Northwestern General, at the Riverdale Hospital. At one time it was feared the Riverdale hospital could not open because there was a shortage of 900 nurses. Many of them have now come in from England. And, of course, I know that the Northwestern General had a vigorous campaign going on in England in order to bring over nurses to the city of Toronto. And in some other parts of Ontario, they have gone into the smaller hospitals. But even in 1960, we lost nearly 1,400 nurses to the United States. This is Canada as a whole. We here in Ontario must see if something can be done.

Now what are some of the problems with nursing here in the province of Ontario? True, we need to do a lot of recruiting, to start bringing the cause of nursing into the public schools and into the high schools. We also need to see that the nurses get a proper education, that they take the drudgery out of nursing and bring in that quality I believe the nurses call TLC—tender loving care, something of that type. But this is the type of thing—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: You are not allowed to give the nurses tender loving care, they give that to the patients.

Mr. Trotter: No, no, they are supposed to give the patients that, Mr. Minister.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, there has been a shortage of nurses because of the tremendous need and demand for health services. And, of course, medical science has advanced. That means that the nurses need even more training than they have ever had before. And the success of the prepayment hospitalization here in Ontario, where I think over 98 per cent of our people are now insured for hospitalization, has also increased the demand. But the nurses themselves have, I would say, many problems. One is the way they are taught. Certainly they are given a course where a lot of them are treated as cheap labour. The nurses, I would say, are certainly underpaid. There has been talk that they have had an increase. I believe now the basic minimum is supposed to be $75 a week. They are now paid in Riverdale Hospital a little bit better than the elevator operator. When the Riverdale Hospital opened in Toronto, the nurses were paid less. I heard the hon. Minister talking about $4,000, that they were getting the $4,080 a year they started at. Well, there are an awful lot of them starting at $75 a week, and it is news to me that their basic is now better than that of a public school teacher. I will bet it is news to most registered nurses.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Do they get paid for holidays like a public school teacher?

Mr. Trotter: I will go into some of what they are getting here in the city of Toronto and in the province of Ontario. They were having much difficulty when they were opening Riverdale Hospital just recently. What brought the problem to the fore was the fact of their low pay.

I remember when we were talking one or two years ago about the problem of the nurses' pay, the hon. Minister said, "Well, the nurses must be satisfied with what they are getting because the Registered Nurses Association of Ontario does not complain."

There has been a series of interesting articles in the Globe and Mail and it is a wonder the registered nurses do not complain, or the association itself. In Ontario, as a lawyer, if the benches represented me as poorly as the registered nurses association represents the nurses, I would want to kick them out. On the governing group that runs the registered nurses association, the 85 per cent of the nurses who do the average everyday toil are not represented. Can you imagine a union being run by the foremen? That is exactly the situation for the working nurses here in the province of Ontario.

We even have a situation where on the registered nurses association board, the hon. Minister of Health is one of the members. Here is the number one employer in the province of Ontario sitting on the bargaining unit, you might call it, if I may use that unprofessional term for the nurses. Here the hon. Minister of Health sits bargaining for wages for the nurses. Naturally, no wonder they are low paid. If you put the president of the company out bargaining for the union, that is about as reasonable a parallel as you could have for the nurses' case here. This is why they have been hurt, because the profession itself has become, I would say, disheartened.

I think in one article the wording was, "Problems and confusion beset the nursing profession. Shortage of nurses, poor working conditions, uncertainty about the nurses' role in the rapidly changing world of science." That is from an article written by Michele Landsberg in the Globe and Mail, December 13, 1963—very recent, Mr. Chairman. I hope the hon. Minister saw the articles because he and his department could certainly do with a good reading of them and could act upon them, because we are not going to have a good, secure nursing profession here in the province of Ontario until the government takes action. I am quite convinced after reading these articles, these books and the various things that have come my way, that this requires government action.

I just want to give the hon. members a few ideas of what is going on in the nursing profession. Just a couple of items that come from the Globe and Mail of December 12, again by this writer Michele Landsberg. The article is called, "Nursing profession in a crisis." It says here:

The complaint most frequently heard from a hospital patient is that he has been neglected by his ward nurse. It is in many cases a valid complaint. There is a severe and rising shortage of nurses.

This is one thing here that I would just like to quote:

We did a staff survey and found the most frequent complaint from the nurses was that they did not have enough time to give the patient, said Margaret Perks, Nursing Director of Toronto's Doctors Hospital. Our nurses have to fill out a requisition form in triplicate for everything they need in the ward—a bottle of blood, a light bulb, a workman to fix a leaky tap.

In other words, the administration of the hospitals today is in need of an overhaul and when you bear in mind that even your top administrators here get, I think, some of them as much as $32,000 a year, it seems a shame that the nurses are so far down in the pay scale.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What a bargaining unit they have got.

Mr. Trotter: This is one of the things I think that hits the nursing profession the hardest, that it works alongside the best paid profession, namely, the medical profession, the doctors and also the hospital administrators.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Trotter: These women, who have spent years of training, are the lowest paid profession, yet they work along with the highest paid profession and I say it is up to us to see to it that this is remedied.

Overloading causes acute dissatisfaction, that is overloading of the case load. Some nurses have as many as 30 patients to look after and as one nurse who was interviewed said, it is just dangerous. In other words, I think this is one reason why we get the most unsatisfactory and unhappy cases such as the hon. member for Woodbine brought forth, about Mrs. Rudy. Mr. Chairman, there is not enough personnel to look after all the cases as they come in, and as a result it is a weakness essentially of the government here in the province. This is a responsibility of the hon.

Minister of Health, and in some respects, through the Minister of Health, also the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), to see to it that these nurses are given the opportunity and training that is needed.

One girl, and I again quote from Miss Michele Landsberg, said that during a recent stint at a Toronto hospital—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Do you get Michele to write your speeches?

Mr. Trotter: You need not criticize me for reading anything. I seldom read from a printed—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Point of order, Mr. Chairman. Michele Landsberg helps to write some speeches for hon. members of this House but not that of the hon. member for Parkdale.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: I must ask the members to give careful attention to the speaker at this time and let him carry on with his speech.

Mr. Trotter: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I have got very good material. You know, we on this side of the House, Mr. Chairman, find it difficult sometimes. It takes so much time to do all the research that is necessary. I think part of the success of a politician is to marry someone who will do the research for you.

Going on with the quote. One girl said that during a recent stint at a Toronto hospital a certified assistant rather than a nurse poured out medication for the patients and that every dosage was mistaken in quantity or content. Another was shocked to find that patients had died unattended and to hear overworked ward nurses quibble about who should do up the body. There again I say it is a symptom, it is symptomatic of the shortage of nurses that exists in the hospitals, certainly I think in Ontario, and this happened to be a case in the city of Toronto.

Mr. Chairman, I want to come back to the weaknesses in the nursing profession itself and that concerns the Registered Nursing Association of Ontario. I notice that a new group has now been formed here in the province of Ontario, called the Committee for Advancement of Professional Nurses. We probably all got this in the mail today. The remarks I have to say, I was prepared to give before that arrived, but evidently there is a group of nurses here in Ontario now, trying to get together to see what can be done to jack up the morale and get a better organization for nurses here in the province of Ontario.

The thing to remember about the registered nurses association is that its governing body consists mainly of supervising personnel. This supervising personnel is about 15 per cent of the profession and the other 85 per cent is not really represented as it should be. I say this is a matter that should be corrected here by the hon. Minister of Health. One woman said this, when being interviewed for this article in the Globe and Mail:

In the light of reaction in high places to criticism from the ranks, it is not surprising that one young nurse explained, "they must think I am crazy if they think I would get up at a chapter meeting—" that is what they call the groups in the RNAO:

"—and make any suggestions. What with my nursing director sitting beside me I would not dare get labelled as a trouble-maker."

Certainly this is a tremendous weakness that should be corrected and changed.

Mr. Chairman, I disagree with what the hon. Minister has said about the differential in pay. It is true that some hospitals do not like to pay the nurses the extra pay, say, for working on weekends and for working night shifts, but some think it is a good idea. Certainly, I think that where a hospital wants to try the wage differential it should be allowed to do so. But the Ontario Hospital Services Commission controls these hospitals so closely that it is practically impossible for the board to experiment in any way.

Just for example—again from the 1962 annual report of the board of directors of the Northwestern General Hospital—the chairman of the board when reporting had this to say:

It was felt by your board that such financial inducement, that is the shift differential, would attract many married women back into the service of the hospital particularly during the weekend.

Just to interject here, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out there are 11,000 nurses who are married women and not carrying on this profession here in the province who could certainly be induced back into the profession if they received decent pay.

An hon. member: What about motherhood?

Mr. Trotter: Well, I am in favour of motherhood, Mr. Chairman. I remember this: There are many women today whose families could use the money when they go out to work. There are many women who have to go out to work and do not want to. There are many who are widows and, of course, with the divorce rate and separation rate going up in Ontario and in Canada, there are many women who are back on their own. It is very wise to see to it that these poor women are encouraged back—especially those who are still carrying on their homes, and who have the extra time. They should be attracted back into the nursing profession.

Shift differentials are now paid to personnel in Quebec, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, with the Canadian government paying one-third cost. This is what the Northwestern Hospital is emphasizing. In Quebec and Saskatchewan and British Columbia they have found it worked.

It is only a question of time—

this report goes on:

—before short differentials are paid in Ontario and in all the rest of Canada. No hospital in Canada at the present time pays day premium rates of pay to its staff. But there are many business firms where the shift differentials and day premium rates of pay are a standard pay practice.

Now what happens in the hospitals today is, because of the shortage of personnel for the weekends, that the hospitals are not used at their full facility or their full use, let us say, from Friday noon until Monday morning.

It is just as if you had a plant which was operating at only 80 per cent of its efficiency; 20 per cent of the week there is a slowdown because the personnel is not available. So, just as business firms use differentials to keep the plant going at night or on weekends or on Sundays, why can they not keep the hospitals going full steam ahead by using a pay differential?

Now the Northwestern Hospital wants to try this, and I say that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission should let them experiment.

The Northwestern Hospital wrote the Ontario Hospital Services Commission asking this and they got one curt paragraph from that commission, and it said this:

With reference to nursing personnel in particular, the ranges referred to herein are considered to include shift differential. This means in effect that in order to pay a differential for evening and night shift the day shift rate must be reduced an equivalent amount.

Well, of course, if you start to cut wages during the day in order to make up the money you want to spend at night you would be in a real mess. In other words, such instructions from OHSC are impossible instructions to follow and wage differentials fall through.

This should be used, and I think it should be emphasized and re-emphasized — and I hope that other hon. members I hear on this side of the House will speak on this problem, because it is one way of doing something to solve the nursing shortage here in the city of Toronto and the province of Ontario. But the present government is so slow at doing anything that it seems to ignore any decent proposal to get ahead.

I know that the Northwestern Hospital has often complained bitterly of the control that the OHSC has over little hospitals. I know, in one case, that the Northwestern Hospital said there was not much use in its board of directors meeting as they found that so many of the things they proposed or did was stopped by OHSC. In fact, at Northwestern Hospital, when it prepares an annual report to have it audited, the auditors sign their names and then say, "subject to final determination by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission of allowable costs of insured services under the plan of hospital care insurance and adjustments if any arising therefrom". In other words, even the auditors of hospitals feel that anything they audit is subject to what the Ontario Hospital Services Commission will do.

But I bring this control, that the Ontario Hospital Services Commission has over hospitals, up at this point for this reason: I agree that today the hospitals services need some guiding body, such as OHSC, and I do not blame that branch of government for keeping a "hawk eye" on what hospitals spend. I do not think that it should become so restricted that it stops experimentation in the hospitals, such as the use of a shift differential.

The other day when we were taking about the labour situation in the Trenton Hospital we were told, in one statement by the hon. Minister of Health, that this was a private board, like a private company in Trenton, and they would not want to interfere with the hospital. Well, of course, it is tremendous interference by OHSC as to the running of a hospital; and one of the shocking things is that the OHSC was used as a strike-breaking arm in that hospital—and I have gone into this twice before in this House. Certainly the OHSC owes an obligation, to the personnel working in all of its hospitals, to see to it that they have proper bargaining rights.

For the hon. Minister of Health to emphasize how important it is for the commission to keep an eye on hospitals for spending money and yet, at the same time, say, "We have no control over labour," is silly; because the OHSC has the right. It has tremendous control over labour and I say that control is being misused. It is being misused in a number of hospitals—Wallaceburg, Fort Erie and recently in Trenton.

Mr. Singer: And Windsor.

Mr. Trotter: Windsor was another case. This is another reason why it is so difficult to get personnel to work in hospitals—while there is a shortage for certified nursing assistants, while there is a shortage for technicians, radiologists, and all these various groups. There is a tremendous shortage in personnel, as the committee of survey for hospital needs pointed out.

On the question of nursing I have one final thing to say, Mr. Chairman, and it is this: 95 per cent of our nurses today come from the hospital schools, and what is needed today in Canada and in Ontario is an even higher training for our nursing profession. There should be more emphasis on graduates from the universities; and instead of them just working and more or less being treated as cheap labour in hospitals, they should go to university like a doctor, like a lawyer, and have the opportunity to get a degree. This is necessary because there are going to be more and more highly skilled jobs needed in nursing because of the development of the medical field.

I know the Canadian Association of Nurses, in a brief to the health commission in Ottawa, said that they hope in the not-too-distant future that 25 per cent of the nurses who graduate would be from the universities. And certainly the University of Toronto has also presented a similar brief. Briefs to the health services commission from seven provinces here in Canada urged that more nurses receive university degrees. There has been no indication from the hon. Minister that such action will be taken, but it is certainly something that we here in this Legislature should try to further; because in this committee for the survey of hospital needs, they say this about the education of nurses, at page 39.

Now I know the hon. Minister might try to argue, "Well, this is for The Department of Education, because it is education"; but surely it is a co-operative effort between The Department of Education and The Department of Health? I do hope that the hon. Minister of Health and the hon. Minister of Education co-operate much better than the hon. Minister of Health did in the labour situation with the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) in Trenton.

On page 39 of this report on personnel, they say this, and I think it is something for the hon. Minister and his department to bear in mind as a guiding principle of the education and recruiting of nurses for Ontario:

One of the most apparent of the changing concepts has been that the education of a nurse should be an educational experience rather than, in part, a method of obtaining service in a hospital. As a corollary to this, there has been greater acceptance of student participation in meeting the costs of the educational programme and to the making of some effort to relate the direct costs to the expense involved in the actual educational programme. This concept also includes the acceptance of the fact that a large subsidy from public funds is required in order to provide an adequate educational programme.

Well, Mr. Chairman, these are just a few ideas concerning what I think should be done in order to increase the number of nurses coming into the profession, not only to bring them in but to keep them. There are many arguments as to why they leave the profession, but there is probably no one single answer. Certainly many women are attracted to nursing not because of the pay, but because of the ideal. But once there they tend to drift out because the pay is poor and because there are so many other attractions for a girl with a good education. This government has not come to grips with the problem of the nursing shortage. It is going to reach the proportions of a scandal, certainly in Metropolitan Toronto, if something is not done. It is the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Health and I say to him, Mr. Chairman, it is time he quit giving orations and got to work.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I rise with alacrity, having developed a vested interest in this debate during the course of the proceedings, which did not exist at the outset.

I congratulate the hon. Minister of Health for his excellent presentation and for his capacity to serve as Cicero in the breach—although I remind him that the Roman Empire also fell, and I say to him that—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That was because it became too socialistic.

Mr. S. Lewis: Let me say to the hon. Minister that is a new definition of the decline and fall, hardly acceptable to the proconsuls.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The people pick the executives through socialism.

Mr. S. Lewis: I think the estimates of the hon. Minister are to be noted with seriousness. I begin this speech—I shall not end it in quite the same tone and some of my remarks I have no doubt will be somewhat repugnant to the hon. Minister—I begin the speech by saying that it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. We have, in a circuitous fashion, a certain proximity since the hon. Minister treats in his medical capacity the parents of the wife of my riding president, and they have for him an inestimable respect as a doctor. I know that certainly many hon. members of this House hold for him an inestimable respect as the hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Chairman, we have had a healthful panacea described in the hon. Minister's estimates. The sun never sets on the hon. Minister's empire: criticisms are inventions of the mind rather than a reality of the eye, and those who shout crisis indulge, apparently, in whimpering cries of self-delusion. But frankly, Mr. Chairman, it simply will not wash. I submit that The Department of Health of this government is in a transparent state of disarray, and I shall attempt to document that in the less than full time the hon. member for Parkdale took.

There are two inescapable queries that arise in the minds of a responsible Opposition. The questions are: How is the department in the state of disarray and why? I should like, briefly, to examine both areas. First, and I was pleased inasmuch as I felt I had certain proprietary rights in some of the things the hon. member for Parkdale quoted, I was pleased he left certain avenues open—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): He had no other speech without that.

Mr. S. Lewis: The first compelling, shocking, documented truth is a hospital bed shortage of major proportions in the province of Ontario, the hon. Minister's remarks notwithstanding. And I may say that that is not simply the feeling of the Opposition, it is also the feeling of government members in this House as witnessed by the Throne Speech debate. And I should think the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop) and the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Peck) would be rather intrigued to hear the explanations offered by the hon. Minister in defence of the hospital bed shortage. Because the hon. member for Forest Hill began his January 24 speech in this fashion, and I quote from Hansard:

I am sure that hon. members are keenly aware that it is the rare and fortunate family which need not seek, perhaps several times in each generation, the services of a hospital for the mitigation of suffering, prevention of needless disability or untimely death. Yet there is a serious shortage [I repeat, from a government member] there is a serious shortage of hospital accommodation in many communities and areas in the province.

And then, as a very worthy echo, the hon. member for Scarborough Centre on February 4, said, and I quote from Hansard:

For those who need a hospital bed and cannot get one because of the very grave shortage [I repeat, "the very grave shortage"] that exists . . . is one to which we should give a great deal of thought.

He then explains that in the area of Scarborough, which, incidentally, he and I adjacently represent, there are no hospital facilities to speak of—100,000 to 200,000 people without any hospital facilities to speak of. He insists that hospitals be built and ends by saying this is a goal which will require "super-human" efforts, and which should be started immediately.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the hon. members of this House that hospital needs have apparently outstripped the government's capacity to cope with the problem. And nowhere is that better demonstrated than in a quite remarkable report put out by the committee for the survey of hospital needs on active treatment hospitals in Metropolitan Toronto. The report cannot be read too often into the records of this House for it demonstrates a quite extraordinary hospital bed situation in this one area, at any rate, of the province.

There are at the moment 2,360 more beds required in Toronto. That is the present shortage in 1963. By 1970, there will still be 1,171 required. And the report called this a "staggering deficit." But the report goes further. It makes a staggering analysis of individual hospitals, and it puts forward the following sort of thesis. It says it is difficult to evaluate the available resources. There are various ways. You can have a number of beds to 1,000-people-ratio, but as the hon. Minister said himself, and I quote from his speech: "the problem of unequal distribution still remains"—and so that is a wholly unsatisfactory method of computing ratios.

And then there is a length-of-stay ratio, and you can also discuss it on the basis of types of hospital beds; intensive care; intermediate care; self-help; ambulatory; convalescent, and long-term care. But all of these ratios apparently have flaws. All are inadequate as a method of relating availability to need. But there is one method which is not inadequate and which makes profound good sense, Mr. Chairman, and that is the occupancy formula.

The committee established a percentage figure based on utilization of beds; a percentage figure that is safe and desirable for over-all use of beds, for individual departments like medical, surgical, obstetrical and pediatric. The extraordinary thing that emerges—if I may say so to this House—the dominant fact, is that virtually every single hospital without exception is seriously, indeed dangerously, overloaded in the Metropolitan area.

It is no isolated phenomenon; it is no isolated crisis and it is no isolated geographic locale.

Now if the hon. members will permit me the indulgence, I would like to spell it out for them because for some—I am thinking particularly of the hon. member for York Mills (Mr. Bales) who has no hospital in his area whatsoever at the moment, although one is being contemplated—for some hon. members it is worth thinking of the present situation and what the prospects might be. Let me take six or seven specific examples: The Toronto General Hospital—the overall occupancy rate should be 85 per cent; it was 93 per cent in 1962. St. Michael's Hospital—the obstetrical occupancy should have been 75 per cent; it was 96 per cent; the psychiatric occupancy should have been 95 per cent, and it was 114 per cent. The report said, and I quote:

The overall occupancy of this hospital has been extremely high, indicating the severe pressures which exert themselves on this downtown hospital. The psychiatric service is overcrowded to the point where it is necessary to place patients elsewhere.

It imparts a hollow ring to the psychiatric unit suggestions in the hon. Minister's estimates.

Now, in Mount Sinai, obstetrical services should be 70 per cent—they were 87 per cent. The report says, and I quote:

The high occupancy of the hospital will be noted in all services. The occupancy of the medical and surgical services is altogether too high to meet the needs for admission to patients and the requirements of the medical staff served by the hospital.

Scarborough General—an extraordinary situation obtains in Scarborough. There is probably not another metropolitan community so underserved by hospital beds. In the obstetrical service there should be a 70 per cent occupancy; it is 88 per cent. In pediatrics, again 70 per cent; it is 135 per cent. The report says, and I quote:

Statistics alone do not give a clear picture of reality in this case since it is obvious that the children's section cannot operate at such a high percentage, and now overflows into the medical and surgical areas. If one balances the medical, surgical and children's services, it is apparent that the occupancy is close to 100 per cent—far higher than is safe or acceptable for a hospital of this size. The most urgent problem, however, is the obstetrical service where the occupancy reaches the almost impossible level of over 90 per cent for a unit of this size, and the pressures are extremely serious.

And so, sir, it goes for Humber Memorial and Northwestern Hospital, where the overall use is 97 per cent. There has been expansion, rapid expansion recently, and the report says that even with the rapid expansion, and I quote:

The occupancy is building up again very close to the maximum level with beds in the corridors at times and great pressure for medical and surgical accommodation.

North York Branson is the same. As for the Queensway Hospital, the statistics are such that the report simply states that they speak for themselves and indicate that the occupancy of each service has been almost ridiculously high.

Mr. Chairman, these are not the extremist words of a politician. These are the extremist words of sober, intelligent men attempting to make an accurate appraisal, and they simply do not give substance to the suggestions on the part of the hon. Minister of Health that there is no hospital bed shortage. But further—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think in fairness the hon. member should point out that at no place did I say there was no shortage of hospital beds.

Mr. S. Lewis: As a matter of fact, the hon. Minister in a sense is correct. If memory serves me, he said that, on the basis of the number of beds per 1,000, it would appear that there was a surplus of .45 per cent. Does my memory serve me correctly?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is quite a different—

Mr. S. Lewis: And I therefore suggest to the hon. Minister that when he says there is an appearance of .45 per cent surplus, he is implying that there is not a hospital bed shortage.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Not at all, not at all.

Mr. S. Lewis: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to relate the Toronto figure, important as it is, to the provincial figure. The report of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission for the year 1962, using the occupancy formula, says that the occupancy rate for public hospitals is 84.8 per cent. And I say to the hon. Minister opposite that it is impossible, humanly impossible, to maintain an adequate rate of service when the starting point is already at the maximum level!

Inevitably, we legislators do not suffer unduly. It is our constituents, the population of the province, who bear the brunt. And the final shock, if I may suggest, to hospital nervous systems is the apparent lack of government initiative to close the gap. The western world has no problems closing the missile gap, but the province of Ontario has very serious problems closing the hospital gap.

One would have thought—with what we in this particular party think to be the unwarranted rise in hospital premiums—that the government could at least have made an effort to get the hospital beds into operation; to build the new services; to underwrite, with public funds, public hospitals as it is increasingly the government's obligation to do. But even on the basis of present extensions and new hospitals, we will still, in the year 1970 be more than 1,000 units short in Metropolitan Toronto. I say to you that is a failure, sir, in physical resources of insufferable proportions. One of the hon. gentlemen on the benches says, "That is an improvement." No one suggests it is not an improvement—in precisely the way that you estimate nurses on the basis of comparisons with the United States and the United Kingdom to give the favourable image. But we are not making an effort here to play with improvements; we are making an effort to meet human needs. I suggest that the hon. Minister of Health would be the first to say that the needs must be met; and if the improvements do not supply those needs, then the government must act because I am sure he feels the pressure of the problem.

I now move to another point, Mr. Chairman. The departmental failure in this respect fans out in other directions. I appreciated the hon. Minister's remarks a little earlier this evening in certain respects; but in one particular regard I was ill at ease. My colleague, the hon. member for Woodbine, earlier this week referred to a certain mushrooming of hospital medical calamities—the Mrs. Rudy case in Western Hospital, the Patricia Morgan case in Toronto General Hospital, the Mrs. Rosabelle McCurdy case in the Royal Victoria at Barrie, the Rosoinea Beaudry case in Wellesley Hospital where an inquest found that an "undue delay in sending for more qualified treatment" was a contributory factor. I agree with the hon. Minister that these are the cases which bask in the bright glare of publicity; and no one for a minute impugns the quality of treatment in the great majority of hospitals in the province of Ontario.

However, such cases do suggest this—and I think honest and reasonable thinking men will agree: They suggest that the ever-present chance of human frailty has been far too much in evidence in the last little while. They suggest that the unalleviated pressure on hospitals is fast reaching the breaking point, and it can have tragic human consequences. And they suggest, Mr. Chairman, that even boards of governors, well-intentioned or otherwise, apparently cannot come to grips with the problem.

That leads us, I think very logically, to yet another area in the fanning-out process of hospital disarray. Present-day boards of governors—and we in the New Democratic Party will say this and emphasize the point again and again, disagreement notwithstanding: We think that most hospital boards are totally unrepresentative of the community and therefore, through no fault of their own, they are substantially unresponsive to certain community requirements.

Of course, members who serve on hospital boards do a reasonably reputable job. The question is: What about the other community interests which should be serving on boards of governors? No present-day historian, Mr. Chairman, would expect that the robber barons of the 1890's in the United States would genuflect before working-class interests; and no future historians of hospital boards of governors in Ontario will suggest that self-regulating industrial and professional groups are going to bow before certain broad community interests, sir—witness the Trenton board—and I think all in this House accept that as an inescapable fact. Perhaps it is unfair to ask it of them. There is no question that some board members simply have no sense of identification with large community areas. But I suggest that government and government alone can decree wider representation, and has a moral obligation to do so.

Government has the moral obligation to do one further thing, and I think the hon. Minister anticipated and began it this evening. He had the foresight to attempt to clarify the apparent hiatus between hospital boards and the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. Apparently the lines are blurred and obscured, having an uncertain authority. The mere fact that the hon. Minister had to speak tonight, to try to define that authority, is evidence of the blurring.

The hon. member for Downsview cited excellent quotations of compromised authority of hospital boards. I am not questioning the necessity of compromise in certain respects. I am simply indicating the uncertainty of authority, and knowing the hon. member for Downsview, I expect he will do it again when the sub-estimates of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission come up.

Mr. Singer: Right.

Mr. S. Lewis: But using the same document that was used by the hon. member for Parkdale—the annual report, 1962, of Northwestern General Hospital—I want to quote from the speech of the hospital president to the association meeting. This is what he said, and I recommend it to the hon. members of this House:

Frankly I do not know why this meeting is being held because of the manner in which the powers of all hospital boards and associations throughout the province have been emasculated by the overriding rights and privileges which have been conferred on the OHSC by The Ontario Department of Health.

There, Mr. Chairman, lies the crux of the problem. Because if this pattern, if this background, has relevance—the shortage of beds, the medical calamities, unrepresentative boards of governors, blurred lines of distinction with the Ontario Hospital Services Commission—if all these things lie prostrate of inadequacy of one kind or another in this province, then they lie prostrate at the feet of the hon. Minister of Health, of his department, of the government, and of no other.

Alas, Mr. Chairman, in large measure, that is only a very limited description of the deficiency in purely physical and administrative resources. There also a serious lack of human resources. There is a drastic crisis in the nursing profession.

The dimensions of the crisis have been outlined. I do not want to bore the hon. members of the House. They are showing a reasonable indulgence at this time of night. Very quickly summarized they are these: Forty-four per cent of the registered nurses in the province of Ontario simply are not employed in the practice of nursing. Metro, according to the report referred to by the hon. member for Parkdale, will soon require 6,300 nurses, nearly double what we presently have. He also quoted the Calvin report, the same report which indicated a specific nursing shortage in hospitals. This is an indisputable fact, irrefutable fact, compiled by hospital authorities—again not extremist statements, but professional, learned statements.

In Toronto itself there is a specific pressing shortage of 680 nurses. Riverdale Hospital is a classic example and by 1970, 2,715 nurses will be needed over and above 1962. In addition to that we have the “brain drain”, the skilled professional drain to the United States.

The state of the nursing profession was first dramatized by the release of the Calvin report and then by the series of articles in the Globe and Mail, where it was suggested that deep discontent, restlessness and confusion, lie at the heart of the profession. Unlike the hon. member for Parkdale, I would like to put a slightly different construction on the nursing crisis. I profoundly feel, and I think hon. members of this House would begin to realize this when they read the reports in the record, that the nurse's profession needs a Magna Carta of rights, because a more exploited, abused and tension-ridden professional group cannot possibly be conceived of. The conditions under which they labour are what prescribe to a large degree the shortage and the “brain drain”.

The hon. Minister of Health announces with some pride that $335 a month revised salary is sufficient for nurses. I say to this House that by the very nature and quality of nurses' work, $5,000 a year is what the income should be and even at that point is not overwhelming. I say also to this House that it is a work load around the clock, that the number of hours stipulated in the work week as the report demonstrates simply do not hold up to analysis and scrutiny, that there is no extra pay for overtime and weekends, that there are no collective bargaining rights in the nurse's profession, that essentially nurses are involved in non-nursing chores in far too great areas of their profession, and let this be said, that when they attend the hospital schools, they are consigned to nothing less than three years of indentured labour.

The curious thing, if I can assume a certain degree of interest on the part of the hon. members, is that to some degree at any rate, the nurse's profession accepts this at root level with equanimity. One wonders about this seemingly resigned acceptance, and it has its start, I think, departing for a moment, in the philosophic roots of nursing and how they bear on the problem.

Nursing began not with Florence Nightingale as the popular belief has it, but with religious and military orders. In the American Journal of Nursing for November, 1963, the past president of the nurses' association in the United States—I have her name, Elizabeth Porter—says, and I quote, I think it is an interesting quote:

With the rise of hospitals under the military orders and monasticism, new influences were added to those already dominating the lives of persons caring for the sick—a military and authoritarian form of organization, a rigid discipline and an almost complete abnegation of freedom. Thus in nursing's religious and military roots we see the origin of the tradition of nurses as unpaid or underpaid workers. We see, too, the identification of nursing with self-sacrifice, unquestioning obedience, repressive discipline and authoritarian control.

Added to that was a definite fear of reprisal from above, because as the hon. member for Parkdale pointed out, the essential view of the nursing profession is as an unquestioningly obedient group, a servile group in effect. That view, which is a base view in my submission, Mr. Chairman, is in large degree felt by the organized nursing organization itself, the RNAO, with 32,000 members. There is a growing rift between the RNAO and the ordinary nurses, the 85 per cent of the regular duty nurses. The open break that everybody anticipated came over what the hon. Minister casually referred to as the shift differential question.

With the greatest respect to the hon. Minister of Health, the question of shift differential was not merely meant as an inducement to bring nurses back to work.

This was meant quite properly as a recognition of the hours they are required to serve and of the prospects of young women at 11 o'clock at night having to return home. The excitement and animation over differentials relates in large part to that horrible bludgeoning to death of the 77-year-old Miss Frances Phillips on her way to Western Hospital on the night of August 2, 1963. When the nurses' registry in Metropolitan Toronto requested an increase of $1.50 for that shift, surely in human terms it was not an expensive increase.

When the request was made it was turned down by the nursing supervisors, and a boycott, because of an identical letter sent out, was placed upon the Toronto registry. This ultimately forced it to collapse. The Registered Nurses Association of Ontario said this, and I quote:

Our association is against a differential ideologically. Payment is for service and the time of day or night does not matter.

That is a colossal fatuity because no group in this society suggests that you work purely for altruistic ideological reasons. It seems to me that in certain salary estimates certain portions of the medical profession manage to accumulate a reasonable income per year, the highest in Canada, and surely that can be extended to the type of work which nurses do. But the interesting point to note, and I think this is exceedingly important and I want to develop a very quick logical sequence, is that not only the Registered Nurses Association of Ontario turned on its own general duty nurses, but the RNAO was backed up by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. A quote from the hon. member for Parkdale, which indicated the services commission rejection of the differential idea at the request of Northwestern Hospital, definitely demonstrates that not only the RNAO was aligned against the nurses but so was the OHSC. Indeed Dr. G. P. Morley, assistant professor of surgery at the University of Toronto is quoted in a Toronto Daily Star editorial of May 3, 1963, as follows:

A hospital board that seeks a solution to its own nursing shortage through a rising salary would in all probability have its application turned down by the provincial commission.

But the interesting thing, and I remind the hon. members of this sequence, is that the province of Ontario is the largest employer of nurses. It has already been pointed out that the hon. Minister of Health is on the board of directors of the Registered Nurses Association of Ontario, which refused the differential, and it is the hon. Minister to whom the OHSC reports, which refused the differential.

Logically, however one views it, the government not only abdicated leadership in the most aggravated area of the nursing crisis, namely, payment and working conditions, but wittingly or unwittingly conspired in the perpetuation of that plight. And I say with the greatest of conviction, to the hon. Minister of Health, that quite apart from the moral and economic rights of nurses, this government has a responsibility for the salvation of the profession before disquiet ruptures from within and the patients in the province ultimately suffer.

There will be open rebellion in the nursing profession, whatever its instinctive timidity at the present, unless the government brings hospital boards and administrators to their collective senses where the needs of nurses are concerned. This organization about whom we heard today, the committee for the advancement of professional nurses, is the first signal in the seriously deteriorating nurses' condition because this is a vastly more effective organization than the RNAO. But yet it finds the service in combat. On the outside of this brochure is a quote from the Toronto Globe and Mail, December 16, 1963, and I commend it to the hon. members:

If nurses are unwilling or unable to organize themselves to obtain better conditions, and hospitals fail to provide them on their own initiative, they will find someone else taking the problems out of their hands.

Now, one can easily move to other areas of similar documentation, but I suspect that every hon. member in this House will participate at the point of sub-estimates. I have only one or two minor points to make relating to the sub-estimates and one of them is obvious. Certainly the entire mental health spectrum lends itself to grave concern.

I was delighted to hear of the hon. Minister's increases in this area, and of the new community hospitals for psychiatric in- and out-patient care. I want to point out when he talks about out-patient psychiatric care in the area of Metropolitan Toronto that we still have what I suggest is a totally misplaced emphasis on institutional—essentially institutional care—as compared with community and child services in the field of mental health. The fact of the matter and, the truth of the matter is that according to the report, which has now been submitted to the government, by 1970 only 311 beds in Metropolitan Toronto public hospitals will be part of psychiatric units. Now everyone in this House knows that is ludicrous. The truth is that there remain incredible waiting lists.

Yesterday I received a letter from a Roman Catholic priest endeavouring to place a child in Ontario Hospital, Orillia, having been told that the present situation requires a wait of three years. And there are exceeding financial barriers, particularly in the area of private psychiatry, which is as everyone will admit, almost an exclusive preserve of wealth. I ask the hon. members in this chamber since when are mental disturbances dialectically related to economics.

More than a thousand Toronto school children, Mr. Chairman, are in need of psychiatric or psychoanalytic care, according to newspaper reports. But they are not receiving it. There is a need for twice the number of practising psychiatrists in the province of Ontario than presently exist, and in Canada as a whole. Ontario's ratio is a little better. That was demonstrated by the Canadian Mental Health Association brief to the Royal Commission on Health Services.

We need psychiatric emphasis on undergraduate levels so that medical doctors and general practitioners then have some grasp of the problem. I know the hon. Minister of Health will agree that we need experimentation of the order of Adolph Meyer at Johns Hopkins Institute, and more technical hospital mental health experimentation modelled on the British pattern. Perhaps most profoundly important of all, public education to the realities that mental illness is as real and as devastating a disability as any physical illness can possibly be. I am certain that the hon. Minister will concur.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, the Medicare controversy continues to boil. I simply allude to it by suggesting to the hon. members that our arguments put forward at the time of the resolution in this House were surely vindicated by the Canadian Health Insurance Association brief to the Hagey commission on January 29, which proposed maximum annual premium of $192 per family. That was the figure proposed by groups who participated in the formulation of Bill No. 163 and it is a figure of a wantonly prohibitive nature totally unrelated to genuine human need.

Mr. Chairman, so be it. Allow me to summarize and conclude. The hospital bed shortage, the fifty per cent premium increase in hospital premium, the lack of capital funds for expansion, the proliferation of medical calamities, the oligarchic boards of governors, arbitrary directives from the OHSC, blurred definitions of responsibility in hospital hierarchies, the unrest among hospital staff in Windsor and Trenton and elsewhere, the nursing crisis, the mental health dilemma, the unrelenting medical care reality, all of these unhappy truths simultaneously can do no other but indict The Department of Health in this government.

And it tends to suggest, if I may Mr. Chairman, that the area of human health in Ontario is an administrative shambles. One is compelled to ask why? There is not a single government member in this House, least of all the hon. Minister, who does not deplore the prevailing conditions. There is not a single government member in this House, least of all the hon. Minister, who does not hold human health to be paramount. There is not a single government member in this House, Mr. Chairman, who does not wish a solution. And yet the sorry situation prevails and persists.

An editorial in the Toronto Globe and Mail of January 10, 1964, outlined most of the areas that I have referred to tonight and asks at the end as follows:

From what do all these problems spring? They are different but they have common causes and perhaps the chief of them is that there is indeed a Victorian quality in our attitude.

That, Mr. Chairman, puts its finger on the crucial point. Is it not true that a Conservative philosophy enamoured of a market place is less inclined to meet the public priorities? Is it not true that those who bow before the status quo have always, even well before Victorian times, preferred to patch at the system rather than to renovate it? Is it not true that those who embrace the conventional wisdoms are less inclined to enact unconventional solutions? Thus the hon. Minister and his government suffer not from any lack of sincerity or genuine concern but their set of social attitudes inhibit the will, the resolve and the capacity to correct. Thank you.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, on vote 701, I noticed in the public accounts book of 1962 that the unexpended amount in The Department of Health was some $9.4 million. Then again, in the public accounts book of 1963 the unexpended amount for this department is once again $9.4 million. From the two public accounts books, the only thing I can conclude is that this department apparently over-budgets to the extent of $9 million each year. And in that way when the year is over it is very easy for this government to show a surplus. They over-budget intentionally so that when the time does come, they show a surplus. I think the budget for this year is more than likely a little too large by an extent of approximately $9 million. The last two years have proven this point, and I think that the hon. Minister should have presented a budget that was a little more realistic.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, on item 15 of the main estimates, I would like to talk again about the registered nurses. My basis for doing this is because I notice the hon. Minister's remarks about shift differentials. I find it hard to feel that nurses, nurses' associations and those associated to them—I find it hard to believe that they find objection to shift differential.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: May I ask if the hon. member for Dovercourt will refrain from discussing nurses until we come to OHSC? This is a grant for the purpose of recruitment only; item 15 is a grant that is given to the association for the purpose of helping them with recruitment programmes.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I am concerned with recruitment to this particular association. I want to refer to remarks of some representatives of the association. I think their remarks are most pertinent to recruitment—and that is the working conditions of nurses. If I could be permitted to talk on this, I would appreciate it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The whole matter will come in under the OHSC if the hon. member would not mind leaving it until then.

Mr. Thompson: I know the hon. Minister is a very fair man, and if I could just make a quote perhaps he will see why I want to continue my discussion at this point. My quote is really from a report of the first conference for staff basic nurses held under the auspices of the Registered Nurses Association of Ontario at the Westbury hotel. As I understand it, this grant which we are discussing is to the association and is for the purpose of recruitment. I just want to discuss some of the remarks made at the first conference of this registered nurses association.

I would say, sir, at this meeting it was stated that shift differentials were brought forward by Miss Louise Jamieson, consultant, hospital nursing services of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, who stated that she did not consider the type of payments, that is, the shift differential payments, in keeping with professional status. An immediate response came from the floor at this meeting at the Westbury with a quotation. And the quotation, Mr. Chairman, was from the American Journal of Nursing of November, 1963, in which they showed that the latest survey in the United States showed that 94 per cent of all nurses in non-federal hospitals in the United States now receive a differential wage for evening and night work. The wage increment varied from less than $15 per month to over $30.

The question, of course, is that we have Miss Louise Jamieson from this association, to which we would be giving a grant, or voting a grant, saying that a shift differential will not be in keeping with the professional status of nurses. Yet we find many nurses in the United States, 93 per cent of the nurses, who are prepared to accept shift differential. The question is obvious: Do they not have a professional status in the United States? Well, there was no answer from the floor of the House to this question.

And the point that I want to make, Mr. Chairman, which has been made by the other speakers, is that one begins to question whether Miss Louise Jamieson, who is part of this nurses' association is speaking as a professional nurse or as an official of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. As a professional nurse, I would say, sir, that she surely must be aware of the medical profession, of the doctors', scale of fees. And if I could quote from the doctors' scale of fees, we find that for night calls, which are received and made between the hours of 8 p.m. and midnight, the doctor says, "I will take $7." But if it is received and made between midnight and 7 a.m., he says, "I will take $10." And I ask the hon. Minister of Health, a doctor himself: Is he suggesting that because the doctors, in their schedule of fees, have a differential does it mean that he is condemning every doctor in the province as being non-professional?

Mr. Singer: A very interesting question.

Mr. Thompson: Again I say that I feel Miss Jamieson speaks as a member of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, and not as a member of the nurses. I could elaborate more, sir, on this, with respect to differentials that have been paid.

The hon. Minister has said that he is against giving shift differentials. The hon. member for Parkdale has explained that he thought that if we paid nurses an adequate wage during the time of coming down for night work, and so on, that then we might be able to get more nurses. Then the hon. member for Scarborough West has also pointed out that surely we should have decent wages for people who come down to work in the evening hours, and also that they should be able to afford a taxi in order to get home.

I say, sir, that this points very much to recruitment and to giving grants for recruitment, that we get decent working conditions and decent salaries for nurses. I would say that we have looked, for example, at industries across Canada.

The Minister of Labour in a previous government, Mr. Starr, had had an examination of over 2,500 establishments that reported having regular shift operations. Four-fifths paid shift differentials; these plants employed 93 per cent of the non-office employees in establishments having regular shift operation.

It is interesting to note, in this survey, that he did not bring in hospitals but since—and again this was pointed out, I think, by both the hon. members who spoke before—shift differentials are paid in the hospitals in Quebec, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and since Dr. Urquhart, chairman of the commission, had stated 15 months ago that Ontario hospitals should be given time to adjust their working conditions to something more closely approximating the pattern of other comparative industry, for 80 per cent of the firms using shifts and employing 93 per cent of all Canadians working on a shift-work basis are paid shift differentials, then I would think that surely by this time Dr. Urquhart is thinking that he could start using shift differential payment in hospitals.

I would like to come again to the fact of recruitment. I would say very strongly that the hon. Minister, in suggesting that the nurse's pay is equivalent to that of a teacher as he has done, has not looked into this situation as closely as perhaps he should have, looking at all the factors. I would say, for example, that if there was a 16-year old girl, who had a grade 12 certificate and decided she was going to enter nursing, then she is going to have to take a three-year course after her grade 12. If she decides that she is going to go into teaching, she can take a two-year course at teachers' college; or else, if she goes on to grade 13, she can take a one-year course.

And it is true what the hon. Minister says, that the teachers' college graduate with two years' study after grade 12 will get $3,300 a year, and that the nurse graduating will get something more than that. She will get $4,000—I think the rates are $4,020 when she starts—but I readily point out that the public school teacher, when she starts, is drawing a salary of $3,300 which is less than the nurse. She is drawing a salary of that amount in her first year of teaching while the nursing student is still completing her studies she is having to work her way through. I recall the discipline and rigour which nurses have to go through when they are working their way through. I am sure the hon. Minister himself has had experience in his younger days. Perhaps before he was married, he and I might have courted nurses and know the discipline and the work—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Thompson: I was complimenting you, sir, because—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: She will not take it as a compliment.

Mr. Thompson: Let me just say this, sir, that is assuming again they were twin sisters. One at 16 went into nursing and the other went into school teaching. The one becomes a school teacher and the other a nurse in Toronto. The public school teacher would earn a total of $29,200 in the six years from 19 to 25 and she would have, as the hon. Minister well knows, and I do, a great number of holidays during the summer.

I notice, sir, that the Minister of Education is smiling with satisfaction at the fact that teachers do have holidays. Indeed as I look around here I would say they deserve the holidays they get. But she would have a great number of holidays. Remember, I stated that the young girl who had gone into teaching from 19 until 25 would get $29,200. The nurse, in the same period of time, would earn $26,000. In other words, she would be earning $3,000 less. And what will be the life of the nurse in comparison with the school teacher? The life of the nurse during those same six years would mean having to work on Saturdays and Sundays, holidays and evening shifts, and night shifts, and receive a minimum of holidays compared to her public school teaching friend.

I suggest to you, sir, that to make a comparison in attractiveness between nursing and teaching—on either a mercenary basis or on the basis of working conditions, it is more attractive by far to be a teacher.

I think, sir, having pointed out those two, in my opinion, fallacious statements the hon. Minister has made, I will now sit down in connection with the grant on registered nurses.

Mr. MacDonald: Having talked about life and its betterment, I want to turn to the more macabre subject of death and funerals, because coming under the hon. Minister of Health is The Embalmers and Funeral Directors Act for which he is responsible. As all hon. members of the House are aware, this is a topic that is receiving considerable amount of publicity. Indeed, it is receiving a considerable amount of research and discussion in lengthy book form.

The general theme advanced is with regard to the wasteful and ostentatious nature of modern funerals. I do not want particularly to deal with that tonight because I think in the final analysis, Mr. Chairman, that this is going to be the choice of the people themselves. But I want to examine some of the things that may come under the jurisdiction of the hon. Minister and I shall indicate how they come under his jurisdiction, where he can at least alter the circumstances so that there will be a greater freedom of choice.

For example, I was rather interested in this series of advertisements that the Metropolitan Toronto members of the Ontario Funeral Service Association have been publishing in Toronto newspapers. At the bottom of their advertisements they have, in keeping with the free enterprise approach, a paragraph entitled:

FREEDOM OF CHOICE

It is the right of every person to have freedom of choice whether it involves the election of a candidate for political office, the kind of clothes he wants to wear, the kind of schools to which he wants to send his children, the kind of a wedding he wants his daughter to have. So it is when it comes to the selection of a funeral. The right remains that of the individual or family to select a funeral service of their own choice at the price they wish to pay from the funeral director of their choice. No reputable funeral director would presume that it should be otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest that the Act which the hon. Minister is responsible for simply does not provide the opportunity for this. In the first instance, you have circumstances in which people, upset because of the emotional environment created by a death in the home, and things of this nature, seek the cost of a funeral. They go to one or two funeral parlours. In some instances, through investigations which I know have been held, they get half-information. They say they want an inexpensive funeral and they discover that an inexpensive funeral is in the range of $800 or $900, because an expensive one may be $1,200 or $1,500. They have no knowledge of the fact and no ability to find out readily what a funeral at a less expensive level might consist of—one that they themselves would be content with.

For example, on the idea of costs, just let me draw two rather interesting points to the attention of the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Grossman), since he seems to be greatly amused by this macabre topic. I think he is a fan of Hitchcock and he gets his humour and—

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Where is this under vote 701?

Mr. MacDonald: I am queried, Mr. Chairman, by one of the hon. members to the left who perhaps has not been around here long enough to realize that any Act that comes under a department whose estimates are before the House, can be discussed by a member in the first estimate.

Mr. Reilly: I was just asking.

Mr. MacDonald: Good. Good. This is the place to come if you want to get the answers—as you found last night.

Now in the Canadian Funeral Services publication of September, 1962, we find a little paragraph that says:

A MERCHANDISING SUGGESTION

With all this talk about simplicity as a desirable objective in funeral services in contrast to current "wastefulness," "pagan practices," "ostentation" and the like, we suggest that all funeral directors might consider offering a plain black casket with a lift-off lid for $150, a plain grey casket with hinged plate for $300, and begin their ordinary funerals at $450.

Maybe the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer), since he has to conduct funerals so often, will recognize immediately that these figures ranging from $150 up are extraordinarily unknown. Nobody who is faced with the cost of a funeral could think of it in terms of $150. And how do they get this kind of funeral? I am pointing out that to meet the problem of the public image that the profession is now being given, they are suggesting these lower prices, with the further suggestion that they should start their regular funerals from $450 up.

In this connection I was interested in another ad in the Canadian Funeral Services for January, 1963. It says: "Graceful dignity created by Dominion craftsmen." It is from Dominion Manufacturers Limited, one of the manufacturers of caskets. It has a picture of one here, and at the bottom of the ad it says:

This beautiful casket displayed in your selection room will add prestige and dignity and will produce an exceptional atmosphere of sales acceptability.

Now is that not delightfully put?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, that is an advertisement to the trade, is it not?

Mr. MacDonald: I agree it is an advertisement to the trade, but so what?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Not to the public. Let us be fair; that is not an advertisement to the public.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Those hon. members can see evil in everything.

Mr. Bryden: See evil where it is.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I come down to a specific in the light of what I have just spelled out to the hon. Minister; I want to draw it to his attention.

In the regulations to The Embalmers and Funeral Directors Act, there is on page 24, regulation 28, sub-section 2:

No funeral director shall in his advertising include any reference to prices or conditions of sale.

I want to suggest to the hon. Minister that that should be eliminated, because that regulation on the part of funeral directors is the means by which they make it impossible, granted the circumstances under which most families will go to make preparations for a funeral, to ever be able to shop and get something less than the prices that they think are the prices they must pay.

If it were possible, as I submit to you it should be possible, to indicate the costs of a funeral in funeral advertising, then under the particular circumstances which the family faces they can gauge whether or not they want to consider a funeral that is being offered for, say, $400, rather than $800 or $1,000 or $1,200. And perhaps they will not, under those circumstances, be so readily led to spend an extra thousand dollars which is desperately needed to meet the needs of the living, rather than in paying tribute in excessive sentimentality to the loved one who may be gone.

Let me move on from that to one other aspect of the question. I was interested to find in the December, 1962 issue of the Canadian Funeral Services publication, a comment on some activities in our private bills committee here.

Let me read a paragraph:

A bill authorizing the city of Toronto to pay funeral and burial expenses of indigents was recently approved by the Ontario Legislature. Previously the city lacked authority to do this, Toronto's solicitor contending that there is no provision for it in The Municipal Act. He told the committee that such funerals were $15 after World War I but were now $250.

John A. Fullerton of Thessalon said that whatever is paid is not enough. Allan Grossman of Toronto said that if people bought enough insurance while alive, they would not need funeral aid from others.

And then they have got a sentence in parenthesis here which says:

(Mr. Fullerton is a funeral director. Mr. Grossman is an insurance agent.)

That I thought was useful enlightenment for the readers of the publication.

The new legislation, giving the city a blank cheque in these matters, stipulates that the city may recover the expenses later from the estate of the deceased or from anyone else who is liable for the payment.

Related to this cost of welfare, I was interested to discover, in the February, 1962 issue of this same publication to the trade, that they list—and I am not going to go into the full spelling out of it—the costs that are available for indigent funerals in cities all across the Dominion of Canada, many of them in the province of Ontario. The lowest one is $100 and there are four cities in Ontario in that bracket: Chatham, Chesterville, Galt and St. Thomas.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Is Chesterville a city now?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, four places then—$110 for a couple from Newfoundland and B.C.; $115 for Winnipeg, Manitoba; $125 for a lengthy number, including some from Ontario, like Midland, Napanee, Peterborough, Port Arthur, Port Hope, Sault Ste. Marie, Tavistock, Waterloo, and Winchester and so on and it goes up to the highest one now—Toronto at $250.

Mr. Chairman, there is a paragraph leading into this listing and I want to read two or three sentences from the paragraph:

Therefore, if you supply your municipality with funeral services at a depressed rate it will be next to impossible to secure a more reasonable allowance from these other agencies, and you will find it increasingly difficult to justify higher prices for your normal funerals.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Union security.

Mr. MacDonald: I suppose that is one rather apt comment on it. However, this is once again a matter of concern to this Legislature, because it is in relation to welfare costs which we share and which we have authorized, at least, at the highest price level in the instance of the city of Toronto bill a year or so ago. But I come back to the basic point I am raising with the hon. Minister; namely, this regulation which makes it possible for the public to be kept in the dark on costs so that there is no possibility for them to shop and get a funeral at something less than the exorbitant rates.

There are two final points I want to draw to the attention of the hon. Minister, from an examination of this legislation, that I think we should take a look at.

One is—and this is really competing with Hitchcock at his worst—but it is one that is disturbing a lot of people.

From section 77 of The Cemeteries Act, I want to read to the House:

Nobody shall be cremated unless a certificate and permit similar to that now required for burial have been produced, nor within 48 hours after death unless death has been occasioned by communicable disease subject to the quarantine and placard according to The Public Health Act—

I do not think I need to read the rest.

What I want to draw to the hon. Minister's attention is that this, in effect, precludes the possibility for those who are interested in cremation to choose this as the form of burial; because I am told—and this is getting into the more macabre aspects of the topic—that the human body after death enters into a state of decomposition after about 24 hours. Yet the Act stipulates here—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: A bad time to say those things.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, perhaps we should leave this until tomorrow morning when the hon. Minister of Mines is in a more resilient mood and can take it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: But what I want to draw to the attention of the hon. Minister, after this interruption, if I can pick up my train of thought, Mr. Chairman, is that every one of the American states now, with the exception of one, Wisconsin, have reduced this to 24 hours rather than 48 hours, so that it does not make it necessary for embalming, if the family wish to have cremation rather than the normal burial procedure. I would ask the hon. Minister to examine this legislation to see whether this kind of modernization might not be something for Ontario to consider.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, and this is related to the whole topic that I am discussing, the funeral directors, because of the problem in public relations that they have faced, have recently formed what is known as the Funeral Society of Ontario. It is, in effect, a prepayment arrangement, to try to compete with some other prepayment arrangements that have been presented to the public for funeral services. But this is really an astounding organization, and since presumably its by-laws are authorized by the hon. Minister—everything else in this field comes under his direction—I want to draw a couple of points to the attention of the hon. members.

In the first place this is presented to the public as being a non-profit-making organization. In the strictly legal sense this is correct. This organization which in the subtitle, under the by-laws here, is referred to as fraternal, doesn't make any profit, but what it does is to seek the prepayment; and the prepayment then, of course, ultimately goes to a funeral director and he makes the profit. So, as far as the public is concerned, it may mean non-profit because it is only a body to go out and solicit business, but certainly it is a false image it is presenting in that there is no elimination of profit, because ultimately it goes to the funeral director.

The other thing I am puzzled by is that this organization presumably entitles anybody who buys the certificate—which, in effect, is prepayment—to be a member and to vote on the officers and the board of directors and so on. But for some strange reason or other, all of the board of directors happen to be funeral directors. And yet you will find in its by-laws a section which is in the most magnificent legal gobbledygook but which, in effect, Mr. Chairman, is a non-conflict of interest clause. Since the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) is really bright and wide awake, I will read it and perhaps he can grasp it. It says:

No director shall be disqualified by his office from contracting with the society; nor shall any contract or arrangement entered into by or on behalf of the society with any director, or in which any director is in any way interested, be liable to be avoided; nor shall any director so contracting, or being so interested, be liable to account to the society for any profit realized by any such contract or arrangement by reason of such director holding that office or the fiduciary relationship thereby established.

I hope you got it all.

In effect, it is a non-conflict of interest clause to assure that in any business of this fraternal organization, which a director may go out and solicit, and from which he may ultimately benefit, he does not place himself in a conflict of interest. Now, I think, Mr. Chairman, that this is a rather strange reversion of normal principles. All of the board of directors of this organization, presenting itself to the public for funeral prepayment, is made up of funeral directors and in their own by-laws, made with the approval of the hon. Minister, I presume they, in effect, get themselves out of a conflict of interest. As directors they can go out and solicit business on behalf of themselves, but they are in no conflict of interest.

Once again it seems to me that this whole field is one that should be reviewed. Since it comes under the hon. Minister of Health, I would suggest that since it obviously cannot be done for this year it be one that he and his department should look into between now and next year. I have made one or two proposals, particularly with reference to the regulation forbidding the statement of price in advertising and the whole set-up of this organization. I would appreciate the examination of the hon. Minister and his report to the House another year.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to answer some of the questions in case they get ahead of me?

First of all, talking on the last subject brought up by the hon. member for York South, I have sketchingly heard of this society. It has nothing to do with The Department of Health in any way. It is a group, apparently—and I am speaking only from conjecture because I have paid little attention to it, having nothing to do with it—as I understand it, it is a fraternal group formed within the funeral directors' group. I do believe that it would come under the purview, at least, of the hon. Attorney General; poor fellow, we load all our problems on him—but I believe it has something to do with the prepayment of funerals.

If the hon. members will recall, in this House a year ago, or three years ago, when we introduced legislation to protect the interests of people who were prepaying funerals.

we were successful in persuading The Department of the Attorney General to take this over because it has something to do with matters of trust funds.

Mr. MacDonald: You have been happier ever since.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: And we were very happy, indeed, to get out of it, because this is not really a function, nor does it have any relationship, with health whatsoever.

The matter of the 48 hours for a body that is to be cremated is a subject that has given us a good deal of concern. There are arguments for and against it. There have been arguments brought forward to us by the coroners. They believe that the 48 hours are necessary for their purposes. From our standpoint we have been persuaded, in balance—and I must say that the balance is weak—that the 48-hour period is, perhaps, necessary in some degree to give the family an opportunity to decide for sure if they want cremation.

Cremation is not yet popular. It is growing in popularity, and there are many who believe it is the best disposal of human remains. This is their right. But we are looking very carefully at this 48-hour regulation because, as the hon. member has pointed out, we have noted that a great many other jurisdictions have gone to the 24-hour maximum.

Mr. MacDonald: All except one in the United States.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I did not realize that there were so many of them. But I do know the preponderance of them are now in favour of the 24-hour time limit.

The matter of the regulations of the funeral directors—that does come to us because we are responsible for the legislation—is a matter that has given us a very great deal of concern, not only in respect to funeral directors but with respect to other groups in which there is a mixture of professionalism and business. I contend as a person that government should not be in the regulation of business. However, this is apparently traditional and so far I have not yet come to the point where I am prepared to recommend to the government that there should be a line of demarcation. I can say to the hon. member that these Acts—and there are several of them coming under the purview of my department—are all under careful study. I cannot promise that we will be ready to recommend changes next year because there are a great many difficult and involved problems in them. Nonetheless, we are studying them with a view to seeing if we can sort out among them the phases of the operation that are directly associated with, or have in them, health implications. This, we believe, is the limit of our responsibility. There is a member—

Mr. MacDonald: And I ask the hon. Minister specifically what the opinion—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would be loath to give a reaction just off the cuff about it. I have thought about it. I have thought many things about it, and frankly I have not reached a conclusion. Therefore I would be very loath, as I say, to give an opinion concerning it. It is a matter that disturbs me greatly, nonetheless.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a matter that has been talked about a great deal here and I think I should make very clear to the House our opinions about this matter. This is the matter of the Registered Nurses Association of Ontario. This organization has nothing to do with government, and government has nothing to do with it. We have, in our main office estimates here, an item of $5,000 that was set up a long time ago, when government and the association did have a more intimate association than we have now. We are completely divorced now, if you will. We have nothing to do with them and they have nothing to do with us. But we do give them this amount of money to assist in a programme of recruitment only. We do not tell them how it should be spent, except to indicate that is the purpose for which we are giving them the money. We give the grant to them in the same way that we give grants to several other bodies, as outlined in this main office brochure.

Now, it is quite true, Mr. Chairman, that I am listed on the directorate as the honorary president. But I am the honorary president of a great host of these associations that have some loose association with The Department of Health just as many hon. members in this House are named by virtue of the fact that they are members of the Legislature as honorary members or members ex officio of many boards. I can assure you before my estimates come around again I shall have severed even that connection, so that there will be no question in the minds of anyone that I am sitting on one bargaining unit wearing one hat on one occasion, and sitting on another one wearing the other hat on another.

And may I make clear here, too, that I sit on neither body. I think I attend the RNAO meeting once a year, when I bring greetings from the province of Ontario to them, when they meet in annual session. Apart from that, I can assure you that I have no association with them whatsoever, except that we are on the most friendly of terms—not to the extent of tender loving care but nonetheless on very cordial terms indeed. Nor do I sit on the Ontario Hospital Services Commission in any capacity whatsoever. It would be completely ridiculous for a member of government to sit on the commission when the commission is deciding matters that the government might well have some questions about. Therefore, I am not a commissioner. I take no part in their proceedings, but again there are very close, cordial, relations between the commission and myself.

Mr. Singer: But does the hon. Minister not recommend to the commission for appointment—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course, I do. But I do not sit in on the deliberations when they are dealing with hospital budgets and this is quite a different matter altogether. I am not taking any participation in setting budgets or saying what hospitals shall do or what they shall not do. This, Mr. Chairman, is the explanation for this $5,000 grant. I repeat, it is given to this organization just as we give, for instance, a $5,000 grant to the Canadian Public Health Association for certain functions in which we believe government might have an interest. This might well be the agent that would look after that interest for us.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee rise and report that it has come to a certain resolution and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to a certain resolution and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning we will continue with these estimates.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): With the indulgence of the House, I should like to table some reports.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko begs leave to present to the House the following reports:

1. Thirtieth annual report of The Department of Municipal Affairs of the province of Ontario, for the year ending December 31, 1963.

2. The 1962 annual report of the municipal statistics of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

3. Fifty-eighth annual report of the Ontario Municipal Board for the year ending December 31, 1963.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.10 o'clock, p.m.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Friday, February 21, 1964
Morning Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Friday, February 21, 1964

Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, continued	825
Recess, 12.35 o'clock	845

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1964

The House met at 10:30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature today in the east gallery members of the B'Nai B'rith Youth Organization; in the west gallery, members of the senior boys class, Islington United Church, and students from St. James Separate School, Toronto.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Before the orders of the day, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is it the intention of the government to present any report of the committee which is inquiring into redistribution in the province at this session?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is simply a question of whether it will accomplish anything further before this session ends. It is continuing its work, there is more to be done in the area of redistribution, and when the report is completed, the committee will bring it forward. I cannot honestly say whether there will be a report by the end of this session or not. Some of the urgency which surrounded this matter six months ago no longer exists. I asked the committee at that time if it would make a distinct effort to bring forward some results so that we could deal with them in the last session. But it is continuing to function.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Thirty-second order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. C. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

(continued)

On vote 701:

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Chairman, last night on the main office vote we were discussing the question of hospitals and hospital accommodation. I am not sure whether this should come up on vote 714, but because the subject matter was introduced last night, I would like to speak briefly on the problem as far as it relates to Metropolitan Toronto. I say "briefly" and I emphasize that word in rather great contrast to the long-winded speech we had from the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter). I would like to draw a distinction as well between the speech we heard last night from the hon. member for Parkdale and the very admirable speech, I thought, as far as it went, from the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis), in that I hope to be able to add something a little constructive in the debate.

I am serious in this, sir, I think we owe a duty not only to this Legislature but to the people we are supposed to represent here by doing more than outlining the problems that exist in any field, and I am quite willing to admit that there are problems here in Metro Toronto. I think we owe a duty not only to outline the problems, but as well, if we can, to outline a few constructive proposals to solve some of those problems. I think the hon. member for Scarborough West in his very illuminating talk last night—I wish he was in the House so he could hear these words which are at least intended as congratulatory to him—showed a great wealth of knowledge of the field and a great tolerance for giving the House the benefits of his views. But I do wish that he had been slightly more constructive. It is fine and well to outline the problems, but we should outline as well some of our ideas on solutions to those problems.

As I say, I believe that there is a problem here in Metropolitan Toronto. I am led to believe that this problem does not exist in the rest of the province. I think it is pretty well isolated here in Toronto. And I do want to congratulate the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) and the department for the work and the leadership they have been showing in the rest of the province in this field. I am just wondering what is wrong with the Metropolitan Toronto situation itself. As a Metropolitan Toronto member, I suppose some of the blame falls on me in that the problem of the scarcity of hospital beds in Metropolitan Toronto has not yet been solved.

I welcome the very constructive proposals put forward in the debate on the Speech from the Throne by the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop). Along this line I too would like to speak for a moment regarding the overall problem of providing hospital space in Toronto. That is the problem of financing, or of finding the money. The hon. member for Forest Hill came out, I thought, with a very admirable proposal regarding the selling of bonds by some of the hospitals. I think this is a field which, if the department itself has not investigated, it could do so and present the proposal to some of the boards of governors of some of these large hospitals in Toronto.

Another proposal that I would like to ask the hon. Minister to take under consideration is the question of mortgaging some of the hospital properties in order to raise capital for hospital expansion. This problem has already been met in a small hospital with which I am associated in Toronto and I was delighted to find the conciliatory attitude of the officials of the commission in this regard. If the interest rate payable on the mortgage is at all reasonable, the commission will include the interest charges on a mortgage in its bed rate as a capital expense. I think this is a very worthwhile move on the part of the commission and I congratulate it for it.

My only regret is that I do not believe that this manner of financing capital charges and capital expansion on the part of hospitals has been looked into by a great many boards of governors of our hospitals in the Toronto area. I think it is a wonderful solution. Trust companies and insurance companies are, I think, quite eager to get in the field. Why not? Any mortgagee would. They cannot lose on the situation. After all, the income of these hospitals is guaranteed by the province through the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. I do not imagine the government would ever allow foreclosure of a hospital to take place in the Toronto area.

If it did, obviously something is wrong with the administration of the hospital and the government should have taken it over long before in any event.

I think this is an ideal way for the hospitals themselves to raise capital financing in regard to the expansion of hospital facilities, and I think it is one field which, if the department itself has not looked into this situation, it could, and bring it to the attention of more of the boards of governors. Perhaps it is not the duty of the department, perhaps it is the duty of the hospital services commission, I am not too sure. But it is a field that, at the moment as I say, in one case with which I am associated in any event, it is working, fully accepted by the commission. This is the manner in which this small hospital has expanded in the past and the manner in which it intends to expand in the future. I think it is a suggestion that could be looked into very seriously, along with the worthwhile proposals previously made by the hon. member for Forest Hill.

Of course, there is another way in which the government should get into the field, or perhaps could get into the field—whether it should or not is a question of conjecture. I understand from the Speech from the Throne for instance, that the government is going to set up a Crown corporation to aid universities in their capital financing in the future. I think the situation is serious enough in the Metropolitan Toronto area, in regard to hospital space and hospital beds, that perhaps even the government should seriously consider setting up a Crown corporation to aid the hospital authorities in their capital expansion. I do not believe that this is the purpose or the function of the hospital services commission. I think this perhaps should be a field in which The Department of Health itself should function through a Crown corporation. If the government thought it was needed, it could aid in such schemes as debt reduction and sales of bonds or debentures by the hospital authorities, as well as aiding in the mortgaging of hospital properties, perhaps by way of a reduced interest rate on the mortgage. I do not feel myself that this is needed at the moment. I feel that the hospital authorities themselves could be a lot more flexible in their attitude to financing capital expansion rather than appealing to the government and to the public. I think they do need a more businesslike approach in some of the boards of governors and the hospital administrations in Toronto.

I think they should begin to look on the hospitals as businesses. I feel they should be able to expand in the way a normal business should expand, by means of borrowing against the assets of the hospital at the moment. I think this is a field that the government should emphasize to some of the boards of governors in Toronto because I do think capital expansion funds are very sadly needed. Along this line, I have mentioned that the main ways in which capital funds are now obtained by the hospitals are, of course, appeals to the public and appeals to the government for capital grants.

I have heard rumours, Mr. Chairman, of a system in some of the larger hospitals here in Toronto, in regard to their public appeals, which is really nothing short of extortion. As I say, I have heard these rumours. I have had young doctors complain to me regarding the system presently used by some of the hospitals and the fear of the doctors is such that I have been asked not to mention the hospitals involved or the doctors involved. This is a system that is in existence at the moment—in at least two cases that I know of—and it should certainly be frowned on by The Department of Health or the hospital services commission. This is the practice of the PO committee for the hospitals, setting amounts which the doctors themselves must contribute to the public appeal for capital funds.

I quite agree that, in a great many cases, the doctors who use the hospitals and who are on the staff of the hospitals should contribute, and should contribute handsomely, to the public appeal for building funds for those hospitals. I think a great deal of their income is derived because they are on the hospital staff or because they do have privileges in those hospitals; but I think it is extremely unfair, especially to the young doctor, to have an indication made to him by the committee that he will not be granted privileges in that hospital unless he does contribute handsomely, to a set amount for doctors to contribute to the building fund. I think this is most unfair, especially to the young doctor, and if the matter has not been brought to the attention of The Department of Health before, I hope that the hon. Minister will look into the situation and perhaps indicate to some of these people that they are being very harsh to the young doctors.

The next matter in regard to hospital funds that I want to indicate to the hon. Minister, and perhaps this should have been more properly brought up on vote 714, is that the bed rate, that is the daily rate set by the commission as I understand it, in regard to the hospitals, is set on the previous year's accounts, not on the next year's budget.

In the Toronto area this is a hardship on some of the hospitals at the moment. The reason, of course, is because of the increase in their costs—in their maintenance costs—for supplies, salaries, for nurses' salaries. In effect, the daily rate set by the commission is two years behind because, as I said, the bed rate is set on the previous year's account, not on the next year's budget. This is perhaps another matter for which, if we are going to get into further aid in the Toronto area for some of these hospitals, the hon. Minister should indicate to the commission their policy be changed. As long as the budget for the next year is soundly based, I can see no reason why the commission itself should not base their bed rate on the next year's budget rather than on the past year's account.

The final item I want to bring to the attention of the House and the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, is the matter of specialization of hospitals. I speak as a layman in this matter. I do not even pretend to be an expert. But my information is that, in Canada especially, we are still lagging behind the modern-day concept of what a hospital is, and what a hospital should be in a metropolitan area. My information is that, in cities from Budapest to Buffalo, new hospitals today are being devoted to the specialization concept; and by this I mean that as long as the community is fairly satisfactorily served by general hospitals no more general hospitals are being built. Instead specialized hospitals are being built.

For instance, I would imagine that one of the great needs here, in Metropolitan Toronto at the moment would be the central location—and by that I mean a central location as far as highway transportation is concerned—of an emergency receiving hospital whose sole function would be to receive emergency cases brought to it.

I believe the hon. Minister's figures, in regard to the bed occupancy and the figures given to the House last night by the hon. member for Scarborough West, are not consistent. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, in the overall picture in the Metropolitan Toronto area, there is a surplus—a very slight surplus—in the bed occupancy rate. But the reason for this, of course, is that in some cases, in some of the hospitals, there are specialized wards that are not filled to capacity and are not being utilized to the utmost.

On the other hand, there are other wards which are continually filled to overflowing; and my information is that for 30 years in most of the other urban areas, metropolitan areas, in this hemisphere, as well as in Europe, the concept of building specialized hospitals has been well accepted. They have been building maternity hospitals, or for instance, emergency hospitals, where people with specialized problems go to a specialized hospital.

For instance, this concept was accepted here many, many years ago when we built the sick children's hospital. This is a specialized hospital for children, based presumably on Great Ormsby Street in London. This is the type of hospital which, I believe, we should now be building in our metropolitan areas and I think this is the type of hospital which should be built here in Toronto. And if we cannot have a community effort, if we cannot have that happy blending of private initiative and government help that is now in existence with regard to the expansion of our existing hospitals, then I think this is a field where the government itself, unfortunately, is going to have to step in and build the hospitals, to at least get them in the going stage.

Mr. Chairman, those are the suggestions I have, along with one other to the hon. Minister. Perhaps this is a matter that has been brought up before this House on these estimates, but it is the question of Sunnybrook Hospital here in Toronto.

Again this is merely hearsay—as far as I am concerned, I do not know for sure—but there are plenty of rumours running around. There are plenty of people spouting off these days regarding the empty beds in Sunnybrook Hospital. Whether it is true, I do not know, but I would hope that the hon. Minister of Health, if the commission cannot, would take this up with the federal government to see if something cannot be done to utilize that very wonderful hospital to the utmost.

It would appear ridiculous to me that, within three miles of Sunnybrook Hospital with its empty beds, there is another general hospital in which, every day, people are being put in the corridors. To me this is a fantastic muddle, a conflict between the duties of the provincial government and the duties of the federal government. I really do not know what the federal government is doing in the hospital business in the first place, but in any event they are in. My information is that the bed space in Sunnybrook and the wonderful facilities in Sunnybrook are not being utilized to the utmost. I would humbly suggest to the hon. Minister, if he has not already begun to crack that nut, to attempt to do so forthwith, at least to alleviate the pressures on the other hospitals in the area at the moment.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, as the only member in this House who belongs to the most honourable and oldest profession, that of funeral director, I would like to be permitted to make a few comments in order to correct some of the information given this House by the usually well researched and well informed hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). May I say, Mr. Chairman, at this time, that much of the information given was far away from the truth; and the hon. member's comments on some of the data read in this Legislature were definitely off base.

I failed to recognize any criticism of the profession as it relates to The Department of Health. I do not propose to give you a lengthy paper on the role of the funeral director and embalmer in preventing the spreading of diseases by properly performing their duties as embalmers or funeral directors when preparing bodies for burial. It would be a good education for the hon. members of this House to be given the facts regarding the tremendous work done by the funeral profession during the past 50 years.

However, inasmuch as the hon. member has not discussed that aspect, I take it for granted that he has not been able to find any ground for criticism in this respect.

One of the statements made by the hon. member for York South seemed to imply that families did not have freedom of choice when they want to call a funeral director. This is contrary to fact. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, if a funeral director were found to be soliciting business in a hospital, or anywhere else, his licence would be immediately cancelled. I am sure the hon. members of this House who had the misfortune of losing one of their loved ones at any time were not coerced into calling anyone they did not want to call. They were perfectly free to call the funeral director of their choice.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York South talked about the cost of the average funeral in this province, or in this city, as being in the vicinity or in the range of some $800 to $900. This is quite contrary to facts. According to the latest Dominion Bureau of Statistics report—the latest one I was able to obtain—the highest average cost for adult funerals was in the municipality of London—of Hamilton, may I say—at $415 and the lowest cost was $167 in a small municipality. The average cost was somewhere around $350.

The average overhead cost, according to the latest figures obtainable, is well over $325 throughout the province of Ontario. I am sure this cost is well over $450. I am speaking of costs, operating costs being well over $450 in the largest cities and by this I mean Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor, Ottawa and a few other places. In spite of these figures, funeral directors in all areas are prepared to conduct funerals at prices considerably below that figure. In fact, Mr. Chairman, a large percentage of the funerals conducted, especially in larger cities, will be welfare cases, Department of Veterans Affairs cases, Last Post and Department of National Defence funerals. All are conducted at a price well below the actual cost. I can assure the hon. members of this House that all funeral directors in this province will, in the course of the year, conduct one or more cases entirely on charity. No funeral director will turn down a call because no money is available to cover the funeral expenses.

Just a word, Mr. Chairman, on the board of administration. This is really what interests the hon. Minister. A committee of this board is now at work, and I am sure that a report will be forwarded to the hon. Minister in the next few weeks, but perhaps not in time to make any changes to the Act.

Now in closing, Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to read this comment from a pastor at the Forest Avenue Church, the Rev. Donald R. Gibson of Hainesville, Ohio:

Those who are tempted to jump aboard the Jessica Mitford bandwagon should beware.

This Jessica Mitford is the lady who published the book that was mentioned by the hon. member for York South. I continue:

Look around at our churches. Are we not also victims of wall-to-wall carpeting, the colonial façade, the crystal chandelier? Billy Sunday was able to convert his thousands in ugly wooden tabernacles. Billy Graham converts his in the expensive Los Angeles Coliseum. Is a funeral chapel different from the church in this respect? We say that the beauty of the sanctuary promotes the proper atmosphere for worship. Does this not sound like the funeral director when he claims that the beauty of the slumber room promotes the proper atmosphere for grief therapy? The modern church building is a far cry from the banks of the river Jordan and the modern church language is hardly that found in the Bible. Do we need to go back to the primitive funeral any more than we need to go back to the primitive church? The American way of death is not different from the American way of life.

And I could add, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian way of life. I continue:

It may be wrong for us to live in an affluent, status-seeking society but right or wrong, we do. Our homes, our automobiles and even our striped toothpaste reflect it. Some of us are frustrated by our inability to cope with the tragedy of materialism which abounds on every side. But, is it right or even expedient to treat one small symptom while contributing to the total disease? Should we attempt to cut off the hand when the trouble is in the heart? Perhaps we ought to concentrate on how our people could think for themselves. After prayerfully considering their own viewpoints and problems they choose the elaborate funeral. Maybe they know best. On the other hand there are those who are more at home with simpler things. Some people prefer the High Mass of the liturgical cathedral whereas others find spiritual satisfaction in the little church in the country. Are we prepared to decide this issue for all the people all the time? Beware lest the author of the American Way of Death becomes the author of the American Way of Worship. Heaven help us.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I was very interested to hear the remarks of the hon. member for St. George. The hon. member takes the role, Mr. Chairman, that he so often has taken in this House before. A plague on the Opposition because they criticize and because they make no suggestions, but let me criticize because that is fine. We welcome criticism from the hon. member for St. George, and in saying what he did he made a lot of sense. He does not really need to apologize if he is sincere in his remarks to the hon. Minister, because it is his job as an hon. member of this House if he finds something wrong to get up and talk about it. I do not think he really softens the blow of the criticism of the hon. Minister by throwing a few barbs over to this side of the House.

Be that as it may, Mr. Chairman, the fact remains that there is a serious hospital shortage and a hospital emergency in Metropolitan Toronto. Anyone who reads the Toronto papers at all in these matters cannot have escaped noticing the comments that have been contained in all of the newspapers. The Toronto Telegram, for instance, talks about the hospital emergency in an editorial in July.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

I do not wish you to cut off the remarks of the hon. member for Downsview in view of the fact that it was the hon. member for St. George who started the whole out-of-order discussion in my opinion.

I am not going to suggest now that he should have the privilege and the hon. member for Downsview should not. But after the hon. member for Downsview has completed his remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate your direction as to whether or not we are to discuss matters relating to hospitals, nursing supply and ancillary matters under this vote or under the last vote of the estimates, because if we are going to have the discussion of it now, then the other hon. members should know about it.

The rest of us have been acting on the assumption that after the three preliminary speeches were made last night, we were to get down to the details of the first vote and not to deal with matters that come under other votes. So I would appreciate it, sir, for the guidance of at least some hon. members of the House, if you would give us a direction on this matter after the hon. member for Downsview has completed his remarks.

Mr. Chairman: Since we have gone off the usual form this morning, I would ask the member for Downsview to complete his remarks and then we will revert to the items under this vote.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, does that cut off others that you allowed last night?

An hon. member: He did not hear you?

Mr. Troy: It does not make any difference. They may not want to get it in later, they may want to get it in now.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, I tried to have this established last night when we got off on a tangent when discussing vote 701. It was apparently accepted by the House at that time that if the debate was started it could go on. It would be very helpful to me, sir, in piloting these estimates, if we could retain them in the proper niche that has been suggested by the hon. member for Woodbine.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to comment on the ruling. I will abide by what you say, sir.

The hospital emergency, as I say, has been commented on in all of our daily newspapers, commented upon substantially editorially.

The editorials came in this substantial number following the report of the survey and each of the newspapers saw fit to comment very strongly in connection with this very serious situation. As I say, the Toronto Telegram said in an editorial:

This is a situation that demands active recognition by municipal, provincial and federal governments.

The hon. member for St. George really did not make any new discovery, nor need he have any doubt that there is a surplus of hospital beds in Sunnybrook. This has been carefully documented in this report. There were references in the Glassco report made to the federal government that this is in fact so. In fact, if the hon. member for St. George had been doing his homework, he would have noticed that there has been reference to this made in the House of Commons in just the last couple of days, and the hon. Minister responsible in that House says he is taking the matter under consideration.

But I do agree with the hon. member for St. George and I think he makes an excellent point that since this fact has been brought forward and carefully documented—it is not rumour, as he suggests, it is fact—first the hon. Minister must be aware of it, and the hon. Minister should have been beating on the doors of Ottawa trying to do something about the situation.

We have heard nothing about the reaction of the hon. Minister in this regard. We have heard nothing about whether or not the hon. Minister has made representations to Ottawa. We have heard nothing at all about conversations or exchange of correspondence between this hon. Minister and Mr. Teillet, the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs under whose charge I believe these veterans hospitals come. I would think if this hon. Minister were alert, this is the sort of thing he would have been doing. To reply again to the apparent criticism of the hon. member for St. George, this is constructive. This would produce some more hospital beds if there was some initiative lying in the hands of the responsible Ontario Minister.

The Telegram writes another editorial, saying, "Give us our need," and again refers to the hospital shortage in Metropolitan Toronto. A third editorial written by the Telegram on July 8, 1963, called, "The emergency," makes some very flattering references to the hon. Minister so I will read it. It says:

An irrelevant political note is introduced by the Health Minister, Dr. Dymond, into the question of the hospital bed shortage in Metropolitan Toronto.

This is a newspaper that really is not too well known for its violent criticism of this government, but it does take this hon. Minister to task and I think quite properly.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: You think that is flattery!

Mr. Singer: Well, I am sure that the hon. Minister in his careful use of sarcasm will appreciate, perhaps, or understand—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am not—

Mr. Singer: —its use by other hon. members of this House. The Telegram goes on to say:

This situation demands more from Dr. Dymond than the suggestion that the responsibility rests on Metro. It does, but not entirely. Metro council has an obligation, definitely, to reverse its policy against contributing toward hospital construction.

Metropolitan Toronto has done this; it has accepted this responsibility. But the editorial goes on to say:

So should Dr. Dymond. He is the Health Minister of Ontario and the survey on hospital accommodation in this area by a responsible committee must—

Well, the Telegram uses "must", the word is must, and I think it would be the view of most people in Ontario, I think it would be the view even of the hon. member for St. George that the hon. Minister of Health must concern himself with this report and with this problem.

The findings of the committee warrant something more than a nonchalant statement placing the blame on Metro for the deficiency of an imperative service to the health of the community. And the hon. Minister said this last year when he brought this up in his estimates: "There are not enough hospital beds in Metro. It is the fault of Metro."

Those were the words of the hon. Minister and apparently there has been very little done to change his approach to this problem since he spoke in these debates a year ago. It is intolerable that the people of this area should be second-class citizens where hospital service is concerned.

The Telegram puts it to the hon. Minister of Health that:

The situation is such that with or without Metro initiative—and Metro's executive committee would be inexcusably negligent if it failed to exert itself—leadership is expected from Dr. Dymond.

Surely this is a most logical comment to be made by a Metropolitan newspaper and surely this should have shocked the hon. Minister into action if nothing that we said in his estimates a year ago were able to do it.

The least to be expected from Dr. Dymond is a meeting of the Health Minister, the executive committee of Metro and the Ontario Hospital Services Commission to concert plans to meet the emergency.

As I say, and certainly as the hon. member for St. George perhaps does not say as bluntly but this is the purpose of his remarks this morning, there has to be some leadership from the hon. Minister of Health in providing more hospital beds in Metropolitan Toronto and that leadership just has not been given.

The Toronto Daily Star writes an editorial called, "No beds for the sick," along exactly the same theme. It quotes from the report that the hon. member for Scarborough West referred to last evening. Today, the Metro area is short 2,360 active treatment beds, mainly in the suburbs. By 1970, even if the present expansion plans are carried out, there will still be a shortage of 1,171 beds. There is criticism again of Metro council's failure to contribute, but as I say, that has been remedied now. The Star goes on to say: "The major financial responsibility rests with the provincial government."

It was fine to hear from the hon. member for Forest Hill the suggestions he made in his remarks in the Throne Speech debate. I commended him for those remarks before and I do again, but there has to be leadership and initiative taken by the government, and the government has shown none in this field at all and it is a disgrace.

The major financial responsibility rests with the provincial government, and the provincial government should provide leadership.

The Toronto Globe and Mail, in an editorial on Friday, July 5, says exactly the same thing in a longer and more thorough fashion. One of the remarks they make deals with the proposal for the use of beds in Sunnybrook and points out it was strongly recommended by the Glassco commission. It is a disgrace across this country that beds in such hospitals sit empty while sick people are denied care.

Not all of the blame lies with the hon. Minister. Perhaps a little of the blame lies up in Ottawa, but surely the hon. Minister should be beating on the doors of the responsible people up in Ottawa and trying to produce some reaction.

The hon. member for St. George was complaining that there were no constructive suggestions coming forth, and I wonder if he has had occasion to examine the speech made by Dr. Bernard L. P. Brosseau, whose title, apparently, is that of commissioner of hospitals within the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. He is a gentleman who, I think, would be well known to the hon. Minister. He spoke to the Ontario Hospital Association on October 28 and gave a speech full of constructive suggestions.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: I am not talking about the lack of constructive suggestions; I am talking about the lack of constructive suggestions from over there. That is all.

Mr. Singer: Well, this is not untypical of the hon. member for St. George; he wants to have both sides of the coin at the same time.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): So does the hon. member.

Mr. Singer: It is nice to have him try to keep in with the Cabinet Ministers. That is entirely up to him; his relationships with them is really no concern of ours.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: The point is: If we welcome the criticism of the hon. member for St. George, we discard all of the nonsense he threw in, excess verbiage, to better reinstate himself with this Cabinet member—but let us get on with the problem. He recognizes it, we recognize it, the hon. member for Scarborough West recognizes it, in fact almost everybody in the House recognizes it except the hon. Minister of Health. This is where the problem belongs and this where we need the action from.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Meanwhile, back at the convention of the Ontario Hospital Association, the good doctor said:

The past system of hospitals is no longer suited to present-day needs and to present-day economics. This is evidenced by the uneven distribution of beds and the too frequent misuse of existing facilities resulting from the lack of integrated planning for all types of beds and from plans based solely on local considerations.

I am not going to read the whole of the report of his speech, but there are certain paragraphs here that I think are of the utmost importance.

He says that lack of regional planning has resulted in an uneven distribution of beds, with some over-bedded areas, and the resultant over-utilization caused by demand and not need is a heavy burden on the taxpayer. Other areas have a serious bed shortage. It is estimated by the commission that the hospital needs of the population of Ontario can be met by a formula providing 6.25 beds per 1,000 population. There are, at this time, 6.4 beds per 1,000 in the province, but they are improperly distributed, as the hon. Minister made reference last evening.

He says that we must look at some of the main obstacles that must be overcome before a regional system of planning could be instituted; and this is the main point of his remarks: that there should be regional planning of hospitals, directed by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, supervised and instructed by the hon. Minister of Health and by the government of Ontario. This is where the leadership should come, and this is the field in which direction should be given, and is not being given now.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is the leadership Dr. Brosseau is giving.

Mr. Singer: Well, it is rather strange. I am pleased to hear the remarks of the hon. Minister.

If Dr. Brosseau is giving this leadership, then why has the Ontario Hospital Services Commission not seen fit to translate his suggestions into action, and why has the hon. Minister of Health not been putting forward the same sort of ideas? Why is not this being done?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is being done.

Mr. Singer: Oh, Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the hon. Minister just are childish.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, we say it is wrong—

Mr. Singer: It is not what we say is wrong.

Hon. Mr. Dymond:—according to the hon. member.

Mr. Singer: Every one of the Metropolitan newspapers wrong? Is the report prepared wrong? Are all of these criticisms wrong, and only our Matt is right? Surely the whole world is not out of step with Matt.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh, the hon. member's speech—

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): The gospel according to St. Matthew.

Mr. Singer: The situation—I apologize, Mr. Chairman, I should not have been referring to the hon. Minister in this personal way and I retract those remarks. But the suggestion must be made, the statement must be made. All of this criticism just is not made out of whole cloth. There must be some basis for it.

Even the hon. Minister's colleague, the hon. member for St. George, this morning was talking about the hospital crisis in Metropolitan Toronto. And it is not just going to disappear by the hon. Minister saying it is not there. Dr. Brosseau provides good suggestions, and I am disappointed that Dr. Brosseau's suggestions are not given more action, rather than saying this is the type of leadership that is being provided. Leadership, nonsense!

Dr. Brosseau says:

I think we should now look at some of the main obstacles that must be overcome before a regional system of planning can be instituted. A regional system will infringe on hospital autonomy.

There is some question as to how much hospital autonomy exists. Later on, perhaps under the last vote, we will go into that a little more thoroughly.

It is possible that a percentage of the medical profession will not look favourably upon a system which undoubtedly will reduce the overall number of hospitals and cause some inconvenience to the profession. The hon. Minister rose very quickly to defend his profession last evening, and I would like to hear his comments in connection with that remark by Dr. Brosseau.

Every community would like its own hospital; a hospital enhances local prestige. The local community will have a further interest in sponsoring a hospital, because today hospitals are big business.

And this is a very interesting remark too.

Political pressures cannot be ignored. A new hospital will get as many votes as a new road or a new bridge.

I would like to hear what the hon. Minister says about these things.

Are these ideas holding back regional planning? Dr. Brosseau thinks so. He makes a well reasoned argument, and he has pretty well convinced me that what he says is correct:

Regional planning, if it is to be effective, must have a degree of authority commensurate with its responsibility. The central planning agency may acquire this authority either by legislative means—and there is only one place, Mr. Chairman, where legislative means can be effected, that is through the efforts of this Chamber:

—either by legislative means or simply by commanding sufficient respect from individual hospitals, local planning boards and hospital organizations so that its decisions will be accepted as final. The second alternative will undoubtedly appeal to most—

Well, it may be appealing but it is not working. The doctor goes on to say:

I do not believe that such an organization can be assembled and provided with necessary financial support except through government sponsorship. Furthermore, the responsibility for developing a balanced and integrated system of hospitals has already been given to the government through the appropriate agency and with the necessary legislation.

Without co-operation amongst hospitals, and the voluntary surrender of some degree of autonomy to an agency of their choice composed of hospital trustees, community representatives and representatives of local government, regional planning and a system of voluntary hospitals cannot be reconciled with the only alternative, which would be direction and control from a central authority. Such an alternative will inevitably lead to the gradual disintegration of our voluntary system and to its replacement by a state-operated system of hospitals.

He concludes in this way:

I would like to suggest that a reasonable compromise can be achieved. The key to such a system rests with you.

That is for the audience he is talking to—the convention of the Ontario Hospital Association.

Is the local community hospital prepared to submit its plans for expansion or construction of a hospital to a local planning group? Is the local group prepared to submit its recommendation to an area or regional planning group? And is the regional group prepared to submit its recommendations to a central agency? Are hospitals willing to undertake co-operative planning and are these various groups willing to abide by the decisions rendered at the various levels of planning and accept the final decision of a central agency? If the answer is yes, then we can have a fine system of hospitals. If the answer is no, then we can have continued chaos.

And finally, in connection with Dr. Brosseau's speech, there was a very fine editorial which appeared in the Globe and Mail at the same time. Just a few of the remarks it gave were these:

Planning must be on a regional basis, the region being large enough to support the variety and quality of hospitals.

As Dr. Brosseau points out, such a reorganization will meet opposition on many grounds. Some of those grounds I have already outlined. Finally, in offering this view to the hospital association, he added a stinger:

Regionalization is inevitable so there is considerable urgency to organize now and devise an acceptable voluntary system if we are to avoid the imposition of a system which eventually would lead to a state-controlled organization.

Mr. Chairman, no one in this House can deny, least of all the hon. Minister of Health, that our hospital accommodation situation has reached the crisis of a fantastic emergency. I do not think anyone can really deny that we have been lacking in leadership from government, from the hon. Minister of Health, from his department and from the Ontario Hospital Services Commission in providing a solution to this. This is what the people of Ontario need. This is what the people of Ontario demand, and it is high time this government got down to its business and put the hon. Minister of Health in the position where he is doing something about this problem other than making great speeches and saying: "We are providing leadership because our Dr. Brosseau has made a speech, which we have never implemented."

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I have a question on item 18: How many medical undergraduates are there now, including undergraduates in psychiatry and dentistry? And on their graduation from the medical school or dental college what assurance have we that these undergraduates will work in certain areas in Ontario? Item 18.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, there are 483 doctors in the graduating classes of our medical schools for this year. There are 94 dental hygienists and 120 dentists in the graduating year.

Mr. Troy: Of those undergraduates in the course of psychiatry, how many now are receiving bursaries?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Every undergraduate doctor has to take psychiatry.

Mr. Troy: Pardon me. Post-graduate?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Twenty-five in the basic course in psychiatry.

Mr. Troy: What is the bursary these post-graduates get annually?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In excess of $5,000 per year.

Mr. Troy: How many of these, then, do you get in your Ontario hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: All under bursary arrangements have to give us a return of service; a year for every year of bursary support they receive.

Mr. Troy: So then you would get five years. Since you have so many graduates, or at least post-graduates, why then is there such a scarcity of psychiatrists in Ontario hospitals? The Ontario Hospital in North Bay has to, in fact—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, once again I wonder if this could come up under the mental health item? We are getting completely off the track. This item 18 has nothing to do with bursaries for psychiatry. This is for undergraduates in general medicine and dentistry.

Mr. Troy: Can you direct these undergraduates then to any section of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Any section where there is need for a general practitioner. This is in the general practice of medicine and dentistry.

Mr. Troy: Or a dentist?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Anywhere.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I have a question under item 4. In view of the articles in the press and the report tabled by the Surgeon-General of the United States regarding the adverse effects caused by smoking, does the hon. Minister have any plan of research in this field?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In which particular field?

Mr. Spence: In regard to the adverse effects caused by smoking.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, this is a joint effort between the provincial governments and the government of Canada. We are adhering strictly to this method because we believe that this should be on a national basis. We do not support those provinces which have elected to go on their own on programmes that are personally directed by the province. We agreed on that at the conference when all Ministers or representatives of all departments of health were present, along with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that this would be on a co-operative federal-provincial basis. Ontario intends to stick to that method.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Chairman, I cannot accept the prevalent idea at this point that the shortage of hospital facilities is confined to Metropolitan Toronto. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Health a question: Mr. Chairman, is it not true that the large hospital schools for retarded children in Ontario are overcrowded far beyond normal capacity?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is the wrong item, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Farquhar: To the point of not being able to accept children at the extreme levels of physical and mental retardation?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, once again may I ask that we stick to the items under consideration? We are roaming the broad prairies once again. That will come up under mental health.

Mr. Farquhar: Will the hon. Minister not accept a question at this point?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Not, Mr. Chairman, until it comes up under its proper item, division of mental health.

Mr. Farquhar: This is a question under mental health, sir.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We are not on that vote at the present time.

Mr. A. V. Walker (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask, if I might, a question which I believe comes under item 35. If I am out of order, I would be quite happy to sit down.

I have a clipping here which I took out of the Toronto Globe and Mail of February 1 and it deals with a very, very serious matter which, I believe, would come under this item. It deals with the matter of a death in a hospital in Windsor and the death was, shall I say, to a degree, handled—it should have been handled, possibly—by the cancer clinic in Windsor, and I note that the coroner's jury, in this item, suggested that the charter for this institution should be revoked. I think that this type of thing is possibly just as serious as any item that has been mentioned by the hon. members in this discussion as they have gone from, shall I say, the cradle to the grave in their discussions. I would certainly like to have the hon. Minister give us some kind of an outline as to whether or not The Department of Health approves of these clinics, whether or not they are licensed by The Department of Health and anything else that he can tell us that is going to help the people of this province to be, shall I say, rescued from this type of threat.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is a very good question—a very important matter. First of all, the province of Ontario has consistently refused to charter this organization. The history of this organization goes back a very long way. The principal has been dead now for some years, but the clinic continues. When Ontario refused a charter, the group, under the leadership of the late Dr. Hett, applied for, and was granted, a federal charter. The province, at the time, was not consulted, as far as I can ascertain from the records, although again I gather from the records that The Department of Health of this province objected to the issuance of a charter. When a charter for such an organization is sought, the Provincial Secretary's branch usually asks us if we have any objection to the issuing of a charter. It is then possible to put our views on record.

On December 30, 1959, I received a letter in answer to a letter which I sent to the then Secretary of State asking that the charter be withdrawn because the commission for the investigation of cancer remedies on October 16 recommended to me that this charter should be withdrawn. Going into its history and finding that this was a federally chartered organization, I wrote to the then Secretary of State, and he sent me a five-page letter on December 30, 1959, which said, in effect, that they could not, on my request, withdraw the charter.

This charter should have been cancelled automatically on the death of Dr. Hett, because I do not believe that treatment of this kind should be given except under the direct supervision of a doctor. I find that no doctor, whose name, even by implication, is associated with it, will accept the responsibility for treatment given in the clinic.

The commission for the investigation of cancer remedies in the province of Ontario investigated this and its conclusion was that while it believed the treatment was harmless, it was also of the opinion that no good could flow from its use. I, once again, in view of this jury's recommendation, asked the Secretary of State to recommend revocation of this charter, but I must admit to the House that I am rather pessimistic, in view of our past experience, that he will comply with my request.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back to number 18 again for a minute. The hon. Minister gave the figure, I believe, that there were 483 doctors—graduates in the medical profession last year across Canada. Now—

In Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In Ontario.

Mr. Whicher: I do not think this figure means too much to us because the fact is that across the province of Ontario in many areas there is a great shortage of members of the medical profession and members of the dental profession.

In rural Ontario there are many places where there simply are not enough doctors and not enough dentists. I am wondering if enough is being done, if we have enough schools to graduate these medical and dental people whom we are certainly going to need in the future. I suggest that from all the reading that I have been able to do that such is not the case.

The pamphlet, "Supply and demand in university graduates," put out by the National Employment Service, points out, for example, under dentistry: The need for dentists continues to be great.

In the article, it goes on to show that at the present time there is no possible chance to pull the supply up equal to the demand in the immediate future. It suggests that perhaps not enough is being done to see that there are enough schools for the training of dentists. It points out that at the present time there are six Canadian universities now operating programmes leading to degrees in dentistry and at the beginning of 1964 the University of British Columbia will offer an undergraduate dental programme.

Mr. Chairman, I would say that in my opinion, and I would be interested in having the hon. Minister's opinion, that this is simply not enough, these figures that are given by the hon. Minister of Health. I know that they are correct. But when he says that there are 483 medical students graduating this year or last year, let us not forget that there were, I believe, 162 medical doctors who left Canada last year for the United States or for other countries.

From the information that I have received there are, I believe, 12 medical schools in Canada, and these 162 who left this country were the numbers of three medical schools. In fact, about 25 per cent of the graduates were leaving Canada for other lands, mostly to the United States. There are many reasons for this, of course. One of them is the fact that doctors probably make more money in the United States, have probably a little better standard of living and probably may not have to work as hard. I do not know about that. I do know that doctors in rural Ontario today work exceptionally hard and I have been told by doctors who are there that if the opportunity presents itself they will only work for eight or ten months of the year because the rest of the money they make in the full 12 months goes for taxes to Ottawa and to the province of Ontario.

This, Mr. Chairman, emphasizes what I said in my criticism of the Budget, that when we get to a certain taxing point the goose is killed that lays the golden eggs. I suggest that there are many doctors in Canada and particularly in the province of Ontario, who are taking long holiday seasons in the south. As a consequence, people in the province of Ontario, and particularly rural Ontario, are suffering from the lack of medical and dental services.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the hon. Minister of Health, in co-operation with the hon. Minister of Education, should see that there are more schools being built for both the dental and medical professions. It is not good enough that in rural Ontario, in certain instances, doctors are simply not available. It is not uncommon, in the area which I represent, to wait six or eight months to get a dental appointment, and there are several towns in the area from which I come where there is simply not a dentist available. Perhaps there is only one doctor and if that doctor goes away there is no one to look after the needs of the people.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that The Department of Health has a responsibility to the people in this regard. We cannot blame the dental profession, for example, if there simply are not enough schools to train dentists. We cannot blame the medical profession if there are not enough schools to train doctors and we need them. Not only do we need them to look after the needs of our people, but quite frankly we need them to pay the taxes that are levied by the hon. Provincial Treasurer of this province (Mr. Allan), because the people who really make money in Ontario are the professional people and particularly those of the medical and dental professions.

I would be very interested to hear, Mr. Chairman, what the hon. Minister might say about the future needs of Ontario as far as these two professions are concerned.

I was interested in the hon. Minister's remark to the hon. member for Nipissing that those students who obtain bursaries pay it back in some form by service to the province from which they got the bursary. In other words, they may stay here for a year or two years after they graduate. I suggested in other times that perhaps medical and dental students and indeed, other professionals who go through university in this province at a great expense to the taxpayer, should probably be required to stay in this province for a certain period of time. I say, Mr. Chairman, that we cannot afford to do otherwise.

We have reached the point where taxes are at least a burden to all of the people and when we spend millions of dollars in graduating university people and then they turn around immediately and leave the province from which they have obtained this monetary help, leave immediately for Hawaii or for California to practise the profession that they have learned here in this province. I say that it is time we have to use at least a small stick and keep them in the place from which they got their education. It is most expensive to all the people of this province. I certainly was interested in the fact that those who obtain bursaries have stayed here for two or three years, whatever it may be, and I would be interested in having the hon. Minister say something about those who may not get a bursary but at least get thousands of dollars in direct taxes toward their education.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, first of all I must apologize to you. I gave the wrong figures just now relative to the number of graduating doctors. It was 303 from the Ontario universities. The 483 figure I gave you is the total numbers in the undergraduate course of dentistry, of which 120 should graduate this year, if they all pass their final examination.

I would point out, sir, that I would like that corrected in the record. I would point out that this flow of doctors—

Mr. Troy: Four hundred and eighty-three with bursaries?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No.

Mr. Troy: I asked the hon. Minister: With bursaries?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am coming to that now. First of all, I would like to point out that the flow of doctors away from Ontario is not all a one-way street; there is a two-way flow. I believe that we must be getting as many as we are losing from other countries, because of the fact that we are maintaining our present doctor/population ratio. I did state, in my opening observations, that we must provide a new health sciences centre, which is the new name now for medical and dental and paramedical training schools. We must provide one, beginning as soon as possible, if we are to maintain that ratio.

Again I have to point out to you, and I say this in all sincerity, that the ratio of doctor/population in Ontario is better than anywhere else in Canada. There are those who will say that it should be greater; it is, I believe, one to 800, or just under 900, population. The figure for Canada is roughly one to 1,000 population. Here again, Ontario is well favoured. But still we have this great problem of distribution, and I would like to know how we are going to, in a free society, tell people they must practise medicine in this area when we cannot tell the dairy man, "You must sell your milk in this area."

This is the impossible problem.

Mr. Whicher: Get twice as many doctors.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That would help a great deal. You cannot use twice as many doctors. And even in spite of that, the records are showing that the graduating doctors are remaining in the heavily built-up areas, near to the hospital facilities, and this is exactly what happens.

Mr. Whicher: I say, Mr. Chairman, that we could use twice as many doctors and dentists—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, we do not agree with that at all. We could use more dentists, but we certainly could not use twice as many doctors. This is ridiculous and extreme, Mr. Chairman. We could use more—and to that end planning is going forward as I stated. I outlined the plans that are underway in my opening remarks.

As far as getting doctors to go to places where the need is great, I think we have learned by experience already. Three years ago, this House supported me in a programme to provide bursaries of $1,000 per year for four years to undergraduate doctors—a total of $3,000, or $1,000 a year for the undergraduate training for three clinical years. The only condition we attached to it was that this was not repayable; this was an outright gift, provided they gave up a year-for-year return of service in an area where the need was great.

Mr. Chairman, I was given approval to set up 20 bursaries on an experimental basis—20 bursaries for medical students, ten bursaries each year for dental students. That would therefore mean this House has approved, in principle, of me providing by now 60 medical bursaries and 30 dental bursaries. Our figures—and this year is the best yet: A total of 18 dental students and 11 medical students.

Mr. Chairman, the cold fact of the matter is that money for education is apparently so easily obtained by students now that they can get it without strings being attached to it. Then our purpose would be defeated, because that was the only string we attached to it—and I say as one who has practised and would by choice again practice in a rural area—it is an essential part of a doctor's education to practise in an area at some distance from a hospital because then he has to develop his native ability. He has to develop a great sense of responsibility and an aptitude to deal with situations that arise in an emergency.

But here is the cold fact—the only thing we ask of the doctor or the dentist is that he go to a designated area. And he has a good deal of choice in it. The list is put before him, and, if he has a preference, we will allow him to exercise that preference with great flexibility.

This is the situation—they do not have to pay this money back. The same applies to the training of psychiatrists. The trouble is, the reason why we have not enough psychiatrists in Ontario hospitals is the very same reason why there are not enough psychiatrists anywhere in the world. There are not enough psychiatrists in any jurisdiction in the world that I know of.

We went to Europe some years ago, trying to recruit psychiatrists, and the first question I met every place I went was: Why are you coming here to take our psychiatrists away from us? We thought of going to your country to get them from you." There are not enough men going into psychiatry, and there are no women. This is the plain cold fact. Again we make it as attractive as possible; we give them generous bursaries; if they do not want a bursary we put them on staff, on salary, while they are getting their training, and again the condition attached is that there must be a repayment by a period of service. This is the reason—I forget the figure now—but the province of Ontario could use a sizeable number of additional psychiatrists in the general practice of psychiatry, whether it be private, institutional or the other various fields of it.

Mr. Whicher: While the hon. Minister admits that there is a shortage, I would like to point out to him that the shortage is much greater than he suggests.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: What is the use?

Mr. Whicher: In the economics and research branch of The Department of Labour in Ottawa—I shall quote about the dentists and leave the medical profession alone. According to them—this is dated 1961:

According to statements by the Canadian Dental Association there should be three times as many dentists in Canada as there are.

Mr. Chairman, the reason there are not more dentists is because there are simply not enough training facilities to train future dentists.

And in the booklet once more, under "Supply and demand of university graduates," it points out that the graduating class in dentistry in 1964 will be the same size as 1963. In other words, there is no improvement whatsoever.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that such men as the hon. Minister of Health for the province of Ontario have a responsibility to get training facilities for these professional men. I do not think it is good enough to say that we are doing better in Ontario than we are in other parts of Canada; in other parts of Canada they are not doing too well either. We are responsible for this jurisdiction, and in rural Ontario the lack of dentists and medical men is ridiculous.

The hon. Minister pointed out that they went to Europe, I think, to try to get psychiatrists last year, or several years ago—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Four years ago.

Mr. Whicher: I wonder what results the hon. Minister has had in getting medical men from Europe? And I wonder whether the medical profession has accepted these medical men from Europe, because I would like to quote once more on the migration of professional workers into and out of Canada. It says this:

The attitude of the professional association—and I am talking about the medical association:

—its entry standards, and the extent of its legal control over the practice of the profession, have also played an important role in determining the pattern of immigration of professionals [that is the medical profession] into Canada.

The federal Department of Citizenship and Immigration has given careful consideration to this problem. Quoting from one of its recently released reports:

If the newly landed immigrant has had a professional training, he may not always be permitted to start at the lowest level of his profession. Much is dependent on the rate of change of attitude on the part of his professional association. Graduate medical doctors belonging to refugee groups have been known to accept work as orderlies, etc., while waiting for an enabling certificate.

I do not, of course, know anything about how the medical profession controls people coming into Canada. Perhaps they have a right and an obligation to control them to some extent. But the thing is that when we are lacking, definitely lacking, in medical people in Ontario, and particularly rural Ontario, I suggest that the medical association and the hon. Minister of Health should co-operate with these people from other lands, professional people who wish to come into Ontario and to set up practice here.

After all, as a layman I say this, and as a doctor the hon. Minister of Health will probably criticize it, most accurately, but as a layman, I could never see the difference when you are cutting out an appendix whether you were a German doctor or whether you were a Canadian doctor.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: There is the problem.

Mr. Whicher: And it seems to me that you can handle a knife or a scalpel, or whatever you may call it, equally as well, graduating from the University of Berlin, as you could from the University of Toronto. However, the hon. Minister may have an answer for this, but the fact is that we have not got enough medical men in Ontario and we as taxpayers in Ontario and representatives of our constituents are expected to do something about it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think that this should be made eminently clear. I think this should be understood fully. First of all, the medical association has nothing to do with the immigration of doctors. The College of Physicians and Surgeons, over 100 years ago, was charged with the responsibility of maintaining a high standard of medical education. This is its responsibility. It sets the standards of entry into our medical schools. It sets the minimum standard curriculum, it sets the licensing and registration regulations and it is in charge of discipline. This is its responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, I think it should also be made eminently clear that because a man has "Doctor" in front of his name or has a great and imposing array of letters after his name, that does not make it right that he should be let loose on the public of Ontario. To say that a doctor, because he graduated from some university, is a doctor in his own land, he should be allowed to practise medicine in Ontario, is equally wrong, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Bruce chose a bad comparison. Without knowing for certain, a doctor graduating from the University of Berlin, if such an institution exists, I am quite certain would have no difficulty in getting his enabling certificate in Ontario. But the qualification, Mr. Chairman, is that the doctor coming into Ontario to practise medicine in Ontario, must pass exactly the same examinations as I have to pass, and every other doctor, a native of Canada or otherwise, if he is going to practise medicine here. This is only right and proper.

A bad doctor is not better than nothing at all. Let me make that eminently clear. And again to use the unfortunate example that my hon. friend used, any doctor can handle a scalpel, yes he can handle a scalpel, but where he directs that scalpel, of course, is an entirely different thing, and taking out your appendix is not just like cutting your toenails. I can tell you very certainly that one can die very readily from bad surgery if the doctor does not know his anatomy and does not know what he is doing, what he is looking for and what he is taking out. I think that we need to get this matter in proper perspective. Doctors are not being kept out of Ontario for any other reason except for the standard of their training and their ability to practise medicine according to our standards, and this, I think will have to be the criteria so long as the college is charged with this responsibility.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is some move afoot that a qualified doctor, say, coming from Germany, must become a Canadian citizen before he can take up the profession of medicine in Ontario. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I believe there is. Not a German doctor, any doctor, any of them coming into Canada.

Mr. Whicher: Does the hon. Minister agree with that? Does he approve of that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I certainly do. I do not see why we should give him his training and establish his prestige that will attach to his licence in Ontario, so that he can go somewhere else. We find that this has happened.

Mr. Whicher: Would they have to have a five-year waiting period, then, before they could practise?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Those for whom five years is necessary. First of all, three years' training in a hospital is necessary. Three years' internship is a necessity before he can practise anyway, so that is three years taken off.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I consider this to be an astonishing fact. Here we are in the province of Ontario suffering from the lack of medical doctors and then the hon. Minister of Health says that a fully qualified medical man from any country in the world must be a Canadian citizen and wait five years before he can help us in Ontario. I think this is a terrible situation. Does that mean that a man coming from Italy, who is a plasterer, would have to wait five years before he could start plastering walls; a nurse from England would have to wait five years before she could start practising her profession here? Does it mean that a medical doctor that is emigrating from Ontario and going to California would have to be five years down there before he—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, he will.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, I simply do not believe it, because I know doctors who have left Ontario in the last year, who are now practising in California and who are still Canadian citizens. We need these doctors here, and I do not give a rip whether they are Germans or Italians or whatever they are, as long as they know their business. This is absolute discrimination against medical people from across the world.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend is getting tremendously exercised and I am afraid for his blood pressure, but I want to point this out—

Mr. Whicher: There is not a doctor here who could look after me if I did have a heart attack.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, we would even look after the hon. member. Mr. Chairman, I want to point out that before a doctor is allowed to go into private practice, his services are not excluded from the people. There are many, many salaried positions, many, many institutional positions as a doctor, where he can practise his skills and in these he is perfectly at liberty to practise. His abilities and his skills are available to the Ontario people while he is awaiting citizenship. British people from Commonwealth countries, of course, do not have to wait five years to get their citizenship and as soon as the doctor can get his enabling certificate and pass his examinations, he will be allowed to practise medicine.

Mr. Whicher: But, Mr. Chairman, the point is that nobody is going to immigrate into Canada if they have to wait five years.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Again, Mr. Chairman, I have to point out that the records completely deny that. We have more applications by doctors to come into Canada than can come, because their qualifications just will not stand up.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, may I ask this question: Is it true that up until now a doctor could come in from another land, qualify here by taking the examination, and then become a practising physician in Ontario without becoming a Canadian citizen? Has that been true up until now?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, may I crave the indulgence of the House to delay this answer until Monday so that I may get the up-to-date and accurate information concerning this matter?

Mr. T. L. Wells (Scarborough North): Mr. Chairman, I assume that this comes under this vote. I would like to raise a question concerning a very small but particularly concerned group in Metropolitan Toronto, a group that is particularly, I think, overlooked. It is the young adults who are suffering from cerebral palsy. These are the ones who are permanently disabled and require full-time institutional care. Up until a short time ago, there was an institution in Thornhill that was accepting these people, but I am informed that at the present time there are no facilities available for these young adults. I wonder if the hon. Minister has given this any consideration and could tell us about this problem.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is a very difficult matter and one that has been under our consideration for some time. I think I reported in the House last year when someone asked a similar question that I personally had made many efforts to try to encourage some board or organization in the establishment of such a centre. Co-incidentally, just a very short time ago I learned that the Crippled Children's Society has now developed an interest in this area and we are in active consultation with it at the present time while it is seeking suitable property. It would be my hope that before another year rolls around, such an institution will be provided. There is available fairly substantial government support for this sort of thing, but I have never felt that the government should get into the business of establishing and operating such an institution.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, for the five years that I have been in this House I have asked the hon. Minister if rules or regulations were going to be established concerning ambulance operators. Each of the years the hon. Minister has said he is studying the question and shortly would come up with some type of regulation.

Is the hon. Minister ready at this time to come through with regulations concerning ambulance operators?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I have to refute the statement that I said we were about ready to come up with some regulations. At no time have I ever stated that I was ready to come up with regulations.

I have to report now, sir, that this matter is in the hands of the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) since it was referred to him, as so many things are. His committee, I understand, is working on it.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, then I have another question. In looking through the public accounts we see large amounts of equipment purchased by the various hospitals throughout the province. What is the department's policy concerning the purchase of the equipment? Is it buy Canadian, buy Ontario, or is it buy wherever possible?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Dependent upon price and quality, the lowest tender or the lowest bid is usually accepted. A certain amount of leeway is allowed for Canadian and Ontario purchases. But we believe in the government policy of buying in Canada, buying Canadian-made wherever possible, buying Ontario-made where it is of comparable quality and competitive price; and if we cannot get it then, or if there is such a great difference in the quality or price, we have to buy it from whatever source we can get it.

Mr. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have two other questions that I would like to ask of the hon. Minister. I notice the grants in this department are about the same as they have been in the past. Does the hon. Minister require the various associations to which he makes grants to provide him with a financial statement as to whether they need these grants or not? Possibly the grants are simply being given to them and the funds are simply a nice little bit of extra money provided. To me it would seem logical that any association wishing a grant should show need for the grant before the grant is made.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, every association, everybody to whom we give grants through this department, must submit a financial statement each year before the budget is proposed. They must also show how they have expended their last year's amount. Our great difficulty, sir, is withstanding their very pitiful and heartrending pleas for more money. There is not one of these organizations which, according to their financial status, cannot justify the request for further funds. But we feel that The Department of Health is giving as much out of its budget as it can to this purpose.

Mr. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, one other question. Back in the city of Windsor about eight months ago there was a fatal accident in one of the operating rooms of a hospital. As a result of that does the government intend to come down with possibly more rigid safety regulations concerning the use of gases in hospital operating rooms, or are they satisfied with the procedures as are now followed by the anaesthetist and those who administer the various types of gases to patients?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the regulations, of course, are not regulations of The Department of Health. They are of the fire marshal's branch and we are never satisfied with them because accidents of this kind do, from time to time, occur. The wonder to me is that they are so few. This does not lessen our concern about them, and very thorough studies following such accidents are conducted, I understand, by the fire marshal's department. If there has been any lack of rigidity in regulations, then the fire marshal's branch brings down more rigid, or it is hoped, better functioning regulations.

The human factor again comes into this matter. But I can assure the hon. member that the anaesthetists are naturally going to take all possible precautions, if for no other than selfish reasons, because in an explosion they are very vulnerable. I can say that while we are never satisfied we are constantly watching to see that the most rigid restrictions possible are enforced for the control of explosive materials of this nature.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, has the department learned anything as a result of the explosion in that Windsor hospital; information that could be relayed to other hospitals, and in that way be to the advantage of all operating room procedures? Have we learned anything from that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, all information derived and all lessons pointed out from these matters are turned over to the commission, which in turn advises the hospitals under its control as an educational programme in the hope and belief that other hospitals where such conditions exist will be corrected. May I state again at this point that these matters do not come under this vote. We are getting off the track again.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, one other question. Are there any more thalidomide cases coming to the fore?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer, Mr. Chairman, is no. Two were brought here because the parents moved from some other jurisdiction into the province. We have 25 now as against 23 a year ago. Since thalidomide was outlawed, we would not anticipate that there will be any more thalidomide babies.

Mr. Newman: Thank you.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there are two items that have been raised in the discussion of vote 701 which I think have not been adequately disposed of as yet. I would like to make some reference to both of them if I may.

First of all, with regard to the question of doctor supply, I think the answers of the hon. Minister have been totally unsatisfactory. Unfortunately, the medical profession seems to regard itself about on the same level as God. The hon. Minister, being a member of that profession, betrays many of the complacent attitudes of the profession and the bald assumption that whatever they do is right and nobody should ever have the right to criticize them.

Now, I am going to suggest to him that the College of Physicians and Surgeons has not been discharging its public responsibility with regard to the control of the supply of medical doctors in this province. It has, to an important degree, been operating a guild monopoly. I am not suggesting that the College of Physicians and Surgeons, or some similarly well qualified body having the confidence of the profession, should not be in charge of the licensing and training of doctors. I think that is obviously essential. But I think it is also essential that they should discharge their duties with no other consideration in mind than the public interests. The protection of the economic position of the profession now operating here should not be a consideration at all, and they should not be permitted to exercise it.

The hon. Minister said, and he is right, that it is important to make sure that we have only doctors who are qualified in this province. The report, incidentally, of Dr. Clute, that was issued some time ago, would indicate that there are quite a few not emanating from foreign countries whose qualifications might be questioned. However, that is not the point in which I am interested. I am more interested in the use of power by the medical profession—power bestowed upon it by the public—to restrict the supply of doctors unnecessarily. There is absolutely nothing in Canadian citizenship that gives a person any competence whatever in the practice of medicine. I am a Canadian citizen. I do not have any competence in that field whatever.

It is a completely unnecessary and deliberately restrictive requirement to say that a medical man, who is fully qualified in the medical field, must nevertheless be a Canadian citizen before he can engage in the private practice of medicine in this province. There is no justification for that at all. What it means, as the hon. member for Bruce has pointed out, is that doctors from any European country cannot become fully licensed until they have been here five years because they cannot become citizens until they have been here five years. That restriction is quite unjustified and should not be permitted. If the College of Physicians and Surgeons insists on retaining it, then some steps should be made to remove it.

Secondly, there is no evidence that I know of to indicate that doctors coming from countries or jurisdictions with which the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons have reciprocity are necessarily better qualified than those coming from other jurisdictions. I would like to find out from the hon. Minister, if he has the information, the number of jurisdictions with which the college has reciprocity. This is a deal among doctors. It has nothing to do with one's qualifications to practise medicine. A doctor could be fully trained, fully competent, but could suffer disadvantages.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This information will be given to the House the first of the week.

Mr. Bryden: The information on the number of jurisdictions upon which there is reciprocity, or what? Well, we have enough information now to indicate that something should be done about it. However, I am quite willing to leave it until the first of the week, if that is what the hon. Minister would prefer.

I would like now, Mr. Chairman, to revert to a matter that was raised by the hon. member for Kent East and disposed of rather quickly. I believe it comes under this vote. If it does not the hon. Minister can so indicate and I will be glad to leave it to the proper vote—the whole question of the campaign, may I call it, relating to smoking. As I understood what the hon. Minister said, this province plans to co-operate with Ottawa in any action that may be taken in that field, and I would agree with him that that is the proper approach. However, this is the only place where we can raise any questions regarding this very serious problem. I would like to raise one or two matters with the hon. Minister for his own consideration and for discussion with the authorities at Ottawa.

It would appear, from information that has been produced over the past number of years, that smoking is one of the more serious public health problems in the modern world. Smoking is an addiction, and it now appears that its consequences in terms of public health are perhaps more serious than addiction to alcohol. Addiction to alcohol—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): It has not been proven. I have smoked for years and years and years—

An hon. member: Look at the result.

Mr. Bryden: Do we need any further proof, Mr. Chairman?

Addiction to alcohol has tended in past years to occupy public attention more than addiction to tobacco, possibly because the results it produces are more dramatic in terms of deterioration of human personality and human physical health. But I think it now becomes pretty clear that the long-term consequences of addiction to smoking are even more serious than those of addiction to alcohol. Furthermore, nicotine seems to be a more addictive substance in that it hooks almost everybody who gets started on it in a relatively short period of time, whereas true addiction to alcohol develops—as far as I can understand—in only a relatively small number of cases.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Is the hon. member an expert? Did he ever smoke in his life?

Mr. Bryden: I would say that, 20 years ago, I resembled a chimney almost more than anything else. I was a very heavy smoker. I have been addicted to pipe smoking, cigar smoking and cigarette smoking. I am in the same category as Mark Twain—I found there was nothing to giving up smoking, I have done it hundreds of times.

This is one of the difficulties, Mr. Chairman. It would appear that it is only in rare cases, and under very favourable circumstances, that people can shake this addiction. They can give it up for a time. I know a man, for example, who was off tobacco for seven years and then went back on again.

There never seems to be a definite cure. It is an addiction that can recur. And this is leading me to the point that I wanted to put before the hon. Minister: There are suggestions from Ottawa that there should be large-scale educational campaigns to try to persuade people to give up smoking, and also to try to persuade the younger people of the country not to run this risk of addiction to tobacco. They are almost certain to become addicted if they do very much experimenting with smoking.

Experience in other jurisdictions, as far as I can see, has indicated that such campaigns are not very successful or have not been successful in the past. They sometimes have a temporary effect. I understand the publication of the Surgeon-General's report in the United States has had, to date, an effect that may be only temporary; it has reduced the consumption of tobacco. There have been campaigns undertaken in Britain, for example, where the consumption of tobacco declined for a period and then slowly rose to its previous level and just continued to increase.

I am wondering—I am not objecting to campaigns of public education, particularly those directed to youth, although even they seem to be largely ineffective, I am not objecting to them—but I am wondering if this is the best answer to the problem. I am wondering if more time and effort, and more money, should not be spent on research to see if it is not possible to discover ways and means of removing the cancer-producing agents, and other agents which have adverse health effects, from tobacco without creating something that no smoker wants to smoke.

I saw in the paper a while ago about some gentleman down in Florida—he was a non-smoker himself, this may explain his experiment—who decided that to encourage people to give up tobacco he would give them a substitute, and he started to make cigarettes out of lettuce. I think it was dried lettuce—

Mr. Oliver: Cabbage!

Mr. Bryden: But when he was asked by the press what his cigarettes tasted like, he said: "Well, let's face it, they taste like lettuce". And, I suspect, having a lot of experience over a great number of years with smoking, that a lettuce cigarette would not be considered as an adequate substitute by even a moderate smoker.

There may be ways. I think we should try to discover ways. And I think this is the direction the campaigning should take, rather than what appears to be pretty futile efforts to persuade people not to smoke. I suspect that a great many people, Mr. Chairman, excluding the hon. Minister of Mines, consider that there are real hazards in smoking and would be happy if they had never acquired the habit. But it is much more easily said than done to give it up. If ways could be found whereby they could carry on the habit without running the risks that are now involved, I think this is the long-term solution to the problem, perhaps the best solution to the problem; so I would put that suggestion before the hon. Minister to discuss with the federal authorities.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, many good points have been brought up by the hon. member and the most important, I think, of all is the apparent futility of educational programmes. I think it is less than one month since the Surgeon-General's report was produced in the United States of America and yesterday morning, I believe, I read in one of the newspapers: "Sale of cigarettes on the increase again."

How are you going to educate people to stop smoking when they have all the evidence presented to them so graphically and often-times brutally? I think we have to come to the decision of the old patriarch Ephraim who was joined to his idols. However, I still think that education has a good deal of effect in the youngsters. And I believe, if our educational campaign had started early enough, and if it is the right type of campaigning—and this I think is one matter we must watch very carefully; scare campaigns are less than useless.

The average youngster today sees all of this nonsense, such as has been portrayed, and one picture that is very highly recommended, and the attitude is: "Aw, so what?" Our children today are thinking for themselves, as they have always done, so I think that the educational campaigns have to be intelligently prepared and well presented.

However, the research is, I think, the most important problem and is the most difficult one. I think that we ought to know that a great deal is being spent on research and there is one elusive factor. Speaking to a group in industry only a short time ago they assured me they will make any kind of money available for research to those who are willing and capable to undertake it, to find the factor that is the carcinogen. Now they have not found this factor.

It is quite true that, a few weeks ago, it was reported that two German scientists had isolated it. There has been no confirmation of this but I have no doubt that a great deal of research is going on, on this clue alone. But this, I think, is the secret—when once the carcinogen is found.

I should point out that this is in cigarette smoking, and I was very interested to be told just a few days ago, too—and this is one of the peculiarities of it—that while cigarette smoking is likely to cause, or may probably cause, carcinoma of the lung, pipe smoking may not, even though pipe tobacco and cigarette tobacco are practically the same. Why this should be I do not know.

An hon. member: It depends on how one inhales.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, there is some argument about that because they have studied many cases where inhaling was not a practice and some of them have developed carcinoma of the lung. There are many other factors besides cigarette smoking, but there is enough evidence to prove that cigarette smoking is an important factor; and for that reason any clue will be tracked down very vigorously. But I will be glad to re-emphasize to the committee, which is now sitting on the mapping out of a programme to be put in use across Canada, and I will point out the hon. member's proposal because I think it has a great deal of merit.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, we opened this question about post-graduates in psychiatry. The hon. Minister told the House the bursary was $5,000 a year. I understand that it goes up each year, so that possibly in the post-graduate course the province will have given an outright grant to post graduates of probably $20,000, approaching $25,000. Does one get four years of service in an Ontario hospital, or what are the restrictions? Can he practise psychiatry anywhere in Ontario—or must he practise in a government institution?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The return of service must be given in a government institution, and the salaries do go up every year. The bursary is static and we claim it from the federal health plan. It stays at $5,000 a year, but the amount of salary, of course, is in keeping with civil service yearly salaries.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, one item under this vote deals with the money that has been granted for the assistance of thalidomide babies. In the hon. Minister's opening remarks he also referred to some special assistance that was going to be given to those suffering from cystic fibrosis. I would like to refer briefly to that, and say how glad I am that the hon. Minister of Health and his department is undertaking this expansion of special assistance.

In my own area I know of several families who are really staggering under the financial and sociological difficulties of having one or more children who are suffering from this disease; and as the hon. Minister no doubt knows, there are very heavy requirements for medicines and drugs from an early age which extend for many years. I would like the hon. Minister to tell the House in more detail what the department is going to do in assistance for those suffering from cystic fibrosis, and to predict for the House the direction for what is really bound to become quite a large programme of special assistance for families troubled by these chronic, terrible diseases which are so expensive that they cannot be expected to accept the responsibility of looking after them themselves.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that I cannot be completely specific in detailing to the House what this will cost us. It will come out of a grant—out of an item that will come along under public health administration—the cost of it. At the present time the cost, the average cost for medication, is $100 per month for each patient. This becomes a very staggering load.

We have, in our records, an instance of one family where there are four children out of five all cystic fibrotics. The last I heard of that parent, he was trying to hold down two-and-a-half jobs just to keep his head above water. Medical expenses were something in the order of $10,000 per year, it is understood.

Our proposal at the present time is that, using the Ontario Society for Crippled Children as our agent, we will provide the cost of medication and part, or all, of the special equipment that is needed—the invalid equipment that is needed.

But I have to say to you, sir, that details of the extent of our support for this have not yet been worked out. I can assure the House that it will be fairly considerable, and will relieve the families of a tremendous burden under which they have staggered for many years.

It being 12:35 o'clock p.m., the House took recess.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Friday, February 21, 1964
Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Friday, February 21, 1964

Extending welcome to Prime Minister Jean Lesage of Quebec and official party, Mr. Robarts, Mr. Oliver, Mr. MacDonald, Mr. Cécile	849
Reply in appreciation, Mr. Lesage	852
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	854

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1964

The House resumed at 2.25 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: The committee of supply begs to report progress and asks leave to sit again. Shall the report be adopted?

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the next two or three minutes I understand the official party from Quebec will be arriving, and, with your permission sir, I would ask the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) and the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. MacDonald) to accompany me and we will welcome them at the door, and escort them up here.

When they are seated I would like to make a motion that we adjourn during your pleasure, sir. This permits the formalities of the Legislature to be disposed of during the period we are in adjournment at the Speaker's pleasure, and then we will revert to our normal condition after Mr. Lesage has spoken and we have exchanged the usual pleasantries. So, if I may, sir, I would ask the hon. members to come with me and we will greet our guests.

Mr. Speaker: Before the House is adjourned during pleasure, I would ask the chairman of the committee of the whole (Mr. Noden) if he would take the chair, please.

Premier Lesage of Quebec and party enter the House and Mr. Speaker takes the chair.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, may I first move that this House now adjourn during your pleasure?

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned during pleasure.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of our guests, may I say it permits us, sir, to relax the somewhat rigid requirements of propriety enacted when the Speaker is in the chair in this House.

I would like to say first that I know that I speak for every member of this House, and indeed I echo the thoughts of all the people of Ontario, when I extend a very warm and a very heartfelt welcome to the distinguished

Prime Minister of Quebec, the hon. Jean Lesage, Madame Lesage, the hon. Daniel Johnson, leader of the Opposition; the hon. Hector Laferte who is Speaker of the legislative council of the province of Quebec, an institution we do not have in this province; the hon. Richard Hyde, who is the Speaker of the legislative assembly; the hon. Bona Arseneault, the Provincial Secretary; the hon. Gerard Cournoyer, Minister of Transportation and Communications; the hon. Pierre Laporte, Minister of Municipal Affairs and Madame Laporte, the hon. Claire Kirkland-Casgrain, Minister without Portfolio and her husband. I would like also to extend a very warm welcome to the members of the Quebec legislative press gallery.

It might be of some interest if I were to give you just a word of background about this visit. Last June the press gallery of the province of Quebec invited the press gallery of this House to visit with them, and some members of the government, of the Opposition and members of this House were invited to accompany the press. I might say it was a very successful and most enjoyable visit. This is the return visit; an occasion at which we have an opportunity to return the very warm hospitality we received there.

I would like simply to extend a welcome to the members of the press gallery of the legislative assembly of Quebec and to congratulate the two press galleries, or members of the press, on their ingenuity in conceiving this idea of a visit in the first place. I seized upon the idea with great avidity, if I may put it that way, when it was mentioned to me. I was delighted to have an opportunity to associate myself and this government with a visit to our sister province. Thus I am doubly pleased you have returned the visit here today. Without the efforts of the press, of course, neither of these visits would ever have taken place. We are grateful to you.

We have been looking forward to this opportunity of returning the hospitality we received last June in your very beautiful capital, the city of Quebec. Having you here today on the floor of this Legislature, does remind all of us of the very long background and the long and eventful history that the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario have had together.

If we go back far enough—and I do not intend to go into any history this afternoon—nonetheless at one time where we stand today this was the province of Quebec. This part of Canada, now known as Ontario, was once part of Quebec. Let us go back to the many names we know in this area: Champlain and the early Christian missionaries, Frontenac and LaSalle. We have, hanging in this building, a picture of a man by the name of Brule who accompanied Champlain on some of his expeditions. He was the first white man ever to visit this area. We have a painting showing him on the banks of the Humber River. I might say, that river was not polluted in those days to the same extent it is now.

This is the long background we share. As we go back into history, originally I suppose our forebears were adversaries. But when their troubles were completed they joined together and united against a common enemy in the days of 1812. Then, of course, in the 1840s when this was one political jurisdiction, we think of the days of Baldwin and Lafontaine, who collaborated in bringing to fruition the whole principle, the whole idea of responsible government.

And then, of course, our history brings us to the period of a hundred years ago—which is very close in all our minds these days, because of the approach of our centennial—and we think of those men who worked together and who were co-architects of what is known as the great Canadian Confederation.

So when one thinks of all that background and what has been done in the past, it is particularly appropriate that this visit should take place when we are preparing to commemorate, in Charlottetown this fall, those early meetings at which were hammered out the basic concepts of Confederation. I might put it this way. In these years people of both English and French background are making quite a careful assessment of our history and of the men who helped to fashion it.

I would just like to say this, that during our debates here in the last week or so one hon. member pointed out that as Canadians we are too often inclined to downgrade ourselves, to belittle our accomplishments; perhaps to belittle our achievements and our judgments despite the fact that if we put the accomplishments and achievements of Canadians against the accomplishments of other people in world history, I think we compare very favourably. We do ourselves a distinct disfavour when we do not realize that we have been able to achieve some very great things. One can look at what has happened in other lands and then make these comparisons. I think we can be proud to be Canadians when we compare what we have done to what has happened elsewhere.

In those days of 100 years ago there were many problems. I do not think that we face any greater problems today than those men did then. In fact, I feel that while we have many problems, we have 100 years of history upon which to draw. They had none. They had to fly blind, if I may put it this way, in making decisions and deciding courses of action that have influenced you and me through the years. They did not have the advantages we have. Thus we should be able to do a better job in solving our problems than our forefathers did before us because we have not as difficult a task to do.

As far as our constitution is concerned, I said last week, Mr. Premier, while we were debating some of these matters, that I did not approach the fact of changing our constitution with any fear or with any trepidation. If it needs to be changed, we will change it. If it is not functioning, we must examine it and we must see where it needs to be changed. I do not think that we should be fearful of it. Being a true Progressive-Conservative, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in change for change's sake, but change when change is necessary. In view of the events of these last few years, what lies ahead of us and the things we are commemorating, it seems to me to be very natural that we should examine some of our institutions and really assess their effectiveness in the world in which we live.

There is, of course, much to be done in our relationships between various levels of government. There is nothing partisan whatsoever when I say that, in my opinion, it does seem to me that our federal-provincial relationships are perhaps a little tangled.

In any event, I think we need to develop some new processes. I think we need to devise better methods for co-operation, better forms of action. I do not know that the conferences we are presently holding are just as effective as they might be; there might be better ways of going about these things. These we must examine in order that we will have a flexible constitution, and in order that we will keep our country in tune with the times in which we live.

One other point and then I will be finished with this particular aspect, but I am happy to have the opportunity. I think we must at all costs—the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) said this last week and I could not agree with him more—avoid at all times any atmosphere of crisis, because we can work out all our problems if we will just maintain our equilibrium and our balance.

Thus it is a great pleasure for me to welcome you here today, Mr. Lesage, together with your hon. Ministers, your wives and the members of the press. We are delighted to have an opportunity to return your hospitality.

You may like to make some comments, sir, but before that might I, Mr. Speaker, ask if the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party could say a few words.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rush to agree with the hon. Prime Minister, both in the tenor and the extent and the warmth of the greeting that he has extended to you, Premier Lesage and Madame Lesage, and the distinguished guests who have favoured us with the visit here today.

I concur almost entirely with the hon. Prime Minister. He bordered on a political sentiment for a moment or so, but he is apt to lapse into those periods and we cannot do anything about it. But, in the main, one cannot but concur with the sentiments that he expressed, and the thought that I would leave with the House this afternoon comes from what the hon. Prime Minister said in his closing remarks.

I have always felt that we are tempted at times to magnify the differences that might exist and to minimize those great grounds of agreement that we have between the two provinces. The greatest service that all of us can render is just to remember that the things that may at times seem to divide us are small in comparison, yea, they pale into insignificance before that great breadth of agreement, that great breadth of understanding, and that great relationship that has existed down through the years. I think if we expound the positive and leave the prophets of doom to their own worthy ends, so to speak, we will have rendered a great contribution.

Like the hon. Prime Minister, if the constitution needs changing to keep in tune with the times, then we are big enough, surely, in both these provinces and in the other provinces of Canada, to visualize that Canada needs a constitution, not a rigid document, but one that can be amended and bent in order to meet the changing needs of the times.

As we gather here this afternoon, with our friends from the great province of Quebec, it seems to me that the meeting itself, the gathering together and the meeting of minds, will serve to instruct those people who may have doubts about our relationship, will say to them that the things that divide us are small in comparison with that great mass of opinion and that great ground of agreement that binds us together, historically and every other way.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition in expressing a warm welcome to our friends from the province of Quebec. An occasion like this invites a little historical reminiscing.

I think we could remind ourselves, and I am confident we all believe, that this nation was built in the first instance on a working partnership between English and French Canada. And I think in this Legislature, perhaps it is well it should be said from this side of the House, just as it has been said by the leader of the government, that whatever our differences on other issues, we stand united in reaffirming this partnership with French Canada and in working to achieve the mutual enrichment that it offers to both of us.

There is a second point, Mr. Speaker, on which we stand united. Confederation was shaped 100 years ago to meet the needs of our forefathers. It was shaped as an effort to build in this country a bicultural and a bilingual nation, a vision that has tended to dim over the years. But as the hon. Prime Minister has, just a few moments ago, reminded us, Confederation is not a strait-jacket, it is a constitution that was shaped and can be reshaped; and if we can achieve more fully the vision that inspired our forefathers back in those years, as well as meet the needs of the 20th century, then I know, we, on this side of the House, join with the hon. Prime Minister in saying we are very willing to sit down in an atmosphere of reason and to reshape our constitution for the next 100 years.

The hon. Prime Minister made reference to Lafontaine. Mr. Speaker, this may be the very best occasion to recall that back in 1841, just after the united Canadas had been established, Louis Lafontaine, through the wisdom of the constituents in the constituency where he was running in Quebec, was defeated; and Baldwin, the man with whom he was going to form one of the first of those many historic partnerships in Canadian history, opened a seat for Lafontaine, and for the years 1841-1844 he represented the fourth riding, in the county of York. I have the honour today to represent part of that historic county of York in this assembly, and I think it is well that we should recall this, Mr. Speaker, on the eve of the 100th anniversary of the death of Lafontaine which will be celebrated next Wednesday.

And now, Mr. Speaker, if you will forgive me for a personal allusion, my ancestors on my father's side came out from Scotland well over 100 years ago—now I recognize 100 years is short in the presence of our French Canadians, it is 200 or 300 years with most of them—but they came out a little over 100 years ago and settled in the Chateauguay Valley just south of Montreal, across the river from Glengarry. It was really just part of a larger Scottish settlement that centred in Glengarry.

Indeed, back in those days when the winter winds got cold, even colder than they are today, and the ice froze on the river, the young men from around Ormstown, where the forefathers of the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) came from, or some of his family lived, from Huntingdon, from Howick, used to get the cutter out, hitch up the horse, and get the buffalo robes out, and they would go across the ice to visit the girls on the Glengarry side, and thus it was that my grandmother came from Bainsville.

As the years went by writers like Ralph Connor immortalized The Man from Glengarry. I think it is rather significant, Mr. Speaker, to take note of the fact that the men from Glengarry in this Legislature in recent years have borne the names of Guindon and Villeneuve. Indeed, both of them will vouch for the fact that if you go back to Glengarry you will find many a Scottish family, including MacDonalds, who are proud of their Scottish ancestry, who wear the kilts with pride, who play in the pipe bands and who take part in the Scottish games, the highland games, and whose mother tongue now is French.

This is something of a symbol of the unity that has been built in this bridge between Quebec and Ontario, and I would like to envisage that weekend of last June, of which I still have the warmest memories, not only of the hospitality, but to sample once again the atmosphere of that magnificent historic city, Quebec City. I would like to view that visit and this return visit as just another of these efforts to build more of these bridges between Quebec and Ontario, so that we can reshape Confederation to be a more useful instrument in the second 100 years of our history.

I would say to our guests from Quebec, Premier Lesage, Mr. Johnson: "Bienvenu à Toronto."

Hon. Jean Lesage (Premier of Quebec): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that I have to tell you and the members of the House how deeply moved I am, and I am sure my companions are also, at the great reception which is given to us this afternoon. The Prime Minister was right a few moments ago when he said that we owed the initiative to the members of our respective press galleries. I want to join with him in congratulating them and thanking especially the members of your press gallery, thanking them for their welcome. I believe that those who accompany me would be right in criticizing me if I did not mention the touch of charm that you have added this afternoon to your hospitality, in having your Christmas choir sing for us "Vive les Canadiennes", apart from our national anthems.

I thank the Prime Minister and the leaders of the two Opposition parties in this House, and I am sure that the invitation that has been tendered to me by the Prime Minister to address this House was inspired by a friendship which goes beyond personal friendship; it goes to the very deep roots that have been mentioned by the three gentlemen who have preceded me.

The best evidence of the appreciation of the province of Quebec of the invitation that has been tendered to us is the fact that they have taken a great risk in having the leader of the Opposition and the Premier fly on the same flight, but I am sure that I am speaking for him when I say that—neither for him nor for me—no sacrifice could stop us from flying to shake the hand which has been extended to us. You know that, in spite of noisy and irresponsible statements or acts that draw more publicity than the mature attitudes, Quebec does not wish to take the attitude that most of us, I am sure, have taken on some bad days of our youth: "I want to be alone." Of course, everyone knows that Quebec wants to assert itself and that is quite different.

Tout le monde sait que le Québec moderne prend conscience de lui-même. Je veux dire par là qu'il prend conscience de ce qu'il est et de ce qu'il peut devenir. De ce fait, il s'interroge aussi bien sur ses structures économiques, sociales et politiques internes que, comme vous, comme ceux qui m'ont précédés à la tribune sur le cadre confédératif lui-même. C'est là, à mon sens, une conséquence normale de l'évolution rapide qui se produit aujourd'hui chez nous.

Je comprends fort bien qu'elle puisse étonner ceux qui étaient habitués, à prendre le Québec traditionnel pour acquis. Il ne faut pas oublier cependant que ce changement, par ses nombreux aspects positifs, enrichera en définitive le patrimoine commun de tous les citoyens du Canada. Mais il y a une condition à cela, une condition dont j'ai souvent parlé: qu'on nous accepte tels que nous sommes.

Thus to us, Quebec is the political expression of French Canada, and this fact distinguishes our province and makes it different from other provinces of Canada. We owe this particular situation to history and to geography. It forms part of our reality which we, as French-speaking Quebecers, must take into account.

It also indicates the collected tasks that we must undertake as a people. It directs our actions and guides our efforts in every sphere. As a matter of fact, not only must we safeguard our ethnic entity, and I am sure that nobody in this House would think of jeopardizing it, but we must also the find means that will allow our language and culture to spread.

In the discovery and application of these means we are facing problems that are peculiar to us and we know that in the last analysis they will undoubtedly be solved by our own efforts. In this endeavour above all, we are determined to help ourselves. However, if some of Quebec's present problems are peculiar to us for the reasons I have just outlined, I will certainly not go so far as to say that this is the case in every field. On the contrary, it seems to me that every province in the country is facing difficulties similar to ours.

For example, I am thinking of the increasing cost of education — these are popular words in this House I am sure—the ever-rising charges stemming from health and social welfare measures, the needs of regional development and economic growth, and how many other problems? If we take into account only those responsibilities given to them by the Constitution, all the provinces are faced with financial obligations which very often—and this is the case in Quebec—are disproportionate to their present fiscal resources.

And if I am not mistaken, Ontario is in the same situation or almost. I have read the newspaper accounts of the hon. Provincial Treasurer's (Mr. Allan's) Budget speech. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to borrow some of the hon. Minister's remarks, and especially those in which he says that the government of Ontario will claim greater sources of revenue at the resumption of the federal-provincial conference. I fully believe that you will not be alone—or should I say that we will not be alone?

From what I have just said, one might be led to believe that the provinces only need money. This is an over-simplification of the problem. As a matter of fact, the truth is more complex. If the provinces need money, it is simply because they want to carry out their responsibilities themselves. It is because they are determined to devote their efforts to the development of their human capital at the time in our history when the armament race has lost its relative importance. And who can blame those who think that way?

As a result of these problems that are drawing us together, I believe we are entering a period in which relations between the provinces will be much closer. We will work together more and more in groups of two, three, four, five or ten. Up to now, we could say that the relationship between governments in Canada has been vertical, that it is largely limited to relations between federal and provincial levels.

I believe—and it is not the first time I have mentioned this—that this relationship will gradually become horizontal, that is, inter-provincial. This new type of balance will not be completely established for some time. I realize that. My friend, Mr. Frost, who was nice enough to accompany me this afternoon, will recall that this was one of his warnings at the first inter-provincial conference in Quebec. In fact, we do not yet have the necessary institutions which would enable us to reach this goal immediately. These institutions will undoubtedly develop from common provincial needs, and will contribute to a new pattern for the Canadian Confederation of the future.

Then we must start thinking about this right away. Such institutions cannot be improvised. They are perhaps justified by concrete reality, but their scope depends upon the ideals that allow them to take shape, and which breathes life into them right from the start.

In Quebec we have said always, as has been said here this afternoon, that the Canadian Confederation should be reviewed. In my opinion, the institutions that are likely to facilitate inter-provincial co-operation constitute one of the important elements of this renewal. And I am sure that on this point, as well as on so many others, both Ontario and Quebec, who have a common boundary, can share the same opinions. And I wish again, Mr. Speaker, through you, to thank all those who have outstretched their arms to receive their brothers and sisters from Quebec.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Monsieur Speaker, permettez-moi tout d'abord de dire à Monsieur Lesage, à tous ses Ministres de la province de Québec et à tous les gens distingués qui l'accompagnent, que nous sommes heureux de les avoir parmi nous et que nous les remercions de la visite qu'ils nous font aujourd'hui. J'espère que nous pourrons leur rendre un peu la pareille que nous avons eue au mois de juin dernier dans la vieille capitale de la province de Québec. Alors, Monsieur Lesage, Madame Lesage, soyez donc les bienvenus, vous et ceux qui vous accompagnent et que vous ayez un joyeux et excellent trois jours dans notre capitale, Toronto, de la province de l'Ontario.

Permettez-moi, en passant, de vous donner un accueil tout particulier au nom de mes neuf confrères de langue française de la Législature.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House to Monday, I would like to say that we will then go back to the estimates of The Department of Health. They will be followed by the estimates of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 3.05 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Monday, February 24, 1964

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Monday, February 24, 1964

Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964, bill intituled, Mr. Simonett, first reading	857
Energy Act, 1964, bill intituled, Mr. Simonett, first reading	857
Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, continued	859
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	885

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We welcome to the galleries of the Legislature today, members of The Progressive-Conservative Ladies Association, Peterborough.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD ACT, 1964

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources) moves first reading of bill intituled, The Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Energy Board and The Energy Act are being revised and updated in the light of experience, in order to improve administration. Section one is now self-contained and therefore there is no need to refer to The Energy Act, 1964 for the meaning of expressions used in The Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964.

The provisions respecting pipe lines and a number of other provisions have been transferred from The Energy Act for greater convenience. In addition, the following changes are of interest:

The powers of the board are clarified. The provisions with respect to the storage of gas are strengthened. The appeal to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council from orders and decisions of the board is brought into line with similar appeals from orders of The Municipal Board, thus bringing about uniformity of practice and procedure in these matters.

The pipeline provisions are broadened to deal expressly with pipeline stations.

THE ENERGY ACT, 1964

Hon. Mr. Simonett moves first reading of bill intituled, The Energy Act, 1964.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, The Ontario Energy Board Act is being revised and updated in the light of experience in order to improve administration. At present the interpretation section of The Energy Act serves also as the interpretation section of The Ontario Energy Board Act. Hereafter both Acts will be self-contained in this respect. A number of unused sections in the present Act have been removed. A number of sections have been transferred to The Ontario Energy Board Act, including all of the part dealing with pipelines. Other provisions have been rearranged and subdivided for greater convenience. There are no fundamental changes in principle.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall), notice of which has been duly submitted. When will the government make public the report of the committee set up to make a full-scale inquiry into the economic conditions in the Windsor area, as had been ordered by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) in December, 1962?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): In reply to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, Mr. Chairman, the report has been finalized and submitted. We are studying it now, and as soon as the contents are made known to the Cabinet, we will make it public.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): My question is to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree). Sir, have representatives of The Department of Labour met with the committee of the Canadian Manufacturers Association to discuss the regulations for the new Operating Engineers Act? Was a similar meeting held with representatives of employees in the industry and would the hon. Minister consider postponing any meeting of the standing committee of the Legislature until the regulations are available and adequate time has been given for their study?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, may I say that the department has been in receipt of many inquiries concerning The Operating Engineers Act, from a number of organizations, including trade unions and the Canadian Manufacturers Association. On each occasion my department's officials have attempted to clarify those points that were raised by these interested groups.

Representatives of my department met recently with the Canadian Manufacturers Association at their request to explain the bill. I am instructed that as recently as Saturday, February 22, a member of my staff provided information regarding the Act and the proposed regulations to Mr. John Parker, president of the Toronto Area Council of the International Union of Operating Engineers, prior to his attendance at a meeting at which a number of officials from the union discussed the new Act. In addition, information of a similar nature was given to officials of the Institute of Power Engineers and the hoisting local of the International Union of Operating Engineers.

In order to provide information to all interested parties prior to the committee meeting to deal with this legislation, last week I instructed the staff of my department to summarize the proposed regulations which would be enacted under this statute and to distribute this summary to members of the committee and other interested groups. This material is being sent out today.

The establishment of a special committee in June, 1962, to review this legislation satisfies a recommendation of the McAndrew report that the legislation be studied. Mr. H. A. Polson, QC, Professor E. A. Alcutt and Mr. George Rose made up this committee and spent many months hearing representations from a wide range of organizations. Some 46 exhibits were filed with this committee and 28 briefs. The committee reported to me some six months ago and subsequently its report was made public on November 12, 1963. As a result, further representations were made to this department on the contents of this report by individuals and groups representing both employees and employers.

In dealing with the last part of the question, I would like to point out that on February 17, when I introduced this bill for second reading in the House, it was agreed by the hon. members of the Legislature that early this week would be a suitable date for the committee on labour meeting, and would allow ample time for those groups who wished to make representations at that time. In order to ensure that ample time was provided, the committee meeting was set for Thursday of this week rather than Monday or Tuesday as initially contemplated.

Mr. Speaker, there is no rush about this matter and ample time will be provided for all those who wish to make representations to the government with respect to the proposed legislation.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister of Labour would permit a supplementary question?

In view of the very substantial display of doubt about the provisions of this bill, as exhibited at a meeting of some 1,500 people held at the Royal York Hotel in this city yesterday, I wonder if the hon. Minister would not deem it advisable to withhold this bill, perhaps even for the present session, in order to enable officials of his department to enter into a series of discussions with all of these people who are so concerned about the provisions of this bill, in order perhaps to bring into the House a bill that would meet with some acceptance of the people concerned in the provisions thereof.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it is desirable that the committee sit as arranged on Thursday of this week, if for no other reason than that we would have the opportunity of having the issues delineated and clarified as to the respective positions which the various parties have taken on this matter.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to extend any debate on this thing, but may I ask another supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. I cannot allow the question to become a debate.

Mrs. A. Pritchard (Hamilton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask your indulgence about removing the restriction with regard to the wearing of hats by ladies in the visitors' gallery? In this day and age, it is the accepted thing for ladies to attend church and other public gatherings without hats.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank the member for Hamilton Centre for her question.

This is a matter to which I have given a good deal of consideration lately. I have discussed the matter with the Clerk of the House and he informs me that it is no longer the practice in the House of Commons in the United Kingdom. Therefore, with the approval of the House, I shall instruct the attendants to not enforce this custom any longer.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Thirty-second order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH (continued)

On vote 701:

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, when the House rose from the discussion of this vote last Friday, I was inquiring of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) for some additional information, sir, as to his policy for the extension of special aid to those citizens of the province suffering from cystic fibrosis. I was also inquiring whether he felt that in the future there would be an increased programme making special aid available for those people suffering from diseases of this type. The government has already extended special aid to the so-called thalidomide babies and we are glad to see this extension to the cystic fibrosis sufferers. I would like him to comment about the possibility of further extensions.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, I thought I answered the hon. member's question on Friday. However, I stated at that time that I was not yet in a position to give a detailed outline of just exactly what we were going to do, but we are involving ourselves quite extensively in this matter. Our first concern will be to provide assistance in the matter of medications and the special inhalator type of equipment that is needed by all of these cystic fibrotic cases.

Mr. Nixon: The point was, Mr. Chairman, that we are pleased that this assistance is being extended to cystic fibrosis, but is it possible that it might be further extended to those suffering from congenital heart defects and victims of other long-term diseases, who have to bear very great medical expenses over a period of many years?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, all of these things are very much under consideration. Like Lincoln, we plant our feet firmly and move forward constantly. We do not go backwards, but to state at the present time how much farther forward we are going to go in this session, I cannot do.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, on Friday the hon. Minister told us that he would tell the House about the question that was raised re the rumour that doctors were going to have to remain and become Canadian citizens before they could practise in the province of Ontario. In other words, foreign doctors would have to live here for five years before they could practise.

I believe the hon. Minister told us he would answer that question today. Perhaps he would give us that information now?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I was wrong in my answer on Friday. Until the early 1950s this was the rule—that a foreign doctor coming in to Ontario is required to become a Canadian citizen before he could be granted full licence to practise. This no longer obtains. This was changed so that so long as he is in Ontario as a landed immigrant, and can satisfy the examiners that the university from which he graduated has prepared him to work toward an enabling certificate in Ontario, then he is accepted.

The enabling certificate is granted after he has fulfilled the requirements sought from Ontario graduates: three years' internship and his ability to pass the basic science examination. Therefore, a foreign graduate, if he is from a school of standards acceptable to Ontario, could be practising in just over two years after arriving in Ontario.

Mr. Whicher: I would like to say that I congratulate the hon. Minister that he has been able to give this reply because it is much different than the one that was given on Friday.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I am a little puzzled and rather confused—well, the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) chuckles and if he had to phrase his estimates in the peculiar way that these are phrased in we would be puzzled about his estimates too.

An hon. member: The hon. member is always puzzled by them.

Mr. Singer: Well, I recognize this; perhaps I am not too bright.

We are here to listen to a little information from the government, but I am a little puzzled, Mr. Chairman, as to the exact amount of dollars that this government devotes to research. And as one reads through the 35-odd votes, or items that are in vote number 701, I was trying to figure out how many dollars are voted to research. I note on item number 4 there is $10,000 for medical and other research. In item number 22, there is $10,000 for the Canadian Mental Health Association. In item number 34, there is $20,000 to the governors of the University of Toronto, Banting and Best Research Fund. In item S, which is the second one under item 35, there is another $10,000 to the governors of the University of Toronto.

But I would like the hon. Minister of Health to tell us, and I would have hoped that the hon. Minister would be proud to tell us, that there were "X" dollars of our budget—our health budget—devoted to research, and that the province of Ontario had embarked upon a project in the year 1963-64 or 1964-65 in some particular public health field, or health field that worries the people of the province of Ontario; that in the foreseeable future, say, in the next 12 months of the fiscal year, that we could identify a number of provincial dollars that would be devoted into research to a particularly puzzling health field and that, as a result of the spending of the public monies of Ontario, we would be able to say that the government of Ontario through its Department of Health had devoted a number of dollars in an effort to provide a solution for a health problem that has perplexed the doctors of Ontario and the people of Ontario. I wonder why if this is the intent of the province, that there is not some further elaboration in the gathering together of these funds into an identifiable item and why the hon. Minister has not been able to devote some part of his remarks in introducing his estimates to telling us that the province has embarked upon a programme of research into a particularly serious problem concerning the public health of the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the amount of money and total spent on research is $4,318,000 and there should be an additional sum of $200,000 in this. It is broken down in this way: $1,732,000 federal funds which we spend in this province through this department; $2,586,000, provincial funds; in addition to that, a good deal of the money in certain of our hospitals for the mentally disturbed is devoted to research. For instance, CPRI in London is very largely a research project. Thistletown Hospital here in Toronto is very largely a research hospital. Alcoholism and drug addiction, $250,000; cancer, $738,000; mental health, $2,250,000; maternal and child welfare, $240,000; medical rehabilitation of crippled children, $113,000; tuberculosis, $115,000; general public health, which looks after communicable diseases and prevention, epidemiological studies, environmental health, clinical research into fibrovascular disease, urological disease, ophthalmology and arthritis, for a total of $769,000; and $150,000 provided for fibrovascular research, which this government gives to the Ontario Heart Foundation; a total of $4,518,000.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. Minister for his further elaboration on the sums of money that are being devoted for this purpose. In round figures, as I understand it, the hon. Minister says—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: $4,500,000.

Mr. Singer: It puzzles me as to why we should have to ask a question in this regard and why there could not be a special vote or a series of votes devoted solely to research. It is rather confusing to pick these figures out. As the hon. Minister read them I was not able to make an immediate note of each figure that he mentioned nor am I able to comment in connection with each individual item, but it occurs to me that perhaps some of these figures the hon. Minister mentioned are devoted to research, some to the—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It was all research.

Mr. Singer: Well, yes, some to research, some to the maintenance of administrative facilities in some of the institutions—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, no, no, Mr. Chairman. These organizations whose names I read out—the amount of money that I read against the name is that portion of the grant given for research.

Mr. Singer: Well, that is fine. Accepting the hon. Minister at his word, can he identify and I think he would be proud to identify, the fact that Ontario is spending this $4,500,000 directed to particular fields of investigation, and that for 1963-64 or 1964-65 we are investigating a particular field of mental health or particular concern of cancer disease or particular concern in some other field? I would think it would make abundant commonsense if the hon. Minister would say that as a part of our overall expenditure—a very substantial portion of the Ontario budget—that Ontario is investigating, or encouraging the investigations of a particular health problem. It makes it very confusing and very difficult to pick out of this book the dollars that are estimated. I happen to have the additional information that the hon. Minister gave to me in answer to my request and I would have thought that this should have been one of the key approaches of our government in so far as the whole health problem is concerned; that we would have been proud in Ontario to identify ourselves with research in a particular field or series of fields; and I would urge the hon. Minister that when the time comes for the preparation of his next series of estimates, that he could devote a particular vote or series of votes to research and that he will be able to tell us that as a result of the expenditure of “X” dollars we have made some progress, or we expect to make some progress or some other thing because this is a real challenge to us, surely, in the field of health, that we are providing money for our scientists to investigate the diseases that to date escape the awareness and understanding of our scientists and our medical people.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, following my hon. colleague's questions, I would be interested to clarify, taking, for example, cancer. I would be interested to know in what proportion in connection with the total research done on cancer in this province, is the amount that the Ontario government gives with respect to other monies given, for example, from the United States, for cancer research. That is my first question.

My next question. I wonder how the basis of allocating this research fund is decided. As I understand it—and I hope that the hon. Minister will correct me on this and give me the information—but as I understand it, there is a committee of acknowledged medical people who are told that there is a certain allocation of monies that could be used for research and that they examine the various departments—for example, Princess Margaret Hospital—to see what they are doing in order to decide to allocate so much money to them. My question is that, in the United States there has come from research doctors a suggestion that the committee which does the allocation, should be rotated every two years or so in order that it will not be made up simply of men who are administrators, but that it is made up of men who have been in research themselves and who can assess the value of research.

Sir, my second question is, how is the research in regard to cancer allocated on this? What kind of people are on the committee or council, or whatever you call it; are they reallocated every so many years, and are there actually practical research men on that committee?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the committee that passes on the worthwhileness or assesses or evaluates the various projects submitted for research support, are not administrators at all. They are all highly skilled medical men, or in the case of cancer, for instance, there are doubtless some highly skilled physicists as well, since the treatment of cancer is going beyond the immediate medical field.

Just to give you some idea of the calibre of the men, those on the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation Advisory Medical Board, are the men who would evaluate and assess the worthwhileness, if such a word exists, of the projects submitted to the medical director of the Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation, who in this instance is Dr. Crosbie, a man of long and wide experience in gynaecology and a man who has done a great deal of both basic and clinical research himself. The medical directors of the regional cancer treatment centres—and they are at London, Hamilton, Kingston, Ottawa—the deans and the heads of departments of surgery and medicine of the medical schools of Toronto, Queen's, University of Western Ontario and University of Ottawa. The medical statistician of The Department of Health for Ontario, Dr. J. B. Richards of Port Arthur; Dr. E. R. Harris of Kirkland Lake; Dr. Brooks, Toronto; Dr. Dauphinee, Toronto; Dr. Donohue, Toronto; Professor Johns, Toronto; Dr. R. C. Laird, Toronto; Dr. Geraldine Maloney, Toronto; Dr. R. B. Meicklejohn, Toronto; Dr. Warwick, London; Dr. W. K. Welsh, Toronto; Dr. K. J. R. Whiteman, Toronto; the president of the general practice section of the Ontario Medical Association; a nominee of the Ontario Association of Pathologists; the president of the Ontario Medical Association; the secretary of the Ontario Medical Association.

All of those men are highly skilled and highly regarded in the profession and none of them is an administrator.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I appreciate the eminence of these men in their field. Could the hon. Minister tell us—and I am sorry I do not know more about this; he may want to look into it more, but I am sure he knows many of these men personally, and by reputation. Could he tell us: Are some of those men actually researchers, by that I mean are working in labs and with test tubes and doing examinations? I say this because of some articles that I have read in which there has been the suggestion that, both in Britain and United States some research had bogged down because there were people who—I do not say a dean is an administrator, the dean of a medical school, but I would suggest that perhaps he is out of touch with actually working in the laboratory—and they felt that in both Britain and United States, there was a greater vitality and a greater understanding of possible research projects when you actually got the man who was in the field to be part of the committee.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, there is some difficulty in understanding exactly what is involved in research. A researcher must not, or need not, work with test tubes or glassware. Clinical research is just as essential. Indeed, it is more essential because it is then that the basic research is really put to the test. The things that have been arrived at, the conclusions that have been reached, the postulations that have been offered by the man in the laboratory, the man with the test tubes, do they stand up when it comes to the application with the human body? This, of course, calls for clinical research.

On the other hand, I would say that almost every one of these men—and unfortunately I did not read them all out, because there is a greater list on the back of the page—have done the basic type of research. For instance, Dr. Hamilton, the Dean of the University of Toronto, is a pathologist of note, who has done a great deal of research and actually has contributed a great deal of original research. Dr. Warwick, the present Dean of the University of Western Ontario, was one of the leading physicians at Princess Margaret Hospital, before he was called to be dean. He, too, has done a great deal of original research, both basic and clinical. I am not sure of Dr. Lussier's background, the Dean of Ottawa, but Dr. Botterell, the Dean of Queen's University, has also contributed much to research, both basic and clinical in the field of neurology. Dr. Ettinger, past Dean of Queen's and also one of the advisory committee, has spent his whole life in basic research. He has never been in clinical research. Dr. Collip is the name of a scientist, the former Dean of the University of Western Ontario, not only known in Ontario but known all over the world for his original research, particularly in metabolic diseases, again, almost exclusively basic but also in some measure, applied research. Dr. Dead-man, for instance, a pathologist of note; Dr. Ray Farquharson, a man who has spent his whole life in research, mainly clinical, but also has done a good deal of basic research.

Practically every one of these men and women have given a very great deal, and have added a very great deal, to the wealth of our medical and surgical knowledge. I think it can be taken that these men are well skilled and very capable of passing on the projects that are passed. It is rather interesting to note that practically all of the research projects of which they approve—when they go on to Ottawa, those that are going to profit from federal health grants—are again approved in turn by the medical advisory committee set up by the federal government to screen the projects in their turn. This, I think, is one of the best demonstrations of the ability and the calibre of these men and women who pass on them in Ontario.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry. I realize the importance of this because I am sure the hon. Minister, like every one in the Legislature, hopes that Ontario can continue to take pride in famous research people, such as Banting, and so on, and that we will have others in the future.

I had noticed, and I asked this in the estimates about three years ago, that some internationally famous researchers, I am thinking of two of them, have left Canada. I never did get to hear why they had left; but apart from this, in discussions I have had myself there were several questions which appeared to cause at least some dissatisfaction in medicine with top research people.

One is that a top research man, as I understand it, must have post-graduate doctorate people working with him as a system. The question was: Perhaps there are not enough scholarships and encouragement for post-graduate doctorate research people? I ask the hon. Minister: How many such scholarships are offered?

Then I ask with respect to this: It seems to me that medicine and research has no national boundaries; and I am sure that the hon. Minister, when he spoke in the estimates and referred to citizenship being a qualification in connection with a man who is healing people, made an unnecessary remark. I would say that, because research has no national boundaries, I would hope that there is a liberal allowance for researchers who travel to any part of the world to attend conferences; and again, from a very narrow personal knowledge and personal relationship with some researchers, they have told me of the difficulty in getting travelling expenses through the Ontario government when they would want to attend some conference. Could the hon. Minister assure us that there are such funds for post-graduate researchers?

My question again, sir, the one that he has not answered with respect to cancer research, was the very first one. I am sorry I am shooting a number rather quickly at the hon. Minister but he has mentioned the amount of money which the provincial government gives to cancer research. I asked the question: Of all the money that is put into cancer research in Ontario, what proportion of this is provincial money?

Then my other questions have been about post-graduate scholarships and assistance to help these top researchers, and a further question about the travelling expenses and facilities for our research people to travel to other countries.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The amount of money given by this government to the cancer foundation is $1,220,000. This matches a similar amount given by the federal government. We do not ask them how they divide it up.

They allocate to research that part they need. We do not say: "You must allocate this part, or you must allocate some other part." This is why it is rather difficult to do as the hon. member of Downsview suggested. Mr. Chairman, this is something that appeals to me very much, and I have consistently argued with my people about this, the setting out of a certain number of dollars in each budget for research. But some years we might not get applications for research.

It is very easy to say the government should be proud of supporting some specific project of research. We would be, but it is not always easy to get a man or a woman who is prepared to do that kind of research, and we do not say we want a scientist to undertake research in "X" subject. We wait until a scientist applies, makes application and submits his project for consideration, and then we find the money for him somehow.

Sometimes we have to turn down a project because our advisory committee tells us it does not believe that such a project should be supported. But we have turned down very few. Therefore—I hope this answer is complete—the Cancer Research Foundation decides what part of its money will be allocated to research. And I might say that this year they should have a good deal more available for this than they have had, because a goodly sum will come to them through extended out-patient services by the provision of the radiotherapy treatment on an out-patient basis.

The next is money available for travelling fellowships. I am afraid I cannot answer that with a clear-cut definite answer. In certain cases travelling is permitted. Again it is tied to the project. But more and more we find a loosening up—I was going to say a liberalization, but that is a dirty word—a broadening of the attitude toward this. And one of the very interesting dialogues—indeed it was a broad discussion, it was not a dialogue—at the last federal-provincial conference, was the inflexible conditions attaching to federal grants. Every provincial Minister of Health urged the national Minister to become less inflexible, to allocate X number of dollars for health purposes and let the province decide in what area of health activity it should be used. We were very much impressed with their attitude towards this and we are very hopeful that she will become very liberal in her interpretation of the conditions and will grant our request. To that end then we can be far more flexible ourselves in our attitude.

Now the assistance that researchers need: Here again this is an almost impossible question for a government department to answer because here again we do not know because we do not ask the people. We give them the grants, they submit their applications, submit their project; it is screened by the assessment committee. If it is passed, a grant is given. And, then, how they apply it, or how they use it, is really their own concern, so long as they use it within the framework of the project application. Now whether there is a scarcity of people of doctoral calibre, I do not know, but many of them, of course, are engaged in assisting in research, working towards the doctorate. Many of them use this as the basis for procuring the doctorate. Again, I have to say I am afraid I cannot answer this question.

Mr. Thompson: May I thank the hon. Minister for his liberal interpretation of my question.

Mr. Singer: Sir, I think there is a lot of merit in what the hon. Minister of Health says. I do not think that any research scientist or doctor or what-have-you who embarks upon this research wants to be tied within four walls of strict provincial governmental control. But the thing that comes to my mind immediately is the fantastic impetus that a man like former President Roosevelt gave to research into poliomyelitis. He did this because of personal reasons; he made this one of the great causes of his lifetime, that there should be research, and he used all of the powers of his persuasion and of his office to corral monies, to use the power of government to encourage research and investigation into the problems concerning poliomyelitis. And so eventually Dr. Salk arrived with a solution and others improved upon that. Now could there be any greater service to mankind than the sort of initiative that President Roosevelt inspired? This is the sort of idea that my colleague, the hon. member for Dovercourt and myself are trying to get across, Mr. Chairman. Surely it would make some sense if we are spending $4.5 million of Ontario money into research, that the government of Ontario could say: "Let us have some research into"—and I will take only one instance, and I may be entirely wrong in this—"into lung cancer research as a result of smoking". Pick whatever subject you want and instead of putting a few thousand dollars here or a few hundred thousand dollars over there, if as an inspiration the hon. Minister of Health said, or the government of Ontario said, "Let us devote the next several years of our research monies into a particularly serious field of health". It may well be that we could emerge with a solution to a very serious problem or even if we did not emerge with a solution, then we would have added a great deal to the general public knowledge in a particular field. I am not suggesting for a minute that we tie within the four walls of the terms of reference any particular group of researchers because you are going to antagonize them and drive them away. But I am suggesting that we could indicate as an item in these expenditures that we are going to devote X dollars for research. And if the province of Ontario deems it proper then this particular field—the hon. Minister of Health is far more versed in selecting a field than I am, I am not a scientist—is the field the province is going to concentrate on for the next two or three or four or five years in order to see if we cannot as a service to mankind emerge with a solution. And we are prepared to devote our few dollars to this.

And I would think for identification, for producing results, if we directed our efforts into one particular field that we could emerge far more successfully than in nibbling and putting a bit here and a bit there and a bit there and really emerging with nothing in the great field of knowledge, and driving off, as the hon. member for Dovercourt says, many of our research scientists who seem to be denied the monies that they feel are proper, driving them off into other jurisdictions where the dollars are more inviting and where the freedom is more inviting.

All I am suggesting is, Mr. Chairman, is that with the dollars that we are spending—and the hon. Minister says $4.5 million out of our budget of $150 million-odd, $4.5 million, which is a substantial sum of money—let us direct that into a field which can be reasonably identifiable, which can attract into Ontario some of the top researchers who are going to be given sufficient facilities and freedom and that sort of thing, to be encouraged by investigation, so that Ontario can say that we spent the last year or two or three trying to find a solution to this very serious health problem. I think that in this way, rather than trying to be all things to all people, we could achieve a very substantial improvement to the health of the people of the world, not just of the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair that I say to the hon. member that this is the language that I spoke 5½ years ago. And I spoke this language for a year until my research advisory people took me aside and tried to teach me the facts of research life. It was quite a revelation for me to realize that you did not turn research off and on as you turn a spigot off and on. For instance, let me say to the hon. member that at the present time I know of one tobacco company that has a substantial sum of money lying waiting for some scientist to pick up and do research on finding the carcinogen that causes the trouble when cigarettes are smoked. There have been no takers for two years.

I, too, thought at one time that if we took all our money and said, "Let us spend all this for research into the causes, the control and treatment of schizophrenia as some jurisdictions are doing". But then the scientists tell me, no, it is far better to apportion out the monies available—and who knows but that a little bit to this project and a little bit to that and a little bit to some other, will yield a great deal of truth. The hon. member spoke, for instance, about the impetus that the late President Roosevelt gave to researchers in poliomyelitis. It might be a matter of great interest and probably information for the hon. members of this House, that the only successful culture in which the polio virus was grown was developed here in Toronto by the University of Toronto assisted by The Department of Health. It may be of interest to remember too, that the late Sir Frederick Banting was given, grudgingly, $2,300 for his research, out of which he found insulin which has saved hundreds of thousands of lives and will go on, I presume, to save millions of lives yet. The small amounts, that may seem small to us here who cannot possibly be expected to understand all that is involved, perform a very great deal of good and I think it would be most unwise if I were to lead the hon. members of this House to believe that I accepted as a good plan, the devoting of all of our money, $4.5 million, to one particular phase of activity. I think this would be wrong and I must say to you now that I shall have to continue to be guided by my advisers, the best men and women whom we can find because this is their faith and this is their belief.

I grant you that what my hon. friend from Downsview states about the impetus given by one like President Roosevelt in polio, and the late President Kennedy in mental retardation—these things are good, and because of the personal involvement—at the time of the late President Roosevelt, poliomyelitis was a worldwide, raging epidemic that was snuffing out lives and crippling far more than it killed and therefore, a far more serious disease; and because of the fact that—coincidentally, shall I put it—the many years of research that had been going into this matter all culminated and the whole thing came to a peak, so to speak. At the time I remember, in the city of Toronto, we used to spray kids' noses with—what was it?—copper sulphate. We might as well squirt water up, but we believed that this was good and about the same time came Salk vaccine.

The late President Kennedy in his own family saw and lived with the problem of mental retardation, and this gave them a personal urge backed by a huge personal fortune—but this in itself was enough to spur and stimulate.

And I have stated many times that I would that some of our people who have been so afflicted—or the families of some of our people who have been so afflicted—would catch something of the same vision as Roosevelt and Kennedy had. In the meantime, we will work along the way we are doing but again I say to you, for emphasis, Mr. Chairman, that I would be dishonest if I led this House to believe that this would be the wise way to allocate our research fund.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to follow up on the point that has been under discussion, if I may. I will agree with the hon. Minister that there is no simple answer to this problem. And I would also agree with him that he has to pay very close attention to what he is told by his advisers in the field but advisers sometimes can be conservatives too, and unnecessarily cautious in their approach.

I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister that the two approaches which have been discussed here are not mutually exclusive. I would not like to see some of the research funds discontinued which the department is now making available in relatively small amounts to various projects that appear to have merit, but we are living in a world now where it has been demonstrated that a concentrated programme can often produce results in the field of research, and that if one gives leadership and starts into a particular field and really gets down to work on it then it can produce results.

For example, it is not a straight medical problem that I want to refer to, but an achievement in the field of research in the health field was demonstrated by penicillin. Penicillin was developed into a practical proposition by a large-scale programme initiated by the government of the United States at the beginning of World War II. The actual substance had been discovered 20 years before that, but putting it on a basis whereby it could be produced in quantities that were usable was due entirely to a large-scale research programme initiated and largely financed by the government of the United States.

I am not suggesting that the government of Ontario would have the kind of money available that the government of the United States put into that particular crash programme. The United States has also been working on a programme relating to cancer research. I do not know whether it is producing any results or not, but it seems to me that if a government agency gives leadership, stating that it would like to get work going in a particular field—and there are certainly a great many fields that one could select—and that it is ready to put up money for it, substantial amounts of money, it seems to me that sort of leadership could produce results.

I do not see why it could not be possible to interest some scientists in the work, get them going and, if necessary, get some sort of an institute set up to provide them with facilities for their work. I think this is the kind of thing that hon. members on this side of the House are interested in. I would not suggest that it be undertaken in substitution for anything that the government is now doing in the way of making grants available for specific projects, but I think the government could very well consider, possibly in co-operation with other governments, giving leadership in specific fields. One field that comes to mind is the old field of arthritis research. I notice the government has a grant for the Canadian Arthritis and Rheumatism Society—it is a grant of $15,000. I have heard it said, and I believe that it is true from evidence I have seen before the Kefauver commission in the United States and elsewhere, that if the amount of money spent by the public on quack remedies in North America were spent on research on arthritis, it is more than likely that cures could be found—or at any rate that effective remedies to at least reduce the suffering caused by this scourge could be found.

This is a field, among many others, where I think governments could give leadership by making funds available, and actively trying to enlist the interest of scientists, working through, of course, the voluntary organizations now in the fields. I think there is a big area there.

I am surprised that the hon. Minister's advisers have been so discouraging to him. I would agree with them if they are trying to prevent him from reducing funds he now has in mind for projects that may be submitted, but I would hope that the government might consider making more funds available over and above what they now have in mind to initiate and encourage large-scale research programmes—I will avoid the words "crash programmes" because I think in this field it is not appropriate, but large-scale concentrated programmes trying to find answers to specific problems.

I would suggest that the hon. Minister might discuss this again with his advisers—not in terms of transferring money now provided for other purposes, but in terms of making additional money available for a specific project of that kind. I think it is also a project that the government might discuss with other jurisdictions. I think if there were a pooling of funds by several governments we could get an amount of money that might very well produce a significant result in a relatively short period of time.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to tell the hon. member for Woodbine that there is, in some measure at least, a pooling of funds. This is one of the advantages of the federal health grants, with the provincial grants for research, because these grants are all gone over very thoroughly by the Dominion council. This is an advisory body to the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare and is comprised of the deputy Ministers of Health of every province, and certain other advisers. But they constitute the advisers to the federal Minister on these matters, and look at the whole broad picture as it applies to the Dominion of Canada, as well as it might be correlated with research going on outside of our boundaries.

The hon. member for Dovercourt pointed out there are no geographic boundaries to research. All of these things are taken into consideration, and it might well be that if a project is turned down by our advisory council because of some exceptional work being done somewhere else, that is known to the advisory council.

I would also point out again, sir, the unwisdom, the infeasibility, of governments stimulating research. Indeed, I think this would put a very unnecessary and very undesirable hobble upon research. Fleming and Floyd were not looking for penicillin.

Mr. Bryden: That is just an ancient Tory evasion.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Fleming and Floyd were not looking for penicillin when they found it. The United States got into the deal when they found this gave promise, and they got into the production of it because we were in the throes of a world war where infection could decimate the military strength of a nation far more quickly than could bullets.

When the University of Toronto found the culture medium upon which Salk vaccine for poliomyelitis was grown, they were doing certain research in cancer. One could go on through the whole gamut of medical research. Many things that are looked upon as wonders today come about completely by accident, and this is why —

Mr. Bryden: But many also came about because people were looking for them. It is quite true: When you start on a research project, you never know for sure what you are going to turn up. It is not true that nothing has ever been discovered when people were deliberately looking for it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, no! I am not trying to tell this to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, but I am trying to point out that this demonstrates the folly of believing that governments should give leadership. We provide the wherewithal, and I am assured that no project, that is acceptable to or passed by the advisory council, has been turned down for lack of funds. This, I think, is the keynote; and as long as the wherewithal is made available to the scientists who are inspired to do the research then there should be no difficulty in it.

Banting was not urged by government or by his university. Indeed, as I recall the history of Banting, he was quite often rebuffed by his university, but he was inspired to go after this. And because he had a dream, he had a faith, and he followed it through to a successful conclusion in his field. Other scientists have had a dream, and have been following that dream and have come up with something entirely different and unrelated to what they were looking for in the first place.

I believe, sir, that the function of government is to provide the wherewithal; and, to this end, we will continue to keep on asking you for additional monies for research as the need arises.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a few remarks in regard to this, because research in this field is going to be most important and I, quite frankly, look to the present hon. Minister of Health as one of those who has done more than most in this field. He has got the reputation of being interested in research. But I think it is most unfortunate that he feels that the leadership does not come from the government, except in supplying funds. Well, even if we agreed with him at that point, I think our trouble is that not enough funds are available.

I think, in the overall picture in Canada, it is not the fault of this government here in Toronto, or the fault of the present administration; the fault is that we have been poor in research largely because the public have not been aroused. We have not had particular leaders who have had an interest, such as Roosevelt, in a certain field; nor have we been fortunate in having the large foundations, men with wealth who have made the funds available.

I think, in comparing what the Americans have done and what we have done, in many respects it can be blamed on private enterprise not making the funds available it is necessary that we should have. That is why government in Canada is going to have to show more leadership than it otherwise would have done. We have to ask this question.

The hon. Minister has mentioned Banting. Now, Dr. Banting is the only Canadian in 60 years to receive a Nobel peace prize for research in a health field, yet small countries like Belgium and Sweden have received seven or eight Nobel prizes. So we have to ask ourselves: Why is it that a country, with the brains that we have, exports the number of doctors we export? We export 250 doctors a year to the United States. We would like to ask why, if these things are happening here, are we not doing something. I would say Ottawa is not leading. Perhaps they may say, "Well, under The BNA Act, it is up to the provinces." Well, certainly, it is up to the provinces. A province with the wealth of Ontario should do far more for research than we have.

For example, in the United States, of all the monies in research, in all the different fields, 60 per cent is spent in health; whereas in Canada, of all the money for research spent—of all the monies we have for research in all the fields combined—we only spend 20 per cent in this field. My hope is that the hon. Minister of Health who, in speeches in the past few years, has shown a real interest in this field, will prevail upon the government to allow more funds to be spent in research.

During the past year, I had an opportunity to see some of the drug factories here in Toronto and Montreal, and whenever I would go to one of these plants I would always ask this question: "How do you keep your personnel?" And their answer was: "We do not. Once they become highly trained, or become well known, the American companies offer more money and down south they go." The other problem also is that so many of these large companies are owned by the Americans, so that if any real research is being done, the Canadian is automatically transferred down to the States.

So the government, if they are going to hold onto Canadian brains and stop this export of brains, are going to have to step in and offer more help to the men who are doing research.

There is one exception, and it is right here in Toronto, where the well-trained men are not going to the States and that is Connaught Laboratories. Sir, I asked this question of them; I said: "How do you hold onto your personnel?" And the answer was this: "We do not have any trouble." And their answer to why they could hold onto their personnel, their top men, was this: They let the men do the true research they want to do. In other words, they practically pick the subject they want to work on, and they pay salaries almost comparable, not quite as high as they could get in the United States in some of the large firms.

So here is an example. The Connaught Laboratories is leading the way, as it led the way in the days of Banting. I hope that the government would see to it that the where-withal, the funds, will be made available for this type of work to be expanded, because it is a shame that we, in this country, with the brains we have, with the money we have, can only win one Nobel prize in 60 years. Yet we see these smaller countries doing seven or eight times better than we do.

I think it is incumbent upon the administration, especially the administration of this province, to see to it that the money is made available and, if necessary, that we attract men from other countries, if, for example, we want to make a drive on mental health, just as the Americans made a drive on penicillin. Again, let us remember that though atomic energy may have been developed and the atomic bomb may have been developed in the laboratory, in the experimental fields by the scientists, it was Roosevelt who made the political decision that money would be spent to develop the atomic bomb. So I say that in matters of health—in any type of research as far as that goes, but where vast sums are needed—it is a political decision that will call in the brains and put them to work.

I hope that, with this in mind, the hon. Minister of Health will get more of a drive on and will not listen to some of his more conservative advisors, that he will stick to the speech he made in this House on February 12, 1959. If he sticks to that, he will be a good Minister of Health and he will ignore some of the more conservative advisors he has.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I just want to add a small postscript to this. It is only a few days ago since the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) poked fun at us for saying that the government had no plans for the '60s. He thought this was one of the greatest jokes that could possibly have been unloaded on a government that was so well designed and well orientated and well planned and, in addition, had the vote. We cannot take this away from him. He has the vote of the people, which was given on September 25. But surely, Mr. Chairman, it makes some sense to say that, in the field of medical research, in the field of education—the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) is not here this afternoon—in the field of industrial research—the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) is not here either—that with our limited resources—and in the broad picture our resources are very limited, our budget is perhaps $1 million or less, is less than one-third of the federal budget, it is a fractional amount, a tiny fractional amount of the American budget—but with our limited resources, if we had some sort of plan to embark on in research in the health field, in the educational field, and the industrial field, surely we could spend our money most wisely.

I do not think the hon. Minister need apologize for a moment about the sentiments that he admits he expressed in this House five and a half years ago. I think he was on the right track then, and as my colleague, the hon. member for Parkdale says, Mr. Chairman, he perhaps retracted from that point of view in the last several years because some of his more "small c" conservative colleagues have prevailed upon him, for reasons best known to themselves and himself, to take a different approach.

I would have hoped that I would have heard from him, when he introduced his estimates, that the primary objective of his department would be to do research. I would hope—and we have not heard the hon. Minister of Education, and I hope I am wrong but I do not think we are going to hear it from him—that he is going to devote a very substantial amount of his effort to research. And I would hope that we would hear from the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, that he is going to devote some time and effort and some of our valuable dollars to research. But when we bemoan the fact that this government does look to the '60s, we talk about this government sitting back on its haunches and having no desire to experiment, no desire to find new knowledge, this is the sort of thing we condemn. Research and new knowledge are the things that we need. And this is the contribution that we in Ontario can make and this is the contribution that we in Ontario would hope that the hon. Minister of Health would direct us to in his department.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I wish I had the vocabulary that the hon. member for Downsview has. I think if he could get some of his medical friends to take him through the operating theatres of some of our big hospitals in downtown Toronto and see the original work that is being done there—away out in advance of the world—not of Canada, not of the United States, but of the world. There are men coming from all over the world to see the work that Dr. Bill Bigelow is doing and Dr. Mustard, not only in cardiovascular surgery but in all types of surgery and neurosurgery. There are those who are coming to see our Ontario hospitals, to see the experiments we are doing here in Ontario. The unfortunate thing—it reminds me of what a professor used to say, "You know, you boys are so busy searching for nightingales that you can't see the sparrows that are all around you." The work that Ontario has done in every field of medical and scientific research is outstanding and is accepted as such by the world, by those who know.

Now, it was not any "small c" conservative advisors who caused me to change my thinking. It was just that I was in too great a hurry and had not thought through the problem, did not understand the problem. And men to whom I listen, from whom I seek advice are, as I have pointed out to you, among the most outstanding medical and surgical brains on this continent. And if I were to fly in the face of the advice that these men gave me, of course I would deserve the censure of this House, I would bring Ontario's fine reputation down into the mud and I have no intention of doing that. I repeat to you, Mr. Chairman, my responsibility is to urge my government and the federal government to provide the available money. The scientists know the money is available, they know we are seeking these projects because they have told us that these are the things they are after, but until a man or a woman gets the idea, gets the inspiration—and I must say that this may sound a bit philosophic, but the scientists must get an inspiration to go out hunting for something that may never have been heard of, just a germ of an idea in his or her mind. Until—

Mr. Trotter: Why would so many leave the country?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They leave the country for reasons best known to themselves. Why did I leave my country? Because I knew this great country was a country of opportunity and could give me more than the country I left. Where would this great country of ours be, where would this great province of ours be if we had all stayed home? I say to you we believe that this country would give us a chance, a chance it has given us, and it is our duty to repay it by making use, good use, of the opportunities presented to us. Those men and women who go to other countries—it is not a one-way street—there are those coming from other countries to ours. There are scientists—the hon. member for Downsview said to us just a few moments ago, "Research and medical science, all kinds of science, knows no geographic boundaries". And this is why men and women travel. They do not know boundaries. They may be in the United States today, they may be in Moscow in a week. And this is happening. Indeed, some of the stories the researchers tell me read like the greatest novel, the greatest fairy tale you ever read. Because this is a fantasy. This is how the germ of an idea starts, Mr. Chairman. And these are the things that we think we have to encourage. But if we make it possible for them to have their project well considered by their peers, and then find the wherewithal to do it, then we will get somewhere in research.

Mr. Singer: We want the hon. Minister to be brave again.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am still brave.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister in his explanation to us—I agree there is flexibility and I want to just pinpoint this, if I could, with a researcher whom I had the privilege of knowing and who unfortunately died about three weeks ago, Dr. Ostapchuk, who was doing a study of neurology, I think; it was beyond me in a sense but all I know was that he was suggesting from pure research, which he was doing, he was discovering, he felt, a method by which schizophrenia and other mental illnesses, might be caused by poison in the blood. And when I think of the significance if he had actually proved this, pinpointed it, the significance of treatment to thousands, not only in our province, but across the world, and also in terms of dollars of what this would have meant in connection with closing these overcrowded institutions. I say, Mr. Chairman, I think of the time when he first came to Ontario. In a sense I apologize in one way that I am talking about some of the things that he talked about to me personally but I think it reflects perhaps a difficulty that I know some others have had, that he came and felt first of all a real difficulty in getting scientific knowledge from across the world. He wanted translations. He himself was a scholar who spoke a number of languages. Yet he wanted to know what his co-partners were doing throughout the world. And I wonder if we have an international library with respect to this or whether it is done on a haphazard basis.

Secondly, he had to wait with apprehension and fear as he presented his case through various bureaucratic channels which exist in universities and on up to the government. He had concern about whether he would be permitted to travel, to go to some conferences. And I would say this, that I think that this man was provided an opportunity and was provided—I am taking an example of one who was given the opportunity—but as I remember spending evenings talking with him and thinking of the exciting advent that will take place of opening the doors for people who suffer from mental illness if we could only just give him every help. I thought to myself that surely rather than taking pride in buildings—and now they are building a big institution up in Lindsay or somewhere—this is where we should be concentrating our monies in helping this man and giving him great credit. I read, sir, just recently an examination of why scientists have gone to the States. Some of them admit very blatantly they have gone because of the financial remuneration that they will get in the States which they would not get here. But a number of others say that it is because there is no enhancement for the researcher in our society. Now I suggest this is partly public but again I think it is also government. I think that what we hope, and I am sure the hon. Minister also hopes is that something that Ontario can do is to become a Mecca for research and I think we have a proud record. Our concern is when you look at the proportion of your funds which you have given to research—and I realize apportioning funds is a tough situation and I am quite sure the hon. Minister had to battle with Treasury and the other Scrooges that he has, and that he probably wanted to give more money. We are behind the hon. Minister in trying to get more money so that Ontario, in the field of medical research and betterment for humanity throughout the world, will always hold its head high.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on item 24. I would like to ask a question or two of the hon. Minister. Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation—I see where there is an increase of some $367,000 over the previous year. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if the addicts who are subjected to drugs are on the increase. Could he answer that question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer the hon. member about the drug addicts, but alcoholics are on the increase—this is a worldwide experience. I do not believe that it could be said, with any degree of accuracy, that drug addicts in Ontario are on the increase. I think, with treatment being more readily available to them, it is more easy to get them out. But again I have to point out that treatment is a pretty hopeless situation.

Mr. Bukator: To pursue that a bit further, Mr. Chairman, I was wondering whether the research foundation has considered giving—and I know I am treading on very thin ice at the moment, I want the hon. Minister to know that I am not speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party, I am speaking on my own behalf and I am just asking questions. I have not established in my own mind that this may be the proper thing to do. But do the research foundation and the doctors of this country feel that drug addicts should get drugs administered free to eliminate the racketeers, to eliminate the drug peddlers, to stop this trafficking in drugs? I am wondering whether there has been any research done in that department.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, a very great deal. This brings up the question that we covered, I think, very thoroughly last session, if you recall, because at that time we had Lady Frankau from England here. In fact, she was here visiting us during the time my estimates went through last year. I was very interested in what had come to be called the British system, and I was very much surprised to learn at first hand from Lady Frankau that there was no such thing as a British system. British doctors prescribe drugs for addicts as they feel they need them during the process of withdrawal.

But if we have in mind, when we think of this matter, the continuing of providing drugs, narcotics or addiction drugs for addicts—I do not think that any doctor would accept that. This is not good medical practice. A doctor must have one thing in mind when he is trying to treat an addict, and that is to work for the day when that addict will no longer be dependent on drugs.

This actually can be done in Ontario. Studies have been conducted—I suppose they might be considered research—and there is a great deal of controversy relative to the value of this method. I think as many oppose it as favour it. What the final decision should be I think no one with wisdom less than a Solomon could decide. I believe, in essence, in it being done, in certain measures. I said in this House that, while I was still in active practice, this was my belief; and I believe I was acting quite within my rights as a physician when I treated patients in this way.

In rural Ontario we do not often run into drug addicts, but we do run into the odd one. I always believed, from the time I began to practise, that this was my right as a physician—not to continue peddling drugs but to treat the patient with the idea that I was aiming toward the day when they would be completely withdrawn from him. I believe that this is accepted as good medical practice.

Mr. Bukator: May I pursue this a bit further, Mr. Chairman? I appreciate the comments of the hon. Minister. He has taken the proper attitude, I believe, in his administering the drug when it was necessary in his opinion, because these professional men are men of integrity and I do not question what the hon. Minister did, for a moment. But if this were to catch on, am I not on the right track in thinking that we may eliminate the drug trafficking we have in this country when we read the papers and see where there are millions of dollars' worth of drugs smuggled into the country to put men on "easy street" who addict our youngsters in high schools—and certainly they must have a place to peddle it or they would not be bringing drugs into the country—but the fact is that if the doctors would take over the administering of drugs when necessary, this market may be eliminated, and it would prevent the youngsters being hooked, so to speak.

I feel that there is a great opportunity for research there. I feel, too, that, since these people have to go out and steal hundreds and thousands of dollars to get the drug, I would think that the hon. Minister would be rendering a service to the public also, because I understand that they get up in the morning looking for an opportunity to steal something so that they—on and off somewhere—can get another needle. I feel, too, that if the doctors were privileged or authorized to administer the drug, the theft would be done away with, at least. I realize that one cannot give them drugs, and continuously keep them as drug addicts, but knowing where they are, Mr. Chairman, there may be a definite possibility that they could withdraw from the habit.

We have a tremendous industry—racketeering—going on throughout the province, and the country as a whole, and I come from an area that was rapped over the knuckles not too long ago—the Niagara Falls riding—and being the member for that great riding—as the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Morningstar) would say—I feel that possibly this trafficking across the border could be stopped. This is worth looking into, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would advise the hon. member that this is by no means a closed book, that this is all part of the problem facing the addiction foundation, and is very much in their minds. What specific research is going on I would not be equipped to say, but I do know that this is very much a part of their programme and a part of their concern.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask, under the vote to Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation: Could the hon. Minister tell me how many beds there are in Toronto within the foundation available for women patients?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The foundation, in its own plant, only has 15 beds for this. We have beds for drug addicts at temporary quarters at the old hospital for sick children. There are two beds in each of the big general hospitals in downtown Toronto specifically set aside for that. They have asked us now for a block of 20 beds in one of our Ontario hospitals to be set apart for this function, and we are in the process of trying to organize this for them.

Mr. Thompson: I take it, then, that the hon. Minister feels that the number of beds are inadequate and is working toward an increase in beds. As I understand it, about six months ago at the foundation, for women suffering from alcoholism there were only three beds available. I assume that the hon. Minister is steadily hoping to get more and more beds available for this disease.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is right, Mr. Chairman, and in plans that are now being prepared for the new foundation building on the campus, there will be 100 beds provided.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to ask: I noted that the hon. Minister handles the health service for the Ontario Civil Service, and I notice, in reading a number of newspapers, that there are certain industries which take great pride in the forward look they take with respect to their employees. I am thinking, for example, of the Bell Telephone Company which has very wonderful treatment centres and treatment policies for employees who suffer from alcoholism.

I think of other industries where, when they see some young girl who perhaps is working as a clerk and who shows signs of early schizophrenia or some type of neurotic disorder, they have a set-up, either psychiatrists or psychologists, but some unit which can help and advise these employees if they would come to them—except that it is very confidential, and it is difficult to get an employee to expect that she needs this kind of help; but they have these facilities.

I would assume that the hon. Minister, with his interest in establishing mental health across the province suggesting that we have to try to move in before mental health reaches the stage where we put people in institutions, would be as forward in his health clinic as any industry. I would ask the hon. Minister: How many psychiatrists, and just what is the relationship that takes place, say, for a young girl who is showing neurotic signs and needs help and who is part of the civil service?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This service we have set up within the government, and under the aegis of the department, of course is supposed to be an exemplary industrial type of medical service. An exemplary industrial type of medical service, of course, is to provide initial treatment, firstly, for employees who become sick on the job. We do not pretend to carry on the treatment of patients. In other words, we do not maintain a panel of patients.

The Civil Service Health Service is not a family doctor to all of the government employees. We see the employee and if, in our opinion, or the doctor's opinion, that patient will need longer treatment, or different treatment, he is referred to the family physician. In the event they have not got a family physician then our health service makes it its business to see that they are referred to a practising physician. In other words, we are not conducting a service in opposition to the private practice of medicine.

In the event of one who is showing emotional disturbance, if he has a psychiatrist of his choice, he will be referred to that psychiatrist. Failing that, he will be referred to the out-patients department of the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital for care.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, is this the vote where I could make a few comments about chiropractors? Would that be proper?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few comments regarding that profession, because I have benefited personally from their services and I think and I feel that they are perhaps being treated a little unfairly. I know that the profession, the chiropractors' profession, has performed in the past, a very great health service in Ontario and certainly across Canada and even in North America, as far as that is concerned. The point I want to make is that it seems there is a certain amount of opposition to the profession from the College of Surgeons and Physicians. Now this is understandable because there is a certain element of competition here and it is therefore readily understood. It remains that these people have not had the proper recognition and the proper place in the health service field. I think they are still regarded by many, at least in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, as quacks. They do not seem, in their opinion, to provide the service. Perhaps it is tempered somewhat by the fact that there is competition here, but nevertheless a lot of people across the country, mainly doctors, think that these people are quacks.

I must point out that they do have to go to school for four years; I believe the college down here in Toronto is one place where they can be trained for this profession. At the end of that time they have to go through a very rigorous and very difficult examination in order to get their certificate to practise chiropractic. They have tried to more or less discipline their own organization and their own profession. They have certainly tried to weed out these people who are unorthodox and perhaps have done the profession a great deal of harm in the past and they have also tried to promote their profession, and in these two things I think they have been rather successful. One indication of the progress that has been made is the fact that they have increased their services by 300 per cent to the workmen's compensation board in the past six years. Also, the value in terms of dollars of their services across the province, the current value, is now $6 million and that is quite a sizeable amount. So we can readily see that there has been quite a growth, quite a trend in recognizing the place of these people in our health service field. So it seems to me that it is rather unfair that they should be refused, in a great many cases at least, the use of tax-supported institutions such as laboratories and hospitals. I understand that these people are in most cases at least, refused admission to practise in such institutions.

In the Noble report, I believe it admits that the restriction exists in The Medical Act in Ontario, which says that the exclusive rights to use the title "doctor" remains with the medical profession. I think we have a good point here because I think it is rather obvious that this should not be an exclusive designation of any one profession, but rather a designation of academic achievement. Now, most chiropractors in the province, indeed perhaps across Canada and even wider than that, certainly are endeavouring to serve the needs of the people. I do not think there is any question about that and most jurisdictions in North America have recognized this fact and have said to them in the form of legislation, "Go ahead, we are with you," and I believe that 87 per cent of the states and the provinces in North America have brought in legislation so that these people can be recognized and can practise in an orthodox manner.

I know of one man, and I just cite this one example; I am sure it can be duplicated many times across the province. This one chap had a back ailment. He went to a doctor and the doctor proceeded to treat him. He eventually saw that he was not getting anywhere and took him to a hospital. He was put in traction. He was there for approximately two weeks and then he was brought home and the doctor told him that he had to wear a corselet. He wore a corselet for something like another three weeks. Admittedly the pain was gone but the fact remained that the doctor had not got to the cause of the problem. In desperation the doctor said to him, "I cannot do any more for you. I am sorry." He wrote out the name of a chiropractor on a piece of paper, shoved it across the desk and said to him, "You go to that fellow, do not tell anybody I sent you." This is the kind of dealing that I suggest exists between the medical profession and the chiropractor. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to the hon. Minister, that these people certainly are deserving of recognition because they do perform a very vital function in the health service field. There are some things that the chiropractors can do, that the medical profession cannot do and certainly vice versa.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 701 carried?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if this is the place to raise a matter in respect to the deaf and hard of hearing.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They do not come under my department.

Mr. S. Lewis: What about medical facilities? Psychological and psychiatric treatment? Might they not come under The Department of Health?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: If they need psychological and psychiatric treatment they would be under the hospitals. This is available for them in hospitals, but the deaf as a group are the responsibility of The Department of Education.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Chairman, if I might just follow this up a little bit further. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if any indication is forthcoming as to whether the chiropractors would be included in any medical care plan that the government proposes?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Under the first steps in our proposed medical care insurance plan, sir, the answer would be, no.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister would say anything about optometrists. Would they be included in the first step?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In my own thinking they would be included but this is entirely dependent upon the recommendations made to us by the committee now sitting on this bill.

Mr. Whicher: In the first vote, Mr. Chairman, where is the committee for Medicare; under what vote?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Item four of vote 701.

Mr. Whicher: Well, it certainly seems to be a very small amount, $10,000.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would advise the House that we will in this present fiscal year go over the vote by at least $68,000. We have to get a special warrant to defray these expenses. The cost today is $78,000.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like at this time, if it is in order, to make some reference to a group of people who I think are among the neglected citizens of Ontario. The group I refer to consists of the epileptics. As far as I have been able to determine, there is simply no public programme of any kind to assist epileptics, no provision or sheltered workshops for them where they need them, no provisions that I know of for providing them with what appear to me to be the specialized type of treatment they require, no provisions to assist them in finding employment, which is perhaps one of the most serious causes of the difficulties of a great many epileptics.

I know of a young man in my own constituency, as a matter of fact, whom I just met recently, who seems an intelligent, capable young fellow. He is 23 years old and is at present taking a training course at the rehabilitation centre on Jones Avenue. He is very discouraged; he has made literally dozens of applications for employment and whenever the fact comes up that he suffers from epilepsy that is the end of his application. This is a man of 23 years of age who almost feels that there is no place in this world for him. I do not believe his disability is as disabling as prospective employers seem to think. He will on occasion, as I understand it, "black out". He does not go into some of the more severe seizures that some people are afflicted with.

Epileptics, as far as I can make out, are faced with a wall of prejudice which is almost impossible to penetrate. We have legislation in this province which is designed to reduce as far as possible, discrimination in employment on account of racial origin, colour, creed and so on, but there does not seem to be any effort of any kind, educational or otherwise, to reduce prejudice and discrimination with regard to a person who is unfortunate enough to suffer a disability which is by no means 100 per cent disabling, and may actually cause very little interference in the proper performance of a job.

I pretend to be no expert on this matter, but I know of no programmes of any kind other than the general welfare programmes which may in some cases be available, for the assistance of epileptics, either in assisting them to find relief from their disability or in assisting them, which is probably a big factor in helping them to overcome their disability in finding employment. I think at least to some extent this is a matter that could properly come under the jurisdiction of The Department of Health. I know of no department that accepts any responsibility in the field and I would like to put it to the hon. Minister that it is desirable that some sort of public programme should be developed specifically related to epileptics, and to assist them, both with their health problems and with their larger problems of adjustment to the community and, more particularly, in obtaining employment within the community. I do not know if the hon. Minister has any comments to make on that but I think it is a matter that should be taken under consideration by the government at the earliest possible opportunity.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister or anyone else, what can anyone do for the young man that I am talking about who is one case, I suppose, in hundreds? A young man 23 years of age, capable and qualified, with only a minor physical disability, and yet there is no place for this young man to get a job. His attitude now is that he is just unwanted in this society.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have to say, Mr. Chairman, that what the hon. member says is very accurate. The majority of epileptics, of course, are treated by their family physician. Many of them are treated in our own mental health clinics. The severe or the uncontrollable ones, uncontrolled or difficult to control, are treated in our own Ontario hospital at Woodstock which specializes in the care of epileptics. They are eligible for training, of course, under all the various schemes that are available as the hon. member points out. But then when they go for a job things are different. This is supposed to be one of the services provided through the special services branch of the National Employment Services; I understand they do find positions for some. Here again, if an employer says "We are not going to have you"—I would hesitate to say that it is a discriminatory attitude. I think it is an attitude of fear on the part of the employer; and I think it is probably well grounded fear in the mind of the average employer. Suppose this patient, or this person, does take a seizure and is working around some dangerous equipment, and might be very severely hurt. This is a possibility. Even if he only "blacks out". A patient taking grandmal seizures would have great difficulty getting into a situation of that kind. A patient "blacking out" could become very seriously hurt. And I believe this is the root cause of the attitude of the average employer who hesitates to take them on.

In our own department, in our own rehabilitation branch, those who are controllable and who are able to be discharged from our hospital, we try to look after. We go a little further than many rehabilitation people do, we try to find placements for them. My philosophy is that often the most difficult step for the rehabilitatee to take is just crossing the threshold to ask for a job. Sometimes I am told that if my people are there just to open the door, to give the applicant the feeling that someone is behind him, to support him, then he plucks up enough courage to go in and ask for the job. We have been able to place a few but I have to say in honesty that this has been one of the most difficult groups that we have encountered, for whom to find placements.

There are discussions going on between my department and one of the larger voluntary organizations at the present time and the discussions have not proceeded far enough for me to give the House any more definite information about it. But this is one of the groups about whom we have talked—superficially it is true, but at least we have begun discussions about them—and, while I do not want to appear optimistic, I am not entirely pessimistic about the outcome of these discussions either.

Mr. Bryden: There is just one observation I would like to make with regard to the comments of the hon. Minister. That is that there are a great many areas of employment that do not involve any exposure to dangerous machinery or equipment. I would agree with the hon. Minister that it would be insane to put a person suffering from epilepsy in proximity to dangerous machinery or machinery of any kind, because, after all, all machinery is dangerous to some degree.

To revert again to the example I was talking about, this young man is trained in office skills, and office employment, with very rare exceptions, is quite safe employment. I think the point the hon. Minister made of having someone to open the door may be part of the answer to the problem, but if I understand what he said, this applies only to the people who have been in the province's own hospitals. Undoubtedly those people need help. But the person who has been fortunate enough that he has never had to go to a provincial hospital also needs help. He needs help, perhaps, to give him confidence, but I think there is also an educational job to be done on the employers.

Employers have jobs available in which there is no danger to the employee and yet they hesitate to employ these people. The sort of answer this young man has received is along the following lines: "I—the employer—have a large number of women working in this office, and if you went into an epileptic seizure it would be very distressing to them." Well, perhaps it would be, I do not know; but surely this man should not be barred from employment everywhere because of, in his case, the very small possibility that he would suffer a seizure that would be distressing to anyone other than himself.

I should think that other employees would, or could be, encouraged to understand the problems of a fellow human being. And I would be doubtful if they, in fact, would themselves object to the employment of this person. The problem is that the employers themselves are so frightened that their other employees might be adversely affected that they never give it a try.

I would suggest that the type of service, that now appears to be available on a limited degree for people discharged from provincial hospitals, should be expanded for the benefit of other epileptics, to give them confidence and also to explain the situation to employers so that they overcome some of their superstitions. I think that is about the size of the attitudes of some of them. If they would realize they are not taking some sort of a freak, but they are taking a human being who is perfectly capable and rational but suffers from a disability that occasionally overtakes him. I am now, of course, talking about people who do not suffer from frequent large seizures—I understand that they would be in hospitals—I am talking about people who are not likely to suffer any serious seizure in the normal course of events, and it would seem to me that some sort of an educational programme is very much in order.

Also I would suggest that there should be a sheltered workshop type of programme for those who are sufficiently disabled—and there are many in this category, too—that it is not feasible to put them into ordinary employment. We have, at least to a limited degree—not adequately, in my opinion—but we have sheltered workshops for blind people, we have them for people suffering from other physical disabilities, but as I understand it we have nothing at all for epileptics. This would surely be an important item in the treatment and rehabilitation of these people.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, since the hon. Minister has said that under No. 4 we may discuss Bill No. 163—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, I did not say that. Medical care is not under discussion at the present time. I said only that the accounts were being paid for under this item.

Mr. Troy: Well, can we discuss the advisory committee under this?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Troy: I wonder if we would be allowed to speak our mind then in some other subject under the Budget debate?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is right.

Mr. Troy: All right, because I have much to say about it.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue the question that was dealt with by my friend, the hon. member for Woodbine, because I did question it in the epileptics' association in Hamilton and they have asked me to pursue their problem at the provincial level. I find in Hamilton that the association is made up of and administered by epileptics themselves and certainly they are confused in what they are trying to do. They do not seem to be able to get any aid or attention at any source. I do not feel I can agree with the hon. Minister when he says that this is one of the hardest groups to deal with as far as rehabilitation and employment are concerned. I feel that if the will was there we could bring about a procedure that would help them.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: May I permitted to speak on a point of order? If the hon. members infer that I stated that the patients themselves were difficult to work for, this is entirely wrong. What I hoped I could convey to the hon. members was that they are a very difficult group to place, not through any fault of their own, but because of the things that the hon. member's colleague pointed out.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes. Well, I did not misunderstand and I do not infer that the hon. Minister said that. I did meet with a case worker from The Department of Health—I believe that is where she was from—with the executive of the Hamilton Labour Council in regard to this question. We could not resolve what we were trying to do, that is, find employment for the epileptic groups because there did not seem to be the desire or co-operation between the employers and the unions, as it was said, but we felt that there was not enough emphasis put on the particular problem. I know it has been said in many circles that the trade union movement would be a drawback to taking these people into employment. I made some inquiries in regard to this problem with the trade union groups and they assured me that if a programme was developed in co-operation with employers that they would give all assistance possible to place the epileptics in sheltered employment. Of course, we realize they have to have someone with them who understands their problem, how to treat them if they go into a fit at a particular time, and they have to be kept away from machinery. But this is one problem, finding them employment. I think we could do something for them in another area, that is to provide them with drugs at either a reduced cost or free, and we could provide that they get their drugs by subscription from their own doctor, from the pharmacy, and not have to go to the medical clinics attached to the hospitals. I think this is one of their big problems and if we could move in this area, I think we would be doing something for them. I do not see any reason if their own doctor who is treating them, knows their situation, if he prescribes a drug they should be able to go to the pharmacy and get that drug on prescription and at a reduced cost, the same as they can at a public health clinic.

I might ask, has the government in the area of employment, set any example in this regard? Is it the knowledge of the hon. Minister whether any department in the government is doing something in trying to rehabilitate into employment the different groups that are handicapped and particularly this group?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer to that, Mr. Chairman, is yes; I happen to know of two in my own department. But we do not ask and we have no record on the application—and I hope as long as I am Minister there never will be a record on the application. This to me would be discrimination of the worst kind and I certainly would not tolerate it. But I do happen to know that there are two epileptics on the floor on which my office is; they are controlled epileptics. I know also that we have a great many handicapped people. I say too that there are a great many handicapped people in government employ. One only needs to see those who are walking around, whose disabilities are evident. And it is my knowledge that they are doing excellent work. Indeed, this I think is the finding of all employers when they finally take the step to employ them, they find that by and large the handicapped person is a good employee.

The matter of drugs is, of course, a welfare matter, the provision of monies to buy drugs is not within the compass of my department's activities, except in those cases where we have taken on these particular matters as an experimental or private project, more or less. We have not undertaken epilepsy in this regard as yet.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to return briefly to a topic that was raised by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce a few minutes ago, namely, the position of chiropractors on the health team.

I understand that in comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Huron-Bruce, the hon. Minister said it was the view of the government that chiropractic services would not be covered—at least in the early stages—of any medical insurance programme that the government envisages. Now, I will concede to the hon. Minister that you cannot get any group of doctors together in which you do not usually find a fairly sharp cleavage on this issue. I found that even among doctors I normally have a considerable area of agreement when we approach these matters.

I would like to say to the House that through our Medicare committee in the New Democratic Party, which is representative of doctors and others who are interested in the provision of medical services, we have looked into this rather thoroughly and in our view, chiropractic services can and should be included in a Medicare programme. I do not know what the position of the Liberal Party is at the moment. Last year, the hon. member for Huron-Bruce was quoted in the London Free Press as saying that it was not included in their Medicare policy of that date, but now they support the basic principles of the right Medicare policy and I do not know whether this is a detail that has progressed in the interval or not.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I have received considerable advice, Mr. Chairman, which does not surprise me. But let me get back to the reason that provoked me to rise and add a few words here, and that is the developments which I think justify the inclusion of chiropractic services in the Medicare programme. It is quite remarkable, actually, to note the growing public acceptance and utilization of chiropractic services. In fact, we discovered when we looked into it, that there are about 450 chiropractors in the province of Ontario and one of the interesting things about this number, is that unlike doctors, it is pretty evenly distributed across the province, in rural outlying areas, rather than being to such a great extent concentrated in the cities, as is the case with medical doctors.

But there are four or five areas indicating the extent to which there has been an acceptance of chiropractic services and some of them interestingly enough, Mr. Chairman, are government agencies. This is why I am always a bit struck at the inconsistency of the government which has one agency accepting chiropractic services and paying for them, and yet generally still appears to be opposed to the inclusion of them in an overall Medicare programme.

For example, as I suspect most hon. members of the House are aware, chiropractic services, or the services of drugless practitioners, are today accepted and paid for by the workmen's compensation board. In fact, for the years 1958 to 1962, inclusive, the amount paid by the workmen's compensation board were, in round figures, $88,000; $107,000; $110,000; $118,000; $125,000. So there is a small increase each year.

Second, Mr. Chairman, I think it is not only interesting, but extremely significant that many of the private insurance companies have now accepted, in their policies, coverage for chiropractic services. What is perhaps most significant of all is that, in most instances, they have accepted the coverage of chiropractic services without any increase in premium. In other words, they have found from experience—and I would suggest insurance companies are pretty ruthless and hardheaded on this score—that inclusion of chiropractic services does not increase the health bills; that what happens is, for whatever reason, a patient finds that he is not getting satisfaction from a doctor, he pays his next visit to a chiropractor. And, in some instances—you are constantly running into them across the province—they have found they have got some relief from the chiropractor.

Third, I think it is rather significant, and I certainly congratulate them that the Ontario Federation of Medical Co-operatives, some two years ago—if I remember correctly—at a conference in eastern Ontario, down in Lanark county, passed a resolution accepting the coverage of chiropractic services in the coverage they have organized in some 30-odd counties across the province of Ontario. I am some months out of date now, but the last time I checked with the federation's secretary five or six of these counties had moved in the intervening period, and included the chiropractic services, often without any increase in premium, because they were able to use reserves they had.

Finally, I would hope that the personal experience that I had with a doctor, who has since risen to pretty important heights in the medical field in the province of Ontario, might give a clue to some mellowing on the part of the medical profession with regard to chiropractors. Almost exactly a year ago, in the month of March, I happened to take part in a panel sponsored by the Guelph Labour Council, discussing the Medicare issue. One of the doctors, at that time on the panel, in fact, the official spokesman for the Ontario Medical Association, was Dr. Donald Atkinson of Waterloo. Some two months later, he became the youngest president of the Ontario Medical Association. In the course of a question period, after a fairly lengthy panel discussion when one of the trade unionists in the Guelph area rather vigorously presented his case with regard to medical associations' prejudices concerning chiropractors, the reply of Dr. Atkinson, was rather carefully—I do not want to misrepresent his reply or his position—could be summed up in this way: That in his view, in the next four or five years, there was going to be a rather significant change in the attitude of the medical profession.

I hope this is an accurate glimpse, from the man who now heads the OMA, of some mellowing among the doctors in this connection.

A further point that I think is rather interesting, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that the cost involved is relatively small in the overall picture. Now I know the hon. Minister and I have been firing shots at each other on the hustings and elsewhere, on the cost of Medicare in the province of Ontario. He is certain that the figure will be in the range of $200-plus million but that is not the figure we have come up with. Ours is more in the range of $160 to $165 million. But let us put that argument to the side for the moment.

The significant thing is that the amount of money that was spent in the last year in chiropractic services in the province of Ontario is estimated at being in the range of $6 million and this includes costs for X-ray services. In any integrated presentation of health services, I think you could eliminate a great deal of overlapping and costs so that significantly less than $6 million is the amount that is involved. Once again, I submit that because of the growing utilization of chiropractic services and the growing acceptance of them, in our view they should be included in any overall plan.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I think that the main problem you have, when considering the inclusion of chiropractic services, is the fairly widespread allegation that chiropractors go beyond the limits within which they are legally entitled to practise. Now, at the moment, I personally am a little uncertain as to just how sound is this allegation. What I can say, from our own investigations, when we were pretty forthright in presenting this widespread criticism to spokesmen for the official association of the chiropractors, is that they themselves want to make certain that this kind of thing does not take place, that in any occasion that has been drawn to their attention, when one of their members is practising beyond the legal limits that are allocated to a chiropractor, that they have taken action. In some instances they have deprived them of their legal right to practise. In other instances there have been various forms of warning or of discipline.

But the point I am just making is that the association itself claims—and I have no reason to doubt their word—that they are willing to co-operate to the full to make certain that chiropractors are not practising beyond the limits allocated to them and therefore that the dangers that allegedly exist can be eliminated. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, by way of documentation of a conclusion that we have come to from our studies, that the time has long since passed when the rather deep-rooted prejudice in the medical profession towards including chiropractors on the medical team should be re-examined and I would hope that the hon. Minister in the course of his further consideration of Medicare after the Hagey commission report is made, might do this himself, perhaps with the possibility of moving from the outset with a broad health service rather than with a more restricted one.

Vote 701 agreed to.

On vote 702:

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister of Health would tell the House if it is the policy of his department to discontinue mental health clinics in the county health units.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is the objective at which we are aiming. As enunciated in the House last year our policy is to encourage the establishment of the mental health clinic as a part of the service provided by the general hospital. To this end we are establishing, as I announced in my opening remarks, eight such clinics this year; we established five last year; and we hope to establish five additional ones each year until the province is completely covered. We are not insisting that this be done but where, for some reason or other, there is justification for moving, we make that move; if, for instance, the health unit clinic is unable to continue, then we would urge that the clinic be moved to the general hospital.

The Brantford area was covered by the Ontario Hospital at Hamilton. There are several misstatements in the letter which has come to us apparently because of lack of correct information. The county health unit has never provided mental health out-patient services nor provided funds for such services. So this actually was a travelling clinic based in our hospital—the Ontario Hospital at Hamilton, apparently, or so I gathered—housed during its visit in the offices or some accommodation provided by the health unit, but it was not part of the health unit's programme as such. Therefore, if it is desirable to move that clinic now to one of the general hospitals in Brantford, it can be set up on a formal basis and benefit for overhead expenses under The Hospital Insurance Act. The salaries of the professional team will be provided out of my budget. This, we believe, is the better thing. It will be part, then, of the community health service.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the hon. Minister of Health has seen fit to give me some information that really I had not asked for on the floor of this House, but I do feel that I must make a further comment and draw to his attention that it is a widely held misconception that this particular mental health clinic was operated by and out of the Brant County Health Unit, because the area has enjoyed this service for well over 25 years and has come to depend on it very definitely, particularly in the field of education.

Now, as the hon. Minister himself pointed out in his opening remarks, it is of great value when young people, if they show some particular symptoms of difficulties along these lines, can be treated at the community level without any great attention being drawn to these difficulties. Now, as I say, the education system has depended on the services of the psychiatrist, Dr. Brillinger, I believe, who has been in the Brantford area for a number of years, apparently working out of the Brant County Health Unit. The withdrawal of his services has upset the citizens to the extent that a number of public meetings have been held, as perhaps the hon. Minister knows, and it was pointed out at these public meetings that no prior notification of any kind of the department's decision had been given to the health unit or to the Brantford General Hospital. Now the hon. Minister has said that these facilities would gradually be assumed by the hospital on an out-patient basis. The hospital has made it very clear that while they would be willing to do this some time in the future, they have absolutely no plan for doing that now and have taken on a very large expansion already, and cannot see it in the immediate future.

I certainly think that the citizens of Brantford area deserve a full explanation as to why they should be left without this service that they have become used to over a number of years and why co-ordination and co-operation between the department, the health unit of the county, and the hospital have broken down to such a serious extent.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, there is very definitely misinformation, misconception, here. Notification of the discontinuance of the travelling clinic was given verbally to the medical officer of health by Dr. Brillinger as early as September or October, 1963. Dr. Brillinger advised that the service would likely be curtailed on his retirement in February, 1964. A letter from the MOH dated November 29, 1963 indicates that she had been advised by Dr. Brillinger that there would be no replacement for Brantford from Hamilton after his retirement.

A letter from K. G. Muir, administrator, Brantford General Hospital, dated December 9, indicates that he had been advised some time previously of the new provisions for assistance to general hospitals providing out-patient services, and these discussions had begun in November, 1963. The present service has not been entirely discontinued, but the medical officer of health was advised on December 5, 1963 that the clinic would not be continued beyond March 30, 1964. Therefore, she did have four months' notice.

I can say that we do not intend to have this service cut off if it is at all possible to find a replacement for Dr. Brillinger. He is retired now and is just unable to do it. But there was notification, sir.

Mr. Nixon: Might I ask, Mr. Chairman, whether the main difficulty is that the psychiatrist working with the department cannot be replaced?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is the main difficulty at the present time. If we can replace the staff until such time as the hospital clinic can open, we will continue whatever service is possible to us. But it is understood now that the clinic will go to the general hospital as soon as facilities are provided.

Mr. Nixon: Just before I leave this point, Mr. Chairman—because I say it is of great importance in the minds of the people back home, and I was quoting from the press report of a special meeting held by the board of education in Brantford, when a resolution confirming this was passed and forwarded to the hon. Minister—I would also like to point out that my understanding of the new mental health service is that anyone requiring this service would have to travel to Hamilton where the nearest psychiatrist would be. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would take that as a logical supposition until such time as we can find a replacement. But I would remind the hon. member, of course, that Dr. Brillinger only attended the clinic in Brantford four days a month. Still, of course, that is better than the patient having to travel to the hospital. But I can assure the hon. member that, if we can find a replacement, we will continue the service we have been giving until such time as it takes up its permanent quarters in the new facility.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to labour the point, but I understand that there are some qualified psychiatrists working in private practice in Brantford. Is it the policy of the department to acquire the services of these professional men on a part-time basis, for the service of the public?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We do this, Mr. Chairman, on some occasions, and it is quite possible that this would be worth looking into. I will ask my staff if they have looked into this.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, in section 5 of this vote there is a missing digit. Is that three zeros as I presume; what is it—$6,000?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I do not understand what the hon. member means—

Mr. Troy: Well—Special Training of Public Health Personnel, etc., zero, zero, zero?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I am looking. It should be $6,000.

Mr. Troy: I thank the hon. Minister. I did not think that the hon. Minister would make that mistake.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I do not print it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate the concern of the people of Brant with respect to a gap in this service, because I would like to talk about the experiences I have had myself in referring people to the mental clinic.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if this could be left to discuss under the mental health vote?

Mr. Thompson: Under the mental health vote?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Please.

Mr. Thompson: Fine.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Very few of the public health units have a mental health clinic in association.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, the Metropolitan Windsor health unit is being expanded to a county-wide health unit. As the result of that expansion, will there be a loss of grants to the municipality of Windsor itself, or to the other municipalities involved, or will there be added grants to them as a result of this tremendous expansion?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: There would be added grants, Mr. Chairman, to cover the municipalities which have not before been in the unit. There will be no loss of grants to the municipality unless the population gets too great. No, they are at the top now. There will be no loss of grants to the municipality.

Mr. Newman: Right. I thank the hon. Minister.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, about this time last year the medical officer of health for Hamilton presented a plan to the reception and legislative committee of the council recommending that they bring to this body, or to the association of mayors and reeves, a plan to expand the public health units from the municipal basis to either a county or a regional basis, or even on a provincial basis. The plan was received well by the city council and did go on through the senior association.

The reasoning was that the smallness of units made it hard for them to acquire personnel because the area was limited, and the promotional potential was limited, and smaller groups were bidding for the personnel. This put the whole thing into a sort of chaotic situation. His basis for an expanded public health unit was that if it was based on a larger unit, they could set up graded classifications in the different health problems, and then this would produce an incentive for the personnel to advance to higher salaries and a little more prestige in their work.

I wonder if the hon. Minister would comment on this, as to its merits? He has had it presented to his department in the last few months.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Chairman, this submission has not yet come to me, but I am not without knowledge of it. It has been talked about periodically. I have not heard of it for some time now. We have discussed it among ourselves within the department and it is our aim, indeed we are moving in this direction now, to try to encourage some of the smaller units to come together into larger and more logical units. There are some units in the province which are too small and really cannot afford to provide a satisfactory programme even with the substantial support they get from government.

Steps are already going on in this direction but Hamilton, according to our present Act, is too large to be included as part of a unit. It is beyond the limit. We give grants to municipalities of 150,000. Beyond that we have no cost-sharing programme. Again it is like so many other programmes, the door is by no means closed; and when this submission comes to us, there may be some interesting matters in it that may be worthy of our attention. It certainly will be given attention and consideration when we get it.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. From time to time we hear about the shortage of nurses for health units. Are there sufficient nurses to take care of the needs of the health units of the province, may I ask the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, since these nurses are engaged by the local units, I actually have no knowledge of what numbers there are, or what the status is. We give quite a number of bursaries to the nurses, because they are all trained under our bursary plan. There were 62 bursaries awarded in 1963 for registered nurses going on to specialize in public health nursing.

I do hear, as you apparently do, my hon. friend, through the newspapers and through the other communications media, of shortages, but I have no factual information on it. There are 1,214 public health nurses in health units, county school health services, and in health services in cities, towns, and townships in 1963; and in the ten-year period from 1953 that number has increased from 714.

Mr. Spence: You would not know whether that was a sufficient number of nurses to take care of their needs, or not?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I really could not tell the hon. member whether that is sufficient or not.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, might the hon. Minister know the comparison of salaries between dentists attached to the public health division of the department and dentists in private practice?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, I would not have any factual knowledge, because I have no knowledge of what dentists in private practice earn. Any knowledge I may have would be completely useless.

Vote 702 agreed to.

Vote 703 agreed to.

On vote 704:

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, in vote 704, publications are sent to mothers of new-born children, are they not?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On application; they are given to hospitals to distribute them. I think in the main, most OB divisions of hospitals present the book to each mother, particularly on the birth of her first baby, and oftentimes upon the birth of each baby.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, has the department ever considered publishing those books in languages other than English?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, we have considered it but we have not done it. It is a very costly matter. This is quite an expensive book, and we have not translated it so far.

Vote 704 agreed to.

On vote 705:

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, in vote 705, is that primarily dental services to schools, or to school dental services?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, the greater part is almost equally divided between that and our dental cars—our two dental cars which travel on Canadian National and Canadian Pacific lines.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a plea for the dental clinic operated in my community by the Civitan Club. The Civitan Club had to curtail their services two years ago, as a result of a ruling from the hon. Attorney General's office, preventing the raffling of automobiles. As a result of that, youngsters attending school, and primarily those on welfare, were unable to obtain the services of this clinic. The members of the Civitan Club today, I think, sell a Christmas cake to raise their funds, but this does not provide them with sufficient funds to operate the clinic on a full-time basis. Were some type of grant made available, either to them or to the local board of health, a very much needed dental service would be provided to the youngsters. These youngsters do not get dental services, I understand, from welfare. They only get extractions, if I am not mistaken; and this Civitan unit would also take care of the regular dental services required by the youngsters. Has the department ever been approached by the Civitans, or given any consideration at all to them for a grant?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, Mr. Chairman, we have had no approach from them and we have never given grants of this nature. The school programme can be operated by the public health unit in the municipality. They can, if they desire, set up a school dental service. I am not positive whether the hon. member means that the Civitan Club is giving a general service to adults and children alike, or if it is just a school service.

Mr. Newman: No, it is only the school children; and I notice, in the public accounts book, that the townships and various health units receive the grants for dental services; that is the reason for my asking.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We do not give grants of this kind; this item is for grants to municipal governments under The Public Health Act. It is either provided by contract system, where the dentists supply the equipment and materials and their time is paid on an hourly basis, or where a larger centre furnishes a clinic and the dentist receives a regular salary. That is how we allocate this grant for school dental services.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, if I may explain to the hon. Minister: The dentists here work for a very nominal fee. I think they work for $5 an hour providing these services, and the benefit that is obtained by numerous youngsters on welfare cannot really be expressed in dollars and cents. I think this could be one place where the department could give a grant, or look into the possibilities of assisting this organization in some way, if not in finance, in material for the clinic.

Mr. Troy: On this vote does the department have any other travelling clinics in addition to those of the railway-operated ones—the CNR and the CPR?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Only two, Mr. Chairman; one on each of the lines.

Mr. Troy: But other than those, that is all?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is all.

Mr. Troy: It is quite a problem in certain sections of my riding, as the hon. Minister very well knows. The CNR railway car is now out in northwestern Ontario, and I understand there is such a backlog out there that it will not be available to come east for three or four years. There are no mobile clinics other than those?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: There are just the two, Mr. Chairman, one on each line, as I say. The hon. member will probably recall, two weeks ago, that one of the weekly magazines wrote a very fine account of one of our clinics, with special reference to one dentist, formerly a well-known dentist in the city of Toronto, who on his retirement took up this work. He and his wife serve on this car, and have been doing this now for two years and doing very excellent work. This, of course, does not mean to say the other dentist and his assistant are not doing equally good work, but it just happened that Dr. Guest's clinic was written up in that particular issue. The other clinic is doing the same good work, but we have only the two, one on the CPR and one on the CNR.

Mr. Troy: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I know that the hon. Minister is doing very good work in those railway cars, and I suppose we have to go to the Red Cross. Do they provide service, too?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think they also have one car.

Mr. Troy: I thank the hon. Minister very much.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, might I ask where one discusses the situation of dentists generally in the province? Would it be under this vote?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in my estimates that has to deal with dentists as a profession. They are a self-governing body under The Dentistry Act, but all I do is give them the Act which they administer themselves, just as we give doctors The Medical Act.

Vote 705 agreed to.

On vote 706:

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a few remarks to do with the shortage of certified nursing assistants here in this city of Toronto. I believe there is a shortage throughout the province, but the shortage in Toronto has been detailed to a great extent in the report that I referred to earlier, that report being on the education and addition of personnel. The committee for survey of hospital needs took a survey of hospital needs for Toronto, which was released in August, 1963. In that report they said that, as of August, 1963, there was a shortage of 486 nursing assistants; and I think that this should be given a great deal of thought by the present administration, for two reasons.

First of all, it helps overcome to some extent the shortage of nurses and, despite the rosy picture that the hon. Minister painted of the nursing situation in Toronto, I think when he really examines the situation closely he will know that we really need a great deal of improvement in the nursing situation here in Ontario.

If there is a shortage of 486 of these nursing assistants now in the city of Toronto—this is based on using a ratio of 30 nurses for the 100 average daily patients, and this is the ratio that this committee thinks should be used in setting out the number of nursing assistants required. If they use this ratio of 30 nursing assistants to 100 average patients daily, it means that by 1970 we are going to need approximately 1,500—I believe the number is slightly over 1,500—more nursing assistants. And if more is not done in training this type of personnel, we are going to have a major crisis here in the Toronto area.

Projecting it even farther, we are going to need more than 2,000 of these nursing assistants. Any good business firm, Mr. Chairman, tries to project into the future what personnel it is going to need, and what machinery it is going to need, and I would like to remind the hon. Minister that it is incumbent upon him to see to it that more of this type of personnel is provided for the province of Ontario. Again, I say, it would be of tremendous assistance in overcoming the shortage of nurses; also many of the nursing assistants can do some of the work that the present registered nurses do not like to do, and it would therefore make the registered nurses more available to the highly technical work that is going to be needed in the future as a result of the advancement of the medical services.

Vote 706 agreed to.

On vote 707:

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, on vote 707, I would like to ask the hon. Minister if there is any danger at all to public health as a result of the increased use of detergents. The London city council one year ago adopted a resolution asking the federal and provincial Departments of Health to look into the possibility of requiring the cessation of manufacture of detergents that have less than 90 per cent biodegradable materials so that conventional sewage plants could readily cope with them. Is there any health hazard at all?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, to the best of our knowledge we can find no public health hazard. We believe that numbers of people are sensitive to detergents and get dermatitis. I do not think that this is actually any worse than it was in the case of soaps. However, one of the matters that has caused some concern about them, and about which we have been doing some research work or supporting research work, is in the matter of the sudsing—for lack of a better term. I think some of the commercials now are talking about a defrothant. I think that is in connection with one of these pills that goes down the winding tube to your stomach; but we would like to see some kind of a defrothant that could be applicable to these detergents which gum up the sewers. I believe the water resources commission is doing a good deal of research in this, and they will be in a better position to tell you about it than we are. This is not a health matter but it is a problem in regard to sewage.

Mr. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, in recent years we had thought that the matter of venereal disease was coming under control but some figures in recent years that I have seen in connection with board of health work, seem to indicate that this is on the resurgence at the present time. I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us what the situation might be in Ontario. And if it is true that more virulent forms of germs are emerging and that the disease is, in effect, increasing, what is being done to combat it?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Actually, although the incidence of venereal disease was reduced, or dropped, very briefly on the popularizing of antibiotics, when it was found that venereal disease was very amenable to treatment by those, there has been a very slight increase in the last few years. We have been rather fortunate in Canada, as well as in Ontario, that the apparent increase that has been noted in other countries has not hit us. This actually makes us a little suspicious that our case finding has been less rigid than it might be, but we have not let up in our efforts to control this. We go into every case with the same meticulous care that was observed when venereal disease was at its peak during, and following, the war years. The increase is very slight, I point out, and the total in 1963 was 56 cases, of all forms—for syphilis and all forms of newly reported cases. The reported cases rose from 36 last year to 41 per 100,000 population; but this is a rate. This is not the actual number. This is rate, 36 to 41 per 100,000 for gonorrhea and for syphilis the rise was from 12.5 to 15 per 100,000. It is not a large rise but that again does not mean to say that we are unconcerned about it, particularly because of the peculiar type that is becoming more prevalent, but I do not think it is necessary to discuss that in the House. It is a peculiar type that is very difficult to track down and very difficult actually to control. It is a big social problem and one that is receiving a great deal of attention from the venereal disease control division of my department.

Vote 707 agreed to.

On vote 708:

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, what is the function of this medical rehabilitation branch, because in my own community we happen to have an institute of physical medicine and rehabilitation that has just recently been set up? Would they be doing exactly the same type of work as what this vote would entail?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, we do not do the work here. We provide grants and the hon. members set up benefits from grants under this vote. Actually, this division was set up for two main purposes: To allocate the medical rehabilitation grant money that was available to us from the federal government; and to look after the active rehabilitation, vocational rehabilitation, of our patients who were ready for discharge from our mental hospitals and some tuberculosis sanatoria. We try to give them training, job assessment and on-the-job training rather than through sheltered workshops. Then, as I said a little while ago, we try to provide a placement service for them and a follow-up, to the end that the client will know that someone is standing behind him should he need support if the going gets a little bit rough.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, do I understand then from his remarks that included in the $240,000 salaries, would also be salary of personnel working in the five or six institutional rehabilitation agencies?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The institutes of physical medicine in those votes are slated to receive grants of $50,000, the grants to cerebral palsy centres $138,000, and a project at the University of Toronto specifically for the training of undergraduates in the rehabilitation concept, $100,000.

Mr. Newman: The hon. Minister mentioned the fact that in my own community there would be grants available or given to the institute. Now when I look at the public accounts for the year 1963, I see nothing there at all for the Windsor Institute of Physical Medicine.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The grants that the hon. member's institute would get are federal grants, I am advised, and they will not show in our public accounts. We allocate them and draw them from the federal government.

Mr. Newman: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am not sure the report from the institute the hon. member is speaking of is in yet, but, if it can qualify, it has the right to it. Look at page G-15 of the public accounts; it may be there.

Mr. Newman: G-15?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry we got sidetracked and got mixed up in our line of questioning, because I was not quite finished. The Hamilton Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation gets a grant according to the public accounts, of $12,117. Certainly this is not the total expenditure of that establishment in Hamilton. But in regard to the grant, how would one find what results we are achieving on these physical rehabilitation agencies? I have had occasion to refer persons to them and tried to follow up on their success as to their getting employment and this is where we run into problems. Are there any records kept by the hon. Minister's department as to the success and results of the different rehabilitation agencies? Can one find whether they are doing the job, how many patients are processed through the particular agency and how many jobs might be found for them, how many have been successful in being located?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, we get a statement from each one which is supported by any grants. We do not provide all of the money for their use. Our grants are allocated on a formula basis and this formula is tied very much to the monies they have raised locally. The institutes are all run by their own boards, fully chartered, and as I say, we get an annual report from them. We do not police them, we do not really set ourselves up as experts. Actually I have not the staff, nor would I consider it wise to set up a staff, to assess the usefulness of the work they are doing. The project is sound. The basic philosophy is sound. I do not know how many of them have job placement services. This is not generally accepted—unfortunately according to my thinking, it is not generally accepted as part of the rehabilitation function. I believe it is essential and, for that reason, I insisted that it be included in our departmental programme, but whether the institutes of physical medicine do it or not, I do not know. I think the institutes of physical medicine have, as their prime objective, the providing of medical treatment to prepare the client to go on to job training, job placement and so on. I do not believe that any of the institutes, as such, go beyond the business of providing the necessary treatment to prepare the client for occupation.

Mr. Gisborn: I am glad to hear the hon. Minister say that he thinks there should be a continuing process and I think this is something we should give a lot of thought to, that if we are going to do a rehabilitation job and do the job in taking the aptitude tests and finding out just what the particular person would be able to do with his handicap, then we should not stop this. And this is the big problem, we have to devise some way of a continuing process if we are going to rehabilitate a person, get him back into a position where he can do something, find out what he can do and then put a lot of concentration and emphasis on getting him placed in that occupation. Because you can spend money and a lot of time in rehabilitating the person to the point where he can do some particular thing. If he is then thrown out back on the market and does not get a chance to practise he may, in a short period of time, be right back where he started. I hope that a lot of attention to job placement for the handicapped will be given by all the departments in the future.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is only fair to point out why most rehabilitation authorities have stayed out of this field. It is because in the national employment service, a special services branch has been set up and in many instances, as I pointed out before, they do an excellent job. They are experts in the field, by and large, I am given to understand. And I have to add that, because I have no personal knowledge of it. But I do know that they put forth every effort to do the job placement, the aptitude testing and the job assessment. Abilities assessment and preparation for the job is usually done by the rehabilitation group and then they do, I know, in many instances see that the client is put in touch with the special services branch of the national employment service.

Vote 708 agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee of supply rise and report it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, may we revert to motions?

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves:

that commencing Tuesday, February 25, and on every Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday for the balance of the present session, this House will meet at two of the clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: This is simply to add an additional hour for deliberations in the Chamber.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Prime Minister tell us about night sessions for this week?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There will be night sessions on Tuesday and Thursday of this week, and starting next week we will sit at nights on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays. Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we will continue with these estimates.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.05 o'clock, p.m.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, February 25, 1964
Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Tuesday, February 25, 1964

Seventh report, standing committee on private bills, Mr. Gomme	889
Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, bill to amend, Mr. Haskett, first reading	889
Anatomy Act, bill to amend, Mr. Cass, first reading	889
Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, continued	891
Recess, 6 o'clock	928

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1964

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature today in the west gallery students from Western Technical-Commercial School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark), from the standing committee on private bills, presented the committee's seventh report which was read as follows and adopted:

As the committee has not been able to complete its work, it recommends that the time within which the House may receive reports upon private bills from the committee on private bills, be extended to March 5, 1964.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT CLAIMS ACT

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the amendments are in the main to tidy up the Act. They also include sections increasing the penalties for offences involving false evidence of insurance, and requiring those convicted of failing to produce evidence of insurance or proof of having paid the uninsured motor vehicle fee, to pay such fee.

This bill will go to the standing committee on highways and tourism.

THE ANATOMY ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Anatomy Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, this amendment is to correct a typographical error made in the publication of the last revision of the statute.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts).

Is it policy to grant licences for trapping zones to full-time employees of The Department of Lands and Forests?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, the answer is "no". The question would indicate that full-time employees might be involved. We have no knowledge of any such situation. Actually we do recruit for part-time work, particularly in the summer time, people who are skilled at trapping. But certainly there is no such policy as that indicated in the question.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the hon. Minister that he look into the application of his policy in the Parry Sound area?

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day, I beg to inform the House that the Clerk has received from the chief election officer and laid upon the table returns from the records of byelections in the years 1960 and 1962 and the general election held on September 11 and 25, 1963.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: Thirty-fourth order, House in committee of supply—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before this order is called, I wonder if I might rise on a point of order, with regard to the business of the House.

Last night just before we adjourned the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) announced certain revisions in procedures with regard to the future business of this House, namely, that on Tuesdays to Thursdays the House would meet at 2 o'clock, and on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays that there would be night sessions.

Mr. Speaker, it is an open secret around Queen's Park now that the hon. Prime Minister himself—if the information be correct—has informed the Conservative caucus that the target date for the conclusion of this session is March 25. Mr. Speaker, if that be the case this simply means that we are aiming at a ten-week session. I want to say without going into any great length on this, that we in this group protest this as strongly as we possibly can. I think it is impossible for this House to do justice to the business of this province in a ten-week period. In fact we now have the situation in which we have the biggest Budget the province has ever had and we are going to have a shorter session than a year ago, in fact a shorter session than has been the general practice for some years. We never really had a Budget debate in my experience in this House and apparently it is now going to be eliminated completely with the exception of the lead-off speakers from each party.

Mr. Speaker, it is all very well for members of the Cabinet who have months to prepare their estimates, to line up in the order of convenience to themselves and in co-operation with the hon. Prime Minister, but we in the Opposition have to be prepared for each estimate. I have come to the conclusion that hon. members on the government side, though they had many things to say by way of criticisms and suggestions to the government in the Throne Speech debate, have foregone this role already, that they are not participating, certainly in any substantial way at all, in the estimates.

I sum up my point in this way: It is humanly impossible for hon. members of this House, and particularly for the Opposition upon whom falls the major job of examining the estimates with care, to do the necessary homework, if I may describe it as such, and for this House to give the necessary time and attention to the business of a province which now has a Budget in excess of $1,300 million. The hon. Prime Minister on many occasions has said to us in the Opposition that we can sit until summer time if it is necessary to do the business of the House. The fact of the matter is that under his leadership we are moving toward a ten-week session and a target date of closing off on March 25.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is seriously in error and I want to protest it strongly right here.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have never made any such statement that I was aiming at March 25. I do not even know what day March 25 is. I have been asked and I have received comments from other hon. members—members not on the government side—about when the session would end. I do not think we can finish by Easter, to be quite frank with you. I was going over the timetable in my office this morning with my own staff, and as I see it, Mr. Speaker—with the work that lies ahead of us—we cannot possibly be finished here by Easter. Where the assumption on the part of the hon. member comes from that the Budget debate is to be disposed of, I do not know. Perhaps he has sources of information I know nothing about. I have every intention of having a Budget debate.

Frankly, it was my intention tomorrow, to leave the estimates and go to the Budget debate if speakers are available. Of course, there is no point calling a debate unless the Whips have someone who wants to speak. Then we have quite a number of second readings here—legislation that is going to take time. We will not be able to deal with the estimates of the departments on a five-days-a-week basis, it is simply impossible. There is too much work to do. If we are going to spend the ever-increasing amount of time that we do, talking over and over again these certain facets of every department, then we simply are going to have to take the time to do it.

There are quite a few hon. members from out of town, who come in here on Monday and remain in the city all week, and I think many of them would just as soon sit in this House in the evenings than have nothing to do. So we will have night sessions, and in addition we will sit at two o'clock in the afternoon, to give all the time that is necessary for the comments we must sit and listen to, concerning the very searching examination of every department which presently takes place during the estimates.

We all know that the way we examine the estimates is a relatively modern development. The practice in days past was that all the estimates of the government were passed in one night. No opportunity was given for the examination of the function of government within the department, such as takes place today.

So, if the hon. member had come to me, Mr. Speaker, and asked me in the corridor what my plans were, I would have been happy to tell him. He prefers to come in here as always and attempt to paint a picture of the government obstructing the Opposition. This simply is not so, and I think the hon. member knows it. As far as staying here until summer I can only repeat it, because I am quite prepared to stay here. I will be here anyway. I have no desire to block you.

As a matter of fact, I am continually re-arranging matters over here to suit the Opposition. So I can only say that I flatly refute everything the hon. member has said.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, our concern in this matter is twofold. In the first place, we are prepared as I have said a number of times, to stay here as long as it takes to discuss intelligently and fully the matters that come before this Legislature. Now, whether that is Easter or whenever it is, it does not really matter. The point in which I agree with the hon. member for York South is that yesterday my hon. friend announced that from now on we would start at two o'clock in the afternoon and that we would sit three out of the four nights, actually, there are available to us in the week.

I suggest to him—and I think this is the point my hon. friend makes—that it is really pouring it on a little thick when you start at two o'clock and sit until six, then start at eight and sit until 11 or 12 o'clock at night. I do not think, honestly, Mr. Prime Minister, that this is necessary in order to finish the business of this Legislature in an orderly manner. We are not, as the hon. member for York South says, the way we are going now. We will finish sometime around Easter with the programme—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I do not think we will.

Mr. Oliver: Well, I think we will, the way you are laying it on. I do not think it is necessary to finish at Easter. I think we should have sat at three o'clock in the afternoon for another two or three weeks at any rate, and not at two o'clock. I think there should not be three night sessions. There is no necessity for it. If we are running into a very long session, then maybe some restrictions could be put upon us. But we are proceeding, I suggest, in a very orderly manner and we will finish the session in, I suppose the ordinary course, less than we had last year.

Now, surely, it is not necessary at this early stage to put these restrictions on the hon. members of the Legislature. That is the way we feel about it on this side.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I can only say that if it appears everybody is worn out from these long hours they will be released. It is traditional to sit at two o'clock. We have sat at two o'clock in the afternoon after the first two or three weeks of the session—

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): We have not sat on Monday nights.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I will get the records out. All right, not on Monday nights. I said we would sit at three o'clock every Monday because the hon. members come in from out of town on Monday and we cannot sit at two. But, frankly, I think that while we are here we might as well sit in the Legislature and do the business.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I will only say this. We have this rather infantile discussion every year. I can assure you that I am not going to overwork the hon. members of the Opposition. But on the other hand, I think the government must reserve to itself the right to conduct the business of the House in the way it thinks proper. I have no intention of having you walk out of here limp and worn out from these long hours of listening to voices drone on and on.

We will stay as long as it is necessary and I will look after the health of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The thirty-fourth order. House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

On vote 709:

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, in vote 709: The Essex County Sanatorium in the city of Windsor has apparently had part of it, the IODE Hospital, changed into a psychiatric hospital. As a result of this change, will there be a curtailment of grants to the tuberculosis division at the hospital there, or will it carry on as it normally did?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, no. The sanatorium will carry on as it ordinarily did. Of course, it will get less money for tuberculosis in total because the need is reduced, but the total care of tubercular patients will still be provided for under the grant.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask the hon. Minister if he could give us a general report on the growing redundancy of many of the TB hospitals. Are there a considerable number of them that are likely to become available for other uses?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, for some time now some part, greater or lesser, of every one of the hospitals has become redundant in relation to tuberculosis and available for other uses. This has been the case in all of them, I believe, with the exception of Kingston. Kingston has caused us a very great problem because of the nature of the building and some other factors. It was originally put up for military purposes, with a very definite life span. That life span has been extended because of work done on it by the Kingston Tuberculosis Association. It is constituting a bit of a problem to us, but all of the other sanatoria have already become involved in some other purpose.

The one at Haileybury was closed up entirely and is now part of a general hospital. The one at Gravenhurst was bought by this government and is now an institution under our mental hospital grant. The one at London has been bought. Part of it is being used by us, and part of it is still being used for sanatorium purposes. All of the others are either involved as an after-treatment hospital, convalescent chronic care hospital or psychiatric hospital, as in the case of Ottawa, Sudbury and Windsor.

Vote 709 agreed to.

On vote 710:

Mr. Newman: Now, Mr. Chairman, in vote 710 the committee submitted a report in 1960 concerning air pollution in the Windsor-Essex county area. It had made certain recommendations. Does the provincial government plan on supplementing any of the recommendations? The big problem back home is that our air pollution does not necessarily originate in the city of Windsor, but comes from Detroit, the big Zug island industrial complex and likewise from coal-burning boats that ply the Detroit River. What are the plans of the province, sir?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Boats, and in lesser measure trains—well, trains not at all now—have always been a problem to us because they are under federal control. But I do believe that some part of the federal government is at present involved in an international study of air pollution control as it affects areas such as the Windsor-Detroit area.

The department, as I announced in my opening observations, Mr. Chairman, is prepared now to support any approved project of air pollution control undertaken by a municipality on the same basis any other approved public health project is supported. So that if your public health unit wants to get into this area and undertake a programme of air pollution control, then we are prepared to support it in the same degree as we support the public health programme generally.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, will that be in co-operation with the federal authorities, because they apparently are doing something on this now, or at least planning on doing something?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The federal government, I understand, is becoming involved in a study, and we have advised them that whatever help or support they need from us, we are willing to give. In other words, we are prepared to co-operate with them in every way to get this matter under control at the border point.

Mr. Newman: Thank you.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Are we on 710 now, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman, through you, I did not just catch the explanation of the hon. Minister but I would like to raise one or two questions in regard to the air pollution problem. The city of Hamilton has established a committee. In its operations of the past year it feels it has had no satisfaction in bringing about what it really wants to do, strictly because the establishment of control is on a municipal basis and it finds that this is not going to be effective.

I understand it has, in the past year and a half, approached The Department of Health or the section of the department responsible for air pollution, with a view to expanding pollution control, either on a regional basis or on a provincial basis. The large industries in the city of Hamilton, I am sure, have done a good job to the best of their ability at this point in controlling the pollution of air by the smoke from the large stacks.

The Steel Company of Canada, in the last three or four years, has put in precipitators to stop the dust from going into the air, but the company itself is relaxing its activities and its promotion. It feels that to put the restrictions only on one municipality and have no effective legislation to compel the next municipality to take the same measures means that its efforts are not doing the job.

I am not convinced that large industries should be as peevish as this. I think that when we have a large industrial town like the city of Hamilton, they should do it regardless of what the next municipality does.

Two large industries such as Dominion Foundry and Stelco, which have the large furnaces that produce the pollution in the air, should not be peevish enough to say that we will have to relax because it is not going to be effective unless the next municipality does the job. I think the argument does merit a lot of consideration that we should have air pollution control on a large regional basis or on a provincial basis and it should be enforced by the provincial government.

The Steel Company of Canada is spending large sums of money to put in precipitators and it takes a lot of credit for this in controlling the air pollution. In one of its open-house sessions it had visitors from across the province who were interested in pollution control. They made a trip through the plant and they watched the precipitators work. The company explained the operation of precipitators and said that when they were turned on and put into operation there were something like 125 tons of dust caught in the precipitator and taken away every day to a stockpile.

On questioning, the technician, who was explaining the procedure, said, "Well, yes, it is one problem we have got. We are getting this 125 tons a day of dust out of this precipitator, saving it from going through the air, but our problem now is to stock it—find some place to store it." In further explanation he said, "Our objective is to find, through a refining process, some way to re-use this dust that we are able to save through the precipitator."

So I think there is a two-fold purpose in the precipitator. I am not sure which came first, the idea of air pollution control, or of recovering the dust so the company could refine it and then put it back into production again. Nevertheless, the precipitator does stop it from going into the air and across the city. I would just like to make sure that the hon. Minister understands that the municipality is concerned regarding this particular meeting of the steel company and the representatives from across the province. The chairman of the Hamilton committee, and I quote from the Hamilton Spectator, charged the governments were afraid to offend industry, and I quote:

The provincial government is afraid of big business and will not introduce industrial air pollution controls until the people of Ontario force the politicians into action. This was claimed last night.

"This," said air pollution fighter W. G. Harris, "was the biggest problem faced by some 60 municipal representatives attending an air pollution meeting." Mr. Harris, chairman of the Hamilton air pollution control advisory committee, added:

"The provincial government does not want to offend big industry. It has given us power to deal with every other type of air pollution but the big one, industrial pollution."

Those attending the meeting came from 11 southwestern Ontario counties. It was a first attempt to launch a form of regional control over the industrial air pollution problem. The high cost of industrial pollution control with a possible patch-work system of uneven enforcement alarmed some of the officials.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. Minister if there are plans by the provincial government to bring about, through its initiative and control, larger regional activity, or at least, should not the provincial government take on the job of enforcing pollution control across the province?

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Chairman, just before the hon. Minister speaks on this I would like to say a word. In the first place I think that our government is to be congratulated for bringing in the first Air Pollution Control Act in Canada. It is all very well to stand up and criticize this problem of air pollution but we have an Air Pollution Control Act which was the first one here. There are many centres in our province, local municipal governments that set up fine air pollution control programmes, but, Mr. Chairman, remember that this is a problem that transcends the boundaries of municipalities and it is a very difficult one to handle.

Speaking about Metropolitan Toronto, I think we have one of the finest air pollution control organizations on the continent here and much good work has been done. As a matter of fact, you would be interested in this figure. We were discussing the problem the other day and the man who directs the air pollution for Metropolitan Toronto said that in this area we have over a million sources of pollution. In the middle of the winter, there are actually a million sources of air pollution in Metropolitan Toronto. That includes private homes, of course, factories and everything else. So it is a great thing just to keep even with it.

I think if we need to expand in our programme of air pollution it is in the matter of research. I think here that probably The Department of Health could help. I noticed this figure is $200,000 to assist local boards of health. Maybe there should be more money and the accent should be on the matter of research with the right technical advice. I realize, too, that technical engineering advice on this new air pollution problem is difficult. We just do not have the manpower to handle it. But that is something that is being given consideration, too.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville mentioned about the situation on the Detroit River and the matter of ships. I have an article here which I cut out of the Toronto Globe and Mail a few days ago. It might give the hon. member the answer to his question. It certainly answered some questions for me. It says:

A Canadian official said yesterday that under coming federal legislation, municipalities will enforce air pollution measures as easily as a traffic policeman writes out a ticket. Dr. Morris Katz, chairman of the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission's technical advisory board on air pollution, made this prediction in a speech to the 26th annual joint meeting of the Dominion Marine Association and Lake Carriers Association. Dr. Katz said the legislation has been drafted by the transport department and will be submitted to the Cabinet after the Justice Department has checked the wording. Dr. Katz said in an interview following his address that the legislation will apply to all vessels in Canadian waters within a mile of land. It will give Canadian municipalities control over smoke from shipping by giving them legislation which can be enforced the way a traffic cop writes out a ticket, he said. Dr. Katz said that a harbour commission or a health department will be able to lay a charge under the legislation and take the offence to court.

That is just part of the situation, but I know in our recommendations—the recommendations of the select committee on air pollution and smoke control—we talked with Dr. Katz. He is a very knowledgeable man in Ottawa who looked after this for the federal authorities. We discussed with him this very possibility of doing something about shipping because, after all, in Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor and other lake ports now we have ships coming in from all over the world. It is not like it used to be before the St. Lawrence Seaway. The local municipal governments should have some control over this garbage, smoke, soot and what-not that comes from the ships.

If this prediction made here to do with Dr. Katz is right—and I suppose it is—we are going to get some real assistance from the federal authorities in this matter of air pollution by ships; even though they may not be Canadian ships.

Incidentally, I should say, Mr. Chairman, that the Toronto Telegram has been conducting recently some very fine reports on air pollution, particularly as it applies to this area. I think they are to be congratulated on that. I think that through their efforts probably a little more strict enforcement has taken place in this great area.

It is a problem, one that I know is getting great consideration in all large industrial areas. I appreciate the problem in Hamilton, with their large industries. I think if the province, through our Department of Health, can assist the local authorities in their research and with technical advice, that we will go a long way toward improving the situation and endeavouring to have our air in Ontario just as clean as possible.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member for Wentworth East, I want to advise that if he had noted my observations at the outset of these estimates, he would have noted that we have gone into the control of this on a regional basis. This is the secret of the programme we proposed. Not only are we prepared or offering to assist municipalities in research, we will train those people in the skills necessary for inspection at no cost to the municipalities.

If the health unit will undertake programmes of control approved by us, then they will receive the same support from government for their programme of air pollution control as they now do for their public health programmes. Looking at Hamilton, I find it is an ideal situation for this sort of a programme because it is almost completely surrounded by formally organized health units. With the exception of Haldimand county, and two small townships in Welland county, the whole of that area is covered by formally organized health units. These health units all want to take on a programme of air pollution control. We are prepared to do research on their behalf. We are prepared to train the people in inspection at absolutely no cost to them. We are prepared to give financial support to their programmes, and I repeat, on the same basis as they are now supported for public health programmes.

In the case of the city of Hamilton, we do not provide any support for it in public health programmes. But we will financially support their programmes of air pollution control on the same basis as we would support the public health programme were they included under that. I think the amount would be something in the nature of 15 per cent of the cost of approved programmes.

Now this may sound like a very small amount, but it actually is a very sizeable amount in respect to air pollution control, based on the experience of states in the U.S. that have a long and very heavy experience in this area.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I agree that The Department of Health, provincially, should be in charge of the research into the hazards of air pollution and the technical-medical methods of control. I would pose a question that has been posed by others interested in this: Should not the actual control of rectifying the problem be given to the Ontario Water Resources Commission? I understand that they have been doing a good job in relation to water pollution, that they have developed the facilities for control and have done a lot of research. What would be the opinion of the hon. Minister on the effective solution being given to the Ontario Water Resources Commission?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I do not think that would be wise. I would have to recommend strongly against it because the reason for government being in the matter of air pollution control is based upon the health of our people. This is a health matter. So although the water resources commission is very much involved in the matter of providing pure water supplies, it is rather amazing that we get very great numbers of questions and complaints concerning water pollution in The Department of Health. Because, here again, the origin—or the raison d'être, if you will—for water pollution control, or water control of any kind as far as government is concerned, was originally aimed at providing a source of pure and potable water for people to drink that would be free from disease. However, there are a far greater number of problems, and problems of far greater magnitude, involved in water resources now. I think that air pollution control is a matter of health. This is where it belongs and this, I think, is the reason for government becoming involved in it. So that the air we breathe or the air our people breathe, be made and kept as pure as possible.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would once again like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister that air pollution on an area-wide basis might be all well and good for most parts of the province, but when it comes to my own municipality it is a little different case. We would have to blame the city of Detroit and the complex directly across from Windsor for polluting the air. I wish the hon. Minister would come our way some summer morning and see the red, yellow, green, blue, violet, purple types of smoke or pollutants floating in the air, coming across the border.

Now it is such that even the station in Harrow, which is approximately 20 miles away from the source of the original pollution, gets samplings of the smoke and dust coming in from the city of Detroit. It is most difficult for us to attempt to complain to Detroit. You just cannot do that. Detroit attempts to control it. Too often the people on the west side of our community are plagued with all of these technicolor smoke and pollutants that float across the Detroit River.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to raise another issue. On the point that has just been raised by the last speaker, are there any international arrangements to deal with this kind of thing? There have been discussions in this House on the problems of lake pollution, for example.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think this is the purpose of the studies that are now being entered into between the two governments. I believe an international committee has been set up, involving Canada and the United States. This is one of the matters of great concern to them. We would hope that out of this will come some understanding as to what each nation can, and will, do.

I would say this: I have knowledge of the fact that the city of Detroit, with some support from the state of Michigan—support incidentally, which is no greater than Ontario gives to its municipalities—is trying to control this matter. It gives one an idea, living so close to the boundary of another great nation, it gives one some idea of the difficulty inherent in this problem. There is no quick and easy answer to this. It is not the pollutants that you see that cause the greatest concern. It is the pollutants you cannot see that are far more hazardous. The smoke is dirty, it is annoying, it is a great nuisance, but it is the things you cannot see in the form of smoke that cause us, as medical people, far more concern. These are the things that are causing authorities all over the world a great deal of concern.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, under the estimates of the industrial hygiene branch, I want to raise with the hon. Minister an issue that I alluded to a week or so ago when we were discussing non-compensable cases before the workmen's compensation board—the issue of mercury poisoning, particularly in the Dow Chemical plant in Sarnia.

Basically, the situation, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, is that as far back as 1950, there was an investigation, an inspection, if you will, of the situation in this plant. Ten years went by before any further investigation was made and sometime in September of 1962, a further investigation was made, presumably by officials of The Department of Health. A report was made by Dr. Mastromatteo in the department, and as a result of his comments following the investigation, a brief was prepared by those who were disturbed over the situation in Sarnia. This brief was presented to the hon. Minister on January 15, 1963.

The hon. Minister has had that brief for well over a year. I can go into it, I may still go into it, but presumably the hon. Minister is familiar with the details in the brief and I wonder if he is in a position to comment on it at this point.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, I cannot comment on it. I have no recollection of the brief at the present time and apparently my people have not got it here. I will get the information for the hon. member and present it in this House.

Mr. MacDonald: Having waited for 13 months, we will proceed to deal with the issue then, because the government had this brief. I want to draw to the attention of the House and to the attention of the hon. Minister, if it has not been drawn to his attention up until this point, the kind of situation that is faced according to the information that I have. In fact, what I have here is a copy of the brief that was submitted to him on January 15, 1963.

The thing that disturbs me most, Mr. Chairman, is that according to the brief, when the department was finally persuaded to make an inspection, officials of the company had prior knowledge of the visit and they proceeded to carry out a thorough and intensified cleaning job. Grill flooring that had not been inspected for years was removed, and all traces of mercury were cleaned up. Conditions seen were not normal conditions. No questions were asked, nor any information sought from the working personnel of the department. The inspection, according to my information, was a formality and a farce.

Let me quote from one or two paragraphs in this brief, to indicate to the House the kind of problem.

Air samplings of the cell floor were carried out by The Department of Health technicians on October 10 and 11. It followed largely the plan and procedure of the previous inspection on February 25, 1950.

If I may just interject here. Note that the inspection, according to this information, looks seriously inadequate. You had inspection in February, 1950, and the next one was not until October, 1962.

No check was made into the hydrogen room, the condensate pot or the hydrogen collection pots. The company has repeatedly refused to reveal the results of this air sampling.

The reason is obvious, according to my information.

Many of the readings were above the maximum allowable limits and had been for years, at least 12 years. Sand blasting did not bring this out as implied in the letter.

This is the letter of Dr. Mastromatteo.

This has been a permanent condition for a dozen years and the question is asked: What standards is Dr. Mastromatteo using and where did he obtain these standards?

The threshold limit value for mercury as adopted by the American Conference of Governmental Industrial Hygienists is .1 milligrams per cubic metre of air. This standard is accepted by the American Standards Association which says that continual breathing of concentrations of mercury vapours exceeding this limit can result in serious injury to workers repeatedly exposed to them. The kidneys can excrete a certain amount of mercury in urine but how much and for how long no one seems to know.

In certain areas in the Chlorine #1—This is a part of the building of the Dow Chemical Company:

—where higher than the legal limit is revealed by the February 25, 1950, sampling, and because concentrations of mercury above the maximum allowable limit in the air may produce poisoning and because there is no sensory warning of the presence of mercury vapour, the use of a continuous generating detector in these areas is not only desirable but should be a must if the company is interested in protecting the health of its employees. For ten years no monitoring of the air on the cell floor was attempted by the company. Before this the company did not even possess a mercury-vapour detector.

A few checks were made in 1960 using a Kruger No. 23 mercury detector. These results are reported in the 1960 chlorine conference report of the Dow Chemical Company. Seventy-two per cent of the readings were above the legal limit, the maximum being .40 milligrams per cubic litre of air. Samples taken in 1962 using a sunshine instrument revealed a similar situation.

In July, 1962, window washers in the mercury cell building found that their brass squeegees became amalgamated and soon disintegrated from the mercury content of the wash water. Analysis of samples of this water revealed a high percentage of mercury. This mercury came from only one source, the air of the building. This is the air the workers on the cell floor have been breathing for years.

It goes on to draw attention to the incidents. I am not going to name the names of the people involved because I do not think that is necessary. But the health of at least one employee had deteriorated to the point that he has had to be moved out from where he was working and given some minor janitorial job. The brief, when the hon. Minister gets around to reading it, will indicate that he is living partly on the welfare and the kindness of his fellow workers who apparently are supplementing his income.

Perhaps I can just read the concluding couple of paragraphs:

It is apparently plain that The Department of Health cares little for the health of the workers in mercury cell plants in Ontario. If it did, it would not allow 12 years to elapse between air checks in mercury cell plants. It must not be forgotten that both checks at Dow were instigated by individuals and organizations and not by The Department of Health.

Obviously the authors of this brief are getting a little indignant after all these years, so the next paragraph gets a little tough.

The Dow Chemical Company has dragged its feet for 12 years. In the meantime it has used its workers in the mercury cell plant as guinea pigs. Now certain officials of the company have the unmitigated gall to say no apparent harm has come to anyone. How do they know? Is it possible they know how others feel? Many employees are concerned about their health and the apparent intoxication that becomes a part of one after long years' exposure.

I do not know what further comment the hon. Minister wants to make at this stage, but I must say I am a little startled to learn that on an issue of this nature, and on which repeated representations have been made to his department, he apparently has not even been made acquainted with the situation.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is a very large department; surely the hon. member must realize that the Minister is not advised of every test that is carried out. If the brief came to me, there is not a doubt in my mind that I read it and was given advice on it and I have asked for those papers to be brought to my desk here. When they come, I will speak on it.

But I am not advised of every inspection that is carried out by the staff of my department. This is ridiculous to the extreme to think that such a thing could occur. I would be doing nothing but listen to the reports of tests being carried out. My deputy advises me now, for instance, that frequently in this plant we are carrying out tests—not an air sampling, but friendly tests on the persons involved to give clues or show signs of mercuric intoxication.

I find it difficult to reconcile the statement he has just read with the report given to me here that the Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario reports no cases of mercury poisoning, or suspected mercury poisoning. I cannot go to the workmen's compensation board and say: "What you are telling me isn't right". First of all, it is not my concern. They did me the courtesy of advising my department when we asked for this information. I must accept this because I have no other recourse. Why there is a variance in the reports I have no way of knowing. But I will get the information my department has and present it before, I hope, this afternoon is over.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to clear up one point with the hon. Minister. We have to refer to my own community. We have a metropolitan board of health at the moment. It is going to be expanded into a county-wide unit. If the Metro board passes the sample by-law the provincial government has recommended, is it eligible for grants?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, they are. I would like to inform the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, that his metropolitan health unit has been the county health unit for two years. I think it is two years ago since they formed the unit, taking in more municipalities. I think it is going to cover the whole of the county this year, but it is now really a county health unit and they will have to come under The Air Pollution Control Act. They are operating now under that old section of The Municipal Act, which was repealed and gave them the authority only to control smoke. We will not support projects under that section. It will have to be under The Air Pollution Control Act.

Mr. Newman: Would this require the approval of each of the municipalities involved in the county-wide health unit, or could it be a majority of the municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The expert tells me that each municipality will have to pass its own by-law. Since they are already supporting the health unit in all of its programmes, there is nothing further entailed. They will get a little more support from us. There are certain areas that will not be affected. I presume there is purely a rural part that will have little interest, but in the interests of the whole county I feel quite certain that they will go along with it.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, my reason for asking is: The town of Riverside now does not have any industry to speak of. It is on the far east side, and as a result would not be affected by pollutants to the extent of the west side of Windsor or the Sandwich-West section would be. As a result there may be the possibility that this municipality may not want to go along with such a by-law. However, the hon. Minister has assured me, this would involve all of the municipalities.

Vote 710 agreed to.

Vote 711 agreed to.

Vote 712 agreed to.

On vote 713:

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I think this is the proper vote under which we can discuss the general situation insofar as institutions for retarded children are concerned. These various institutions are named, amongst many, in the estimates. I think this subject is a subject that deserves the attention of each and every hon. member of the House.

There has been a great deal of criticism in recent times concerning the approach of the province of Ontario toward the treatment and care of retarded children. There have been a great number of newspaper articles dealing with this; news stories and articles written in depth after very substantial study. I have in my hand at the moment a newspaper report of the Telegram of July 8 reporting on the resignation of three teachers from the Ontario Hospital School at Orillia. I think the suggestions made in this story are sufficiently important to read this small article into the record.

Three teachers have resigned from the Ontario Hospital school here in protest against working conditions. Kenneth Oakley, Donald Tunstell and Donald Leach have sent letters to the Ontario Health Minister, Dr. Dymond, and Simcoe East MPP Lloyd Letherby and the past president of the Provincial Retarded Children's Association, R. G. Anglin, describing events leading to their resignations. Hospital superintendent Dr. McLean Houze confirmed today that the three teachers had resigned, but had no further comment.

Mr. Oakley said the last straw, after a long list of complaints, was when the three were assigned summer jobs in the three worst cottages in the hospital, looking after children incapable of learning their own names. Our training would be of no benefit to these children while we could be a great help to those of higher intelligence levels, he said. In former years, teachers spent the summer as recreational directors and life guards at the hospital beach. Children's working hours are also criticized by the teachers. Some of them have done a day's work before they get to school, Mr. Tunstell said.

Another complaint dealt with teachers' salaries. And in this day of teachers' salaries, I think these salaries are particularly worthy of note:

Mr. Oakley, employed at the hospital for nine years and a teacher there for seven years, says he receives $3,600 a year and has had no increase for three years. Mr. Tunstell, who has been teaching for five years, said he got $3,300.

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): Probably more than he was worth.

Mr. MacDonald: What does the hon. member know about it?

Mr. Singer: I am very pleased, Mr. Chairman, to hear some noise from the hon. member for Simcoe East because he was one of the gentlemen who was written to in regard to the resignation of these three teachers. I would have hoped that by now that he would have brought his influence to bear—and it is substantial—on the hon. Minister of Health to clear up this situation.

An hon. member: He said probably more than they were worth.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I missed the remarks of the hon. member. My colleague tells me he said they were probably being paid more than they were worth. I think this is a very handsome addition to this debate. I think that the remarks of the hon. member for Simcoe East should be enshrined as a watchword of the care, attention and concern that members of this Legislature have for the attention and care of retarded children.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): On the Liberal side?

Mr. Singer: Well, on any side. Even the hon. Minister of Mines would have more intelligence than to make a remark such as the one that just came from the hon. member for Simcoe East.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Is it all right to get back to the estimates now, Mr. Chairman? Thank you.

The Toronto Globe and Mail, in an article dated August 1, 1963, quotes a Dr. B. W. Richards, a visiting professor in mental retardation at the University of Toronto. Dr. Richards analyzed the bed situation insofar as Ontario is concerned. It was his opinion—and he is an outstanding man in this field—that space for a thousand extra beds in Ontario hospitals and Ontario schools would ease crowding in these mental institutions, but would fail to dent the year-long waiting lists or meet future demands. Dr. Richards goes on and makes several comments concerning the situation in the various hospitals. He says:

According to the official estimate, Orillia, Smith's Falls and Aurora are over-filled by a total of 599 beds. If overcrowding were to be estimated by the distance between beds I believe space for an additional 1,000 beds is required to abolish overcrowding without altering the present rate of supply or reducing the existing demand.

And Dr. Richards goes on in this way at some considerable length. Now I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that the unsigned articles in the Globe and Mail that ran recently concerning the whole approach to the treatment of retarded youngsters cannot have escaped the attention of the hon. Minister of Health. These, to my mind, are very excellent articles. They comment in substantial depth on a very careful analysis of this whole problem. They go through the hospitals one by one, make comments and interview the outstanding authorities in the field.

I am not going to bother to read all these articles into the record in detail. They are there, and I hope that most of the hon. members will have seen them—certainly that the hon. Minister of Health will have seen them and will, before these estimates are finished, have some comments in connection with them.

This is the sort of thing these articles comment on. All of Ontario's major hospital schools for retarded children have in common three major problems. First, they are too isolated. Second, they are overcrowded, and third, they tend to become more hospital than school, whether built in 1876 or 1961. Concerning the hospital at Orillia, the article comments:

Before World War II Orillia attracted excellent professionals with experimental ideas, but with the war the hospital school suffered professional staff losses from which it has never recovered.

This article deals with the situation at Orillia today and quotes Dr. Houze, superintendent of the hospital:

The hospital school is ten per cent overcrowded, particularly for lower-grade retarded. Dr. Houze makes this estimate of the hospital school population: mildly retarded, 20 per cent; moderately retarded, 45 per cent; severely retarded, 35 per cent.

There is a waiting list of 375 at Orillia. At Smith's Falls, Mr. Chairman, some of the patients come from Kenora, some from Fort Frances. Some of them have to travel approximately 1,200 miles to get there. There is a waiting list at the Smith's Falls hospital of some 500.

About a year ago, or perhaps not that long ago, some of us had an opportunity to visit the hospital at Smith's Falls and it is obvious that notwithstanding the care and the attention and the devotion that people like Dr. Frank and his staff give to those youngsters in Smith's Falls, the situation is not a good one there. There is not enough staff. The hospital is vastly overcrowded and the youngsters do not get sufficient care and attention. Dr. Frank says this:

We are a young school. When we opened the average was seven years. Now it is nine and a half. We are growing up but most of our patients will be with us forever.

Would Dr. Frank have put the hospital school where it is?

"No," he admitted. "I would have put it closer to Ottawa or Kingston."

And then, of course, Mr. Chairman, there is the new hospital at Cedar Springs. Originally it was planned to have 2,000 beds but it finally opened with 1,200 beds. But this newest item among hospital schools has the same mark against it as Orillia and Smith's Falls. It is too big and it is not strategically located. An outspoken authority on mental retardation in Ontario put it bluntly:

If the experts in the field of mental retardation had been consulted, Cedar Springs would not have been built where it is. One thing governments can do is to allow—then why not allow the experts to decide where and what is needed?

This is the sort of thing, Mr. Chairman, that I hope we will hear about from the hon. Minister this afternoon. What experts does he consult? What advice does he take, and if he takes advice that the experts are not prepared to give, on what basis does he make these decisions?

We have talked in this House on many occasions about the treatment for retarded children and I was pleased a little while ago to hear from the hon. Minister of Health that he is initiating some steps in the educational field to provide for education for retarded children on a similar basis that education is provided for normal children. But that is only a tiny part of this problem. The very serious part of this problem is the approach by the hon. Minister of Health and his department to the care, through hospital schools and otherwise, of retarded children. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, the situation in Orillia and the situation at Smith's Falls and the situation at Cedar Springs leave a great, great deal to be desired.

Of course, all levels agree on one point. Monolithic entities like Orillia, Smith's Falls and Cedar Springs can no longer be tolerated. In another one of these articles in the same series, there are several points made that are indeed worthy of repetition. They talk about clinics and there is a reference—a substantial reference—to a clinic at 34 Grosvenor Street in Toronto. It is run by Dr. John D. Fotheringham and the clinic in very meagre quarters is doing a substantial job in this field. There is a cross-reference to a school that is being conducted in London, and I would have thought with all the hon. members we have in this House from London and the influence that they have to bring to bear on government, that some of the lessons learned in London, from this clinic in London, would have been brought forcibly to the attention of the Cabinet caucus and that some action along this line would have been taken.

Dr. Richards comments at some length on this sort of approach and he says:

Clinics like this are more desperately needed in Ontario than beds.

Dr. Richards is the visiting psychiatry professor at the University of Toronto. He observed mildly:

Ontario seems to have a bed complex. Certainly Ontario has more institutional beds for retarded children per 100,000 population than either Britain or the United States and the waiting lists are long.

But he makes the point, and I think it is a very valid point, that if community services were available, more mental retardates could be kept at home and the need for hospital beds would be lessened.

I commend to the hon. Minister's attention these two efforts, one in the city of London, and the other, a comparatively new one, in the city of Toronto. These are the sort of things that the hon. Minister should be talking about and encouraging and developing but we do not hear any of this sort of thinking at all.

An echo of Dr. Richards' convictions comes strongly from London and that is the one I was referring to, where the Children's Psychiatric Institute since 1960 has been a blazing beacon for Ontario. It has set a pattern of service, teaching and research for the Grosvenor Street clinic in Toronto and the same pattern could, and should, be applied in other communities in Ontario.

Some other references in this second article are along these lines. They quote Dr. Ida Hackney, who is the chief psychologist in the psychology department in the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto. She said that she is most concerned about the inadequacy of assessment facilities in the province and the serious lack of professional help for parents. There is a reference to Dr. Burdette H. McNeel, who directs the affairs of the mental health division in The Department of Health. Dr. McNeel's view is a long-range objective one. He says:

Today there is pressure to get things done quickly. Often this means the perpetuation of existing patterns. It is not a question of providing more hospitals but of sorting out the facilities we have. We need to organize programmes of different patterns for the retarded, to make more effort toward the resettlement of retardates into the community.

What better authority could I quote this afternoon than Dr. McNeel, one of the hon.

Minister's senior advisers? Dr. McNeel suggests that something different—far different—should be done from what the department is doing today and it is rather strange that we do not hear this sort of thinking from the hon. Minister.

William R. Kirk, the executive director of the Ontario Association for Retarded Children, agrees on the need for more diagnostic facilities, "but they must be a provincial responsibility," says Mr. Kirk. He argues that if diagnostic facilities are to have any purpose, then a continuing counsel for parents must follow. "It is no use diagnosing unless we can follow up with counselling help to parents."

Florence Bell, executive secretary of the family and child section of the social planning council in Metropolitan Toronto, sees the need in terms of social workers. We need more clinics, says Miss Bell, but for training as much as for service.

There is a quote here attributed to Leora Wright. She is a public health nurse serving on the home care committee of the Ontario Association of Retarded Children since 1952. Miss Wright says:

Many times the public health nurse is the first person, aside from the doctor, to contact the family. She visits the newborn baby and sees the young children of the family. Because of her basic knowledge and training in development of children she is in a position to recognize the retarded child. But the recognition is not enough because there are not the clinical facilities and the treatment facilities available.

Mr. Chairman, very briefly, I have skimmed the surface of a very important subject, a subject in which I can come to no other conclusion than that our Department of Health does not really seem to be interested in modernizing its facilities in any way. We have these old-fashioned institutions—old-fashioned in some cases in their physical set-up, old-fashioned in other cases, even though the buildings are not old-fashioned, old-fashioned in other cases because of their approach to this very serious problem.

There is the London experiment, there is the Toronto experiment, there are the views of all of these leaders in this field, there is the urgent need for proper facilities for these youngsters. This need is more exaggerated every day that goes on. There are more youngsters needing this treatment and the government seems to have no answer. As I say, this is an effort that certainly should commend itself to the government's immediate attention and I would hope that the hon. Minister of Health would have some words of encouragement for all of us who worry about this problem, and for the parents and the youngsters who are affected by it. This is one of the most serious problems to which the hon. Minister could devote his attention. I would hope he would be able to give us some words of hope for the future.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think this House ought to realize that what the hon. member has said is all very true, but he has left out the most important part of it. All these fine things he has spoken about—the London experiment, the Toronto experiment, the things that are being done—were sponsored by this government; and, strangely enough, both these came into being since I assumed the portfolio.

I take no credit for it, because these were partly the advice given to me by my advisers. Of course I listen to Dr. McNeel. He is a director of the division and naturally is my chief adviser in this matter. Of course, he is right in presenting to us long-range plans, and he is also right in pointing out the apparent hurry we are in to solve this problem overnight, a problem that we have really not yet begun to solve. All of our efforts so far are palliative, because we have not yet found what causes mental retardation in the greatest number of these afflicted children.

We must have a long-range plan. In the meantime, in many cases, the measures we have to adopt presently are palliative, and this we do. But for any hon. member in this House, sir, to stand up and say to the hon. members here, or say to the people of the province of Ontario, that this government or this Department of Health is careless of the welfare of these children committed to our care, is a dreadful impression to leave with the people of Ontario. We are not careless of these children, and they do get good care.

Of course we cannot bring them back to be normal children. Nobody imagines that we can bring them back to normalcy; and I am sorry, too, that the hon. member slipped over one of the most important parts of Dr. Richards' report. On many occasions in conversation with myself, the impression he left with me is that Ontario has provided too many beds, that these children should be in the communities; this is our philosophy and this is why we have set up centres like CPRI in London, Dr. Fotheringham's clinic here, and assessment clinics at all of the schools.

The underlying philosophy is to keep children out of institutions. Only those who can only be cared for in an institution should be admitted. This we believe, and this is why we try to assess every child before it is admitted. There are so many difficulties, in this, so many old ideas still held by society, and no government, no authority, no profession can wipe out these ideas and wipe out all the stigma attaching to mental retardation overnight—no, not in a lifetime. We may not wipe it out in 100 years. We have been trying now for over 2,000 years I think.

The New Testament tells us about Christ casting the devils into the swine. We are led to believe that we can try to translate this into medical terms, that the so-called afflicted were suffering from some kind of insanity or mental affliction. We still cling to that old idea, and we still attach that same stigma to our mentally disordered.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot change this overnight. This is one of the greatest things we are trying to do, and one of the most difficult things we are trying to do with society—to get them to change their thinking—to get them to look upon the mentally retarded child as different, incapable only of a certain limited sphere of activity, but at least deserving of development insofar as that is possible. But for many reasons that may be difficult to explain, though not so difficult to understand, if one is working with these people, parents, families and communities.

Society at large does not want to have these children in its midst, sir, and for this reason large institutions have been built. Why they were built at Smith's Falls and Cedar Springs, I do not know. I had no say in the siting of either one of them; but probably if I had, with the thinking of the times, I might have agreed to them going there. With what I believe today, what I know today, I certainly would not put them there; but they are there and I certainly cannot take the money that the taxpayers have invested in them and abolish them.

My hon. friend spoke about the professional staff at Orillia and pointed out that there was a fairly substantial number of professional teachers in pre-war days. But we experienced a tremendous explosion of population and school teachers were scarce, not only in the schools of the retarded, but in all of our schools. Naturally teachers would choose work that was perhaps easier, and doubtless equally rewarding; and because of the great demand and higher salaries than the civil service commission approved of, they went to teach in the normal schools.

This is one of our difficulties in getting teachers, and this is one of the things we are discussing now with the civil service. It is our policy that as quickly as we are able to do this, we will not employ anyone but trained teachers, fully graduated teachers, who have taken a recognized course in teaching. However, they still must come under the civil service commission; and I am told, about the teachers who resigned, that this was, in part, their reason for resignation. This was really underlying the problem.

I would suggest, I cannot say this for certain, but I would suggest, from the salaries the hon. member mentioned, that they are not fully qualified teachers. They look to me to be more in the attendant scale of salaries. Some of our teachers were attendants with rather unusual capabilities, but because they did not have formal training as teachers they would not qualify for teachers' salary scale under the civil service.

Then I understand, too, that part of the discontent was that since they were teachers they should have the same benefits that teachers in ordinary schools have, namely, two-and-a-half months' vacation each year. In the summer time we suspend the scholastic activities in our hospital schools and we think that the children can thrive better outside. Therefore, those who are involved in teaching the rest of the year are allocated to different parts of the hospital, and I take it that if these teachers did not like to go to the part of the hospital where they were placed, they also did not want to fit into the accepted civil service regulations. This is our side of the story. There is more to it than that, but these people have left our employ and I see no sense in hurting them by dragging all of these things out and placing them on the public record.

If the hon. member wants to talk to me privately about these teachers, I do not think there is any reason why I cannot tell him the full background of the matter.

I am not trying to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that we have all the answers to this great problem. Mr. Clarke of The Department of Education has recently completed a very thorough study of our hospital schools, which lasted, I think, nearly six weeks. He has made certain recommendations and I touched on some of the things that we are undertaking immediately which came out of his study. But I can say to you that he was extremely complimentary of the work being done in our schools. Not the department's work, because we are not giving any direction from head office concerning what they should do, but of the work that is being done in the schools under the great handicaps that we face. For instance, we are faced with the problem of having 50 per cent of our teachers lacking adequate basic teacher training. To that end it is our proposal, as I stated to you, to co-operate with or work in co-operation with The Department of Education to work out courses of training—post-basic training for those teachers to give them the benefit of all the new knowledge through special courses of teaching and training the mentally retarded. And there are many other things.

One of the things that we hope to go forward to now is the appointment of an experienced director and co-ordinator of all educational activities for the three schools, so that we can develop some sort of uniformity of programme in the three schools. We hope also to establish the academic programme under a formally organized school board, such as has been done in the sanatoria for the tuberculous for some time. We intend also to separate the groups of blind and deaf who are also mentally retarded and are under our care, to try to work out with them special educational projects to the end that they may gain whatever benefit can be gained.

Then I want to point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that we are not content by any means with our efforts in this area and we do not know all the answers in it, but I do take very strong objection to the implication that we are careless about children. However, I would like to apologize for the overcrowding. To the hon. members of this House, no matter where they come from, and I think I have dealt with nearly every one of them in this regard, I must say that I commend them for this effort on behalf of their constituents. I do not blame them for this, nor do I ever consider that they are exerting any political pressure or anything of the kind. I always thought that this was one of my responsibilities as a member, sir, and I think, too, that it is part of their responsibility to help their people who are so afflicted, to have their children admitted. I do not care where the reference comes from, if the children need to be admitted to an institution, then we will try to admit them. And I can say to the hon. members that if I were to harden my heart and say, "No, the rooms are filled, I cannot take them in" I do not think I would sleep very comfortably at night. As long as we can accommodate them, we will strive to accommodate them, we will give them the best possible care we can.

I stated at the outset that we were in the process of establishing a new 300-bed unit at the Lakehead in part of the new wing of our hospital there. This is in keeping with the advice given us by Dr. Richards and by Dr. Roberts, who inspected or studied the rest of our hospitals. We are also, as previously stated in this House, going to do the same thing in North Bay—take part of that hospital and convert it to a hospital school. But I can assure the hon. members that so long as this government is here, and so long as the thinking in this field is what it now is, there will be no more big institutions.

Five years ago when I announced the new look in psychiatric services I stated then that my advisers led me to understand that a unit for 1,000 retarded children was quite acceptable. In five years the thinking has changed and it is not now quite acceptable, and I am being guided by that advice. I can assure the hon. members, sir, that there will be no more 1,000-bed, or greater, hospital schools built.

My hon. friend from Downsview said that the school at Cedar Springs was originally planned to be 2,000 beds. This is quite true, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, I think it was planned to be 2,600 beds. That was the only control that I had over it when I recommended to the government that this plan be changed and that the size be cut to less than half. This has been done. It will have to be made a little larger because there is no proper administration building. Part of the hospital is used for that at the present time. Certain school facilities have yet to be built at that institution to round it out, but it will not gain any in beds, I can assure the hon. members of that. Nor again, I repeat, will there be any more large structures.

I assure you, Mr. Chairman, and assure the hon. members of this House, that it is the long-range objective of our department to move forward as rapidly, and yet as reasonably, as possible, to the end that we introduce whatever new methods of care and treatment for the retarded as are available.

I am glad to note that my hon. friend quoted to this House the fact that Dr. Richards stated that CPI in London is blazing new beacons of service. I do not think that a week passes, or a week has passed since that unit opened, that we have not been visited by authorities from all over the world to study the methods. We are using many of the methods that we have developed and I say to you, sir, and through you to the people of Ontario, that I know of no institution in this province, and I can think of none in Canada, where we could have a staff of more dedicated men and women than we have in that institution. Led by Dr. Zarfes, who has now been named our consultant in mental retardation, this unit has done a very great deal. I am proud to remind the hon. members again of something I announced about a year ago—that Dr. Zarfes was one of the two first foreign doctors, that is foreign to the United States, who has been singled out as a recipient for an award under the Joseph P. Kennedy Foundation. When Dr. Murray Barr, the leader of our research team at CPI in London—although a professor on the staff of the University of Western Ontario; he also holds an appointment on our staff—was recognized for some of the work which he has done in microbiology, Dr. Zarfes was singled out with his unit as the recipient of a medal from the American Psychiatric Association for outstanding work. These awards and these recognitions, Mr. Chairman, are not easily, nor lightly, given. They are given after very careful scrutiny and deep thought on the part of those who are charged with the responsibility of singling out the recipient. But this is something that the province of Ontario is doing, and this is the kind of work that we are trying to do in this very difficult field.

Mr. R. W. Gibson (Kenora): Mr. Chairman, for some time now I have been hearing disquieting rumours in our area to the effect that there are serious staff problems at the Ontario Hospital in Port Arthur. I have also heard that because of this staff problem, or staff shortage, the hospital is unable to use a good many of the facilities that have been provided in that area. I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell me if there is a staff shortage and if there are clinical facilities that are not being used by reason of the staff shortage?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, there is a staff shortage. There has been a crying staff shortage both at Port Arthur and North Bay since both hospitals were opened. We are hopeful that these shortages can be corrected, or at least improved, but I do not know of any facilities that are not being used because of lack of staff.

Mr. Gibson: Mr. Chairman, I understand that there are 300 empty beds in Port Arthur. Are you taking any concrete steps or can you tell us what concrete steps you are taking to make up for this staff shortage?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have just said what we are going to do with those 300 beds. Those 300 beds are empty deliberately; we are just making preparations now to open a unit for retarded children so that the people from northwestern Ontario will no longer have to come down to Orillia or Smith's Falls.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I have a number of points that I would like to refer to under this vote, but since the question of mental retardation has now been raised I will deal with that for the moment, and no doubt other members will raise other matters.

The specific aspect of the problem of mental retardation that I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister relates to the problem of mentally retarded infants. I am now talking of infants of a year or two years old, and more particularly of those who are severely retarded, for various reasons unable to respond in any way, except in the most elemental way, to any sort of treatment. They are bedridden and in need of constant care. As far as I know, there is no public provision for the care of such children in the province of Ontario at all, with a few exceptions. In the general policy the hospital schools, the provincial hospitals for the mentally retarded, do not take in infants and therefore this is left entirely as a matter of private concern, the concern of private organizations. As far as I know there are only two homes at the present time in the whole of Ontario where severely retarded infants can be placed if they cannot get into an Ontario Hospital, and they usually cannot.

One such home is at Plainfield, and is operated by an organization which calls itself the Ontario Homes for Mentally Retarded Infants Incorporated. I presume it is a non-profit organization chartered under The Corporations Act. There is also a similar home in Waterloo. I am not sure if it is run by the same organization or not, but at any rate it is run by a purely private organization. I happen to know a little more about the one at Plainfield than the one at Waterloo, so the balance of my remarks will be confined to it, but I understand that the situation at the Waterloo home is much the same.

The Plainfield home is, as I understand it, an extremely well run organization doing extremely good work for 54 patients. That is the problem, 54 patients. I do not know what percentage of the need that would represent, perhaps we could put one of our calculating machines to work on it, but it would be a very small proportion. There are 54 severely retarded children in this home receiving very good care.

The organization which operates the home receives, as I understand it, $7.70 per patient day from the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. It had some difficulty getting that but it has been getting it for some time now, and this is the only form of public assistance granted. There are no grants for the extension of this home, which is badly needed and which the sponsors and the board of directors would like to undertake. They have engaged in fund-raising campaigns but, of course, there are many fund-raising campaigns put on by private charities. This is one which apparently does not get quite as much attention and promotion as some others, and they have had great difficulty in raising sufficient funds to carry on any expansion. I believe they are now contemplating a modest expansion but their fund-raising campaign did not reach its objective, even though that objective was a modest one. They are not able to undertake the expansion which they themselves could undertake if they had the money and which certainly is very much needed.

I may say the honorary chairman of this organization is a gentleman who will be well known to all members of the House, and particularly to the hon. members on the Liberal benches. He is Senator David Croll. I think Senator Croll is well known for his interest in causes of humanity, and in helping human beings. I think he is to be congratulated for his efforts for this particular organization. Other similarly public-spirited citizens have associated themselves with the activities of this home.

When the home had a fund-raising campaign a few years ago, some of the people who permitted themselves to be named as sponsors included several members of the judiciary of Ontario as, for example, Judge J. C. Anderson of Belleville. It included also several members of the clergy, Rabbi Feinberg and Bishop Wilkinson, I think, were on the list. It included some members of our profession, if you can call it that. Some politicians such as Mr. John J. Wintermeyer and the hon. member for York South.

The institution engaged the interest and support of a representative group of prominent citizens, representing many professions and occupations, and yet it does not seem to be able to enlist much interest from this government. The government, as I understand it, just will not give any assistance at all. I am not suggesting that the government should now set up further institutions for infants, or should open the doors of the present institutions more widely to infants. I do not know. I am no expert in this matter. I am not quite sure what is the best way to approach the problem, but I do think, at least, the government should give some encouragement and assistance to organizations that are trying to meet at least a small fraction of the problem; and to people such as the executive director of the Ontario Homes for Mentally Retarded Infants, who are devoted and hard-working people, giving all of their time to this important cause.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Health why his department does not consider it appropriate that an organization, such as the one I have referred to, and its home at Plainfield, should not be eligible for assistance from the provincial Treasury in the form of grants for expansion of facilities. It seems to me this is a field where the government should take some responsibility; at least to the extent of assisting private organizations that have already entered the field, and are doing the best they can under very difficult circumstances with totally inadequate finances.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say, with very great respect to the hon. member, that he is not quite up to date on his information. I am afraid I will have to let part of it go at that because I am not in a position, immediately, to say much else. But this matter is very much under consideration at the present time, and I am hopeful that we will be able to deal with their problems.

I would point out that your information, sir, is not correct insofar as the maintenance grant is concerned. I would also point out that it was through my own personal efforts that this home was recognized for approval under the Ontario Hospital Services Commission plan. Actually it is not recognized by them. They are paying agents for my department. This money is drawn from the budget which you will vote on today, I hope. And the per diem rate is not $7 per patient, but $9.45 per patient. This is causing us a great deal of concern, and while we are quite prepared to say that the quality of care is good, this rate is quite out of keeping with the per diem costs of the home at Waterloo, which is truly a privately run operation. One would expect that the people running it would be looking for some return on their investment. But the other home at Plainfield is not. It is a non-profit institution under The Companies Act. However, we are satisfied with the quality of care. We will watch the budget and exercise whatever controls are necessary on it, since we are paying.

We do not believe that they should extend the physical plant now. They have just completed the replacement of that plant. We do not believe that the home should be allowed to get beyond its present size for many reasons. The main reason is because we do not believe that these institutions should become dated. The same philosophy applies to our own idea in equal detail, because the numbers involved here become part of the total numbers involved in our whole programme for retardates.

There are, at the present time—and I would like to point this out to the House, sir—more than 400 of these infants in our hospital schools. So to say that the hospital schools do not admit them is quite out of keeping with the facts. We prefer—

Mr. Bryden: I did not say that, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I recognize that the hon. member did not say that. But it is a popular belief that our hospital schools do not accept any child until he has reached the age of five or six years. This is what we prefer and, in the case of the child who is trainable or educable, this is the criterion we try to insist upon and try to use. But in the case of children who constitute great problems in care, we often have to relent and become less rigid in our attitude, and we have admitted more than 400 of them to our hospital schools.

There are 170 beds in the two institutions; the one at Plainfield and the one at Waterloo. We are, at present, involved in seeking at least two other places to accommodate an additional 150. We believe, then, on the basis of our knowledge, that this will provide adequate accommodation for this type of patient in the province. They will be maintained under the existing grant structure, at least for maintenance. I pointed out that we had no intention of allowing this to expand, because it is too isolated. We believe that this is one of the reasons why their per diem rate is much higher than the one in Waterloo. We understand the operator of the Waterloo home is able to get a very great deal of volunteer help, and naturally this cuts down a good deal on his overhead.

These patients actually need one person to look after each patient; feeding and keeping each patient clean is practically a full-time job, sir. You no sooner get over one procedure when you start another. This is the reason that the cost of maintenance is very high. They are completely helpless and, unfortunately, I have to say, completely hopeless. But this is just one of the problems that faces us in this matter. The support for these patients will continue. Our efforts are being directed to finding adequate space to look after the approximately 150 remaining, who need to be admitted to a centre of this kind in the province.

Mr. Letherby: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the hon. member for Downsview made some remarks that concerned me. I am very sorry that I did not have an opportunity to respond as early as I would like to because others were on their feet before me.

He did draw attention to my name being used in a matter of the resignation of three school teachers up there last summer, a matter to which the hon. Minister of Health has also drawn attention. But I would like to give another little slant to it, too, because I think I am quite conversant with the situation.

He mentioned three school teachers who had resigned and who had written me, and apparently I had done nothing about it. These teachers, to bring the hon. members up to date as the hon. Minister has endeavoured to do, were not probably the best qualified teachers but they were doing a good job in their respective positions throughout the year. When it came to summer holidays, as was the custom and is the custom, they were requested by the superintendent of the hospital to take other duties for the two or three months in the summer. This they refused to do; this they chose to dictate to him about. And I guess when he was adamant, and would not give in, they decided to file their resignation and sent me a copy of it. I immediately went to the hospital and interviewed the superintendent about the situation. He told me that they were belligerent; that they were more or less rebels; that they tried to dictate the policy of the hospital and the civil service, and he said, "Lloyd, had they not resigned I would have fired them." It is just as simple as that.

I was rather grieved at times this afternoon to hear the hon. Minister of Health making so many apologies for the conditions in our hospitals as I know them. Now—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I rise on a point of order. I was not apologizing, let that be clear. I was not apologizing. If there were any apology, it is that our state of knowledge has not advanced as rapidly as I personally would like it to do. But this is one of the matters I mentioned yesterday.

Mr. Letherby: I thank the hon. Minister. I withdraw that inference. I probably should not have intervened in that fashion.

What I am getting at is this: I make it a point every six or eight weeks of the year to go over to Orillia's Ontario Hospital and personally examine the situation as I find it at that time. We have countless new buildings there; we have the best of doctors, the best of nurses and the best of attendants. And I maintain this: Those retarded children in Orillia's Ontario Hospital get a great deal better care than any child gets in the average home of any hon. member in this House.

I do not know where any Department of Health, or any government, or any government institution, is giving greater or more tender concentrated care to these retarded children than they are getting in the Ontario Hospital in Orillia.

Something else I did not like was the smug way the hon. member for Downsview got up with a whole raft of clippings. He recites this clipping and that clipping—and I have always maintained the view, Mr. Chairman, that anybody who believes everything they read should eat everything they see. There are some people who are simple enough—and I class the hon. member for Downsview as one—that whatever they see in print, if it is an editorial—it might be some bloke back in the back office who does not know what he is talking about—as long as it is written they believe it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Letherby: Anyway, let me just say this: The hon. member for Downsview did not know what he was talking about when he mentioned the Orillia hospital. He should get out of Downsview and get up and have a look at it.

Mr. Bryden: The trouble is, the hon. member for Simcoe East cannot read, so he is prejudiced against people who can.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, several points—first about the Ontario Hospital at North Bay. I understood some years ago that it was the intention of the department to change the Ontario Hospital to a hospital school for retarded children. Today I understood the hon. Minister said, in his forward thinking, that he would not put these big hospitals where they are, say at Smith's Falls, Orillia, and possibly at North Bay, if it were to be a school for retarded children. Today I understood him to say that part of that institution is to be set aside for retarded children.

Then, in the initial statement of the hon. Minister, in his presentation to the House, he said that there were to be two hospitals set up in northern Ontario. Are they hospitals for mental patients or are they hospitals for retarded children?

And then, too, there was on the list for some time a clinical building to be attached to North Bay's Ontario Hospital. What is the status of that particular adjunct to the hospital?

And finally, in this particular point, in regard to the post-graduate students in psychiatry, the hon. Minister told the House that there were 25 students now taking courses. Since these bursaries were established, how many post-graduate students have had assistance from the government of Ontario, and how many of them have fulfilled the terms of their contract, that is one year of service for one year of bursary? That would mean each one of them would have done four years. I cannot understand, if this be the case, that each one of those graduates has to give a year of service, why there is, as the hon. Minister has already said himself, a shortage of psychiatric personnel at Port Arthur, at the Ontario Hospital at North Bay. I would like to ask those questions first, Mr. Chairman, and then I will have some other things to say.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the question about the hospital at North Bay. First of all, it was not several years ago; it was two years ago that we announced our intention of converting North Bay to a hospital school. That was while the thinking was still that a school which would accommodate 1,000 was not unreasonable. The thinking has changed. And North Bay will serve, according to our present thinking—and I want to make that clear, because again I make no apology for it, our thinking may be changed by next year—but according to our present thinking, North Bay will serve a fourfold purpose. There will be the out-patient services, which are there now; there will be a small active treatment unit; there will be a long-term treatment unit; and there will be a hospital school. It will be a complex rather than a single-purpose, unit.

The two hospitals I spoke of in my preliminary remarks are for the mentally ill. They will each consist of a 300-bed unit—100 of these beds for active treatment and a 200-bed long-term unit for custodial care.

Mr. Troy: Has the hon. Minister decided yet where these will be?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh yes, at Timmins and Sault Ste. Marie. The north will then be looked after—Timmins, North Bay, Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie, and Port Arthur. The north will be well covered with services for the mentally disturbed. There will be adequate space for all patients from that area.

In post-graduate psychiatry, first of all, I point out that the formal course at the university is a two-year course; therefore it is three years' service if they complete their training with us. Port Arthur and North Bay are not recognized for this training. The hospitals recognized for the training must be approved by the Royal College of Physicians, which passes on all facilities for specialist training and only a certain number of our hospitals are so recognized.

The clinical building will not be erected at North Bay—I think I announced that also three years ago—because, with the changing purpose we will not need the clinical building as originally envisioned. There will be, rather, school facilities and a small infirmary unit, more or less in the nature of a sick bay, for immediate and emergency and short-term treatment of physical ills for those patients who are too ill to be left in the ward but not ill enough to be admitted to the general hospital.

All of our patients are covered by hospital insurance. It is our thinking that, when they become ill, they should be transferred to the general hospital for physical illness of any duration.

The psychiatric course is five years long, but the first phase only lasts for two years, and the return of services is based upon the time the student or the doctor holds a bursary. I am afraid I cannot tell you at present how many psychiatrists altogether have profited under this bursary plan, because this goes back quite a long way.

I have the figures for 1963. There were 37 in psychiatry, that is only for one year and I think this project was started something in the order of 30 years ago, so that there would be quite a goodly number. I think the reason for the shortage is that just not enough doctors are going into psychiatry. It is not an easy specialty and many of us do not like to practise psychiatry even as general practitioners. I believe that that is the only satisfactory explanation. I believe they earn as much as those in other specialties. It is a fine type of work. I can think of no other reason because, every nation, as I said the other day, suffers from this same shortage of psychiatrists.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I am glad the hon. Minister is going to reactivate the out-patients clinic because for some time it has not been functioning and I believe you did mention, sir, the clinical building some time ago. I had forgotten that. I know that the people in North Bay, at least at the newspaper, have been quite critical of the announcement that there was to be a complete change-over to a hospital school.

I cannot accept though, Mr. Chairman, the idea that seems prevalent that the shortage of hospital facilities is isolated to Metropolitan Toronto. Is it not true that the large schools at Smith's Falls and Orillia are somewhat overcrowded? Since this question involves some measure of criticism, and since the hon. member for St. George (Mr. A. F. Lawrence), who is one of the few who has so far taken any part in the debate on the estimates, said that criticism should be tempered with constructive suggestions, I am going to suggest to the hon. Minister that he must recognize the need for bed space, both for retarded and chronic patients. He must recognize that some northern Ontario hospitals, for instance I can point out one hospital that is situated in Elliot Lake that is a $3.5 million hospital, are certainly not overcrowded.

It has facilities for further bed patients. It could make a real contribution to the overcrowded facilities in other areas by utilizing, say, one floor, and then expanding the facilities in some of these hospitals for the use of mentally retarded and chronic patients. It seems to me, from my own experience in Northern Ontario, that there is a great need for chronic beds. Also, if the former mayor of Capreol is quite correct, there is a great need for beds for retarded children.

Now I have said that the predominant need for hospitals in the north is the need for the facilities for the use of mentally retarded and chronic patients. I bring that to your attention. We have, as I have said, a $3.5 million hospital at Elliot Lake. Right at this date it is being used to a capacity of less than 80 per cent. Next door to the hospital in Elliot Lake are some 20 large, well-planned apartment blocks, certainly within walking distance of the hospital. The hospital itself is equipped with the latest in modern X-ray and treatment procedures.

The other day the hon. Minister made some suggestion that his department was considering the establishment of a complete community dedicated and planned for all aspects of the treatment of the sick. I suggest to him, sir, that Elliot Lake would fit well into that plan of the hon. Minister's. Elliot Lake could be such a community.

Very shortly, this community will have at the disposal of such an enterprise hospital facilities, low rental housing accommodation for families who would like to retire and be near their retarded children, families who would like to be near chronic invalids who might be placed in these facilities, empty churches of every denomination, empty schools, both public and separate, secondary and vocational, and all the supporting services necessary to establish a community such as the hon. Minister envisages.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that an arrangement such as this would go a long way to relieving any overcrowded conditions in Metropolitan Toronto, or other southern parts of Ontario. At the same time it would give assistance to the regional officers and the people involved in mental retardation, people who are carrying on the work of teaching and helping retarded children in every degree of retardation on a voluntary basis, mostly under discouraging conditions.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions I would like to ask the hon. Minister under this vote.

In the Hamilton area now, we have to make application for retarded children to Cedar Springs, rather than Orillia. Up until a year or two ago, we sent them to Orillia. We would apply there, and within three months to two years we would be able to get them in at Orillia. In the case of Cedar Springs, we are waiting up to three years. I would like to just tell the hon. Minister of two problems I have had within the last few months. I wrote to the hon. Minister about the problem of a little girl in Hamilton and he suggested—in fact, he also made the arrangements—that I take her up to the research institute in London. This was done and I had the opportunity of spending a day there while the little girl was going through all the examinations. I will say this, that at London they did a real good job. She was examined completely for the whole day. I was given an opportunity of going around and inspecting the whole building. I had the opportunity of talking to the superintendent. One interesting statement was made during my discussions with him that was quite a surprise to me. He said that it was quite nice to see a member of Parliament come up here and spend a day without trying to put on pressure to get somebody into this institute. This seemed a little peculiar to me.

At the end of the day they said we could take the little girl home, and in a month's time we could come back up there for a final decision. They gave me the opportunity of sitting in with the staff during discussion of the problem of the little girl. They spent an hour discussing it with the different groups that examined her. I went up early one morning a month later and was able to sit in with them and listen to the conclusion that they had come to. I think they had come to a good conclusion. The little girl, she was 7 years old, was definitely retarded. She could not walk. She could talk very little. Their decision by the doctors and social workers there was that she should go to Cedar Springs.

This pleased me very much. I went downstairs and waited for an hour. The doctor came down after she was through with her other cases. She said the problem, of course, is when we will be able to get her into Cedar Springs. She said in the child's age group the waiting list now is quite long and it would be from one to two years before we could get her in. She suggested that we take the little girl home and see if we could get some assistance in the Hamilton area. If we got into real problems where the mother just could not look after this child any more, we were to get in touch with them in London again and bring her back up there for a month to give the mother a little bit of rest. That was the decision.

The other one was a boy from 8 to 10 years old. While I was there I checked on this case, too. He was on the list for Cedar Springs. He was 54th on the list for that age group. I understand that in Cedar Springs they have areas for children up to seven years, and from 7 to 10, and then for some teenagers. In this list, the earliest you could get him in was two years. Probably it would be three years before he could go in.

I will say this for the superintendent at Cedar Springs. I would like to congratulate him on the job he is doing as far as not allowing them to overload his hospital. But I do think we have got to get more hospitals built in this area. In the larger group, the teenage group, there were openings; if you had somebody to go there you could have had them put in right away.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister what advantage there is in sending the people to London, for all this service, and it is real service that you get there. I think they do a tremendous job in this institute in London, but all you end up doing is bringing the child home for a year or two years to sit there to wait. I think this government now has a responsibility to try to get more of these hospitals built, so that we can get this type of children in there, so that they have an opportunity to be looked after in the right way. I am wondering: Is this a fact that we have to wait up to three years at Cedar Springs to get these children admitted?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is quite possible that the child may be seen at CPRI and sent home for three years, or even longer. This is the reason for establishing the assessment centre. And when I say that one out of four who pass through that centre is recommended for admission to the hospital school, you will understand perhaps why we established this type of centre. We still believe there are far more children in our hospital schools than there ought to be. The answer is not to build more hospital schools.

If you read Dr. Richards' report carefully, and if you analyze it, and if you try to read between the lines—this I recognize might be difficult for laymen because they have not had the advantage of speaking to Dr. Richards—then you see that Dr. Richards makes quite a good deal of the fact that Ontario has more beds than either the United States or the U.K.—a greater bed rate. And when he points out that we apparently have a bed complex, I think he is putting his finger on one of our problems. The answer is not to build more hospital schools; the answer is not to crowd more children into hospitals; the answer is to teach parents to live with the problem and to teach them how to help the children themselves, and help the family.

This is why we have been very interested in watching the development of the community schools, and the increasing support that is being given to them through The Department of Education. Just because a child is retarded is not a reason to tuck it away out of sight and out of ken. This is what we are trying to do; this is part of our long-range plan—to leave the child, leave the person, as long as we possibly can in the community, recognizing that when the day comes that the parents pass out of the scene and the citizens no longer feel a responsibility to the retarded one, then the state, or society in some form or other, will have to take care of him.

But here, again, it is quite understandable to me that CPRI might see a child and send him home for two, three, four or five years or more, with the understanding that if the parents had difficulty, they could come back to the centre. This is part of the service. It is not only an assessment of the child, but it also provides a prescription service, a counselling service to the family, because frequently the families need as much help as the patient.

Mr. Davison: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to remind the hon. Minister again that I had the opportunity of sitting in for an hour with all of these people in London when the decision was made that morning that the child should go to Cedar Springs. When we tried to see when the child could go to Cedar Springs, an hour or so later, it was then that we discovered that it would be a year to two years. This is not a case of sending the child home to see if she cannot get along and the parents will look after her; here is a child, totally crippled, who still has to wait a year to two years to get in. The decision was made that morning, among the doctors, that she should go.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I recognize that the decision was made in this particular case. Your question was framed on generalities, not on any one particular case. I do not know about this specific case, but I was talking about the general programme, and pointing out to you that it was quite understandable that many children who are seen at CPRI are sent home, because this is part of the service they are set up to give.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question in regard to the Ontario Mental Retarded Hospital at Cedar Springs. There have been a number of statements made of overcrowding. Is all space available at Cedar Springs taken up by patients? And how many patients are there in Cedar Springs hospital at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, all available space is taken up now; that is, 953 patients. The hospital was built to accommodate 1,200 but the rest of the space is taken up for administration.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us how many bed spaces are available here in the province for retarded children?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Available?

Mr. Trotter: No, I will not say available; I mean how many are being used? I know they are all filled from the information I have.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Six thousand, seven hundred and forty-one.

Mr. Trotter: Six thousand, seven hundred and forty-one?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, and then I think we have something in the order of between 2,000 and 3,000 adults in our hospitals for the mentally ill.

Mr. Trotter: But the children themselves are slightly over 6,700; is that the case?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, it is difficult to say "children themselves", because all of these institutions are communities rather than isolated for children—

Mr. Trotter: So that you could add 2,000 on for the adults and you would have approximately 8,700?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Something in the order of 10,000, altogether.

Mr. Trotter: Something in the order of 10,000. I want to say a word about this for this reason: I agree with what the hon. Minister says, that it is more important to keep the children in the homes if at all possible, but I know that with the vast majority of cases that I have seen—and I know the average hon. member sees quite a number of cases over a period of years—the children are almost beyond teaching. There were exceptions, but they were almost all bed cases from the day they were born.

Any time I have appealed to the hon. Minister to have these children taken into a hospital, it is almost always on the grounds that, because they were such a great care, they were ruining the health of the mother, they were upsetting the other children in the family; certainly, for anything I have seen, this was the truth. Even in cases like that, it was very difficult to get them into the hospital—the parents were on a long waiting list—and the only way they did get in was because a member of the Legislature appealed personally to the government, sir. I must give the hon. Minister credit; he has never turned down a case in which I asked that something be done.

But there are two ways to look at it, Mr. Chairman. The association here in Ontario, the Ontario Association for Retarded Children, put out a report in 1960. You might say when it gave out the report of what was needed for bed space that it may have had a bed complex; but certainly that association was well informed, and it went to a great deal of trouble in bringing out that report.

I have gone into it in some detail in this House. It said, back in 1959, that they needed over 12,000 beds for retarded children in the province of Ontario. It went so far as to project what was needed over the years and I think, for this year, 1964, it estimated it would need approximately 13,400 beds. I think its projections, all made back about 1959 or 1960, were accurate. It estimated that our population would be around 6.7 million, and knowing that the retarded rate is normally about two per cent, and of those children who are retarded about ten per cent should have hospital bed care.

The Association for Retarded Children was not arguing that all retarded children were bed cases; it said there would be approximately 134,000 retarded children in Ontario. Well, give or take a small percentage, that figure is pretty accurate today. So again it says ten per cent of this figure should require some hospital space.

If that is true, there is approximately a shortage of 3,400 beds here in Ontario. And despite the theory the hon. Minister has that we have too many children in the hospitals, I know any time I have been through some of these hospitals, the cases are very serious. And certainly in the hospital schools, where you try to use the hospital as a school, they are far too crowded.

Almost all the people you talk to on this subject say that the hospitals are so crowded that they really are not schools, that they are hampered in doing their school work. Again, I am not saying that no teaching is done or that those who are trying are not doing a good job. It is simply that the facilities are not there. The government has had a legitimate excuse in the past in saying that the general public has not been interested in this field, and it is true, it is something that the general public has tried to sweep under the rug, as it were. But today there is an awakening and when TV Channel 9 opened a few years ago, it certainly did a lot in its opening programme to advertise the need and the help required for retarded children.

I feel that the government has not taken advantage of the new interest in this field, and admittedly again, the government itself has done something in trying to advertise to the general public the need of more interest in retarded children. But the fact still remains that despite the development of community interest, despite the fact that most parents would keep their children at home if at all possible, there are still a good many thousands of retarded children in the province of Ontario who should be in hospitals—not only in the hospital as a bed case but many of them should be in there for schooling. There is a tremendous shortage and I feel that the government is burying its head in the sand in this case as it is, let us say, with the shortage of hospitals in Toronto and the shortage of nurses in this area and throughout the province. There is a real need for expansion in this field.

I am not going to go into detail on the report that the Ontario Association for Retarded Children has presented in 1960. But what it said in that year still holds true. It pointed out the tremendous shortage of bed space for retarded children throughout the province of Ontario. And I would still give that as recommended reading to the hon. Minister of Health.

One other thing I would just like to say in closing, Mr. Chairman, is this: Here again there are cases that have come to my attention, I cannot speak in a general situation, I can just speak as I have seen these things happen. There were two cases that came to me that were supposed to be hopeless cases and nothing could be done. We applied to get the children into a hospital for retarded children and they were granted admission. When these particular two cases were studied—and again I am giving this in capsule form, because they were spread two or three years apart—two things were found out. In one case it was found that a child who was thought to be hopelessly retarded, if given treatment with drugs, could be restored to its home, and so it was. There was a case in which by giving him treatment and some teaching, they were able as a result of hospital care, to return the child to its home. And in another case the hospital authorities really felt that the child was not as retarded as was originally felt and as a result of the training he got and as a result of the instruction that the parents received, again that child was returned to its home.

But there again, if the hospital authorities had not themselves got hold of these two cases, these children would have been considered as hopeless. I grant you that having these hospitals available, having the bed space available, makes it possible for authorities who have knowledge to treat cases and to return children to their homes. But again, the problem still remains that the space is not available and I regret very much that the hon. Minister is allowing only for an increase of space of 300 in the Lakehead and 300 in North Bay. Much more needs to be done, and I hope by next year the hon. Minister will have plans for a greater expansion.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think I should add another 300 in Palmerston. That hospital school will open this year.

I would also point out and this is worthy of note—I spoke before in generalities but I have the figures now—Ontario has 138 beds per 100,000, the United States has 93 beds per 100,000; and Great Britain has 125 beds. The question that is bound to come into one's mind is, have we a greater number of mentally retarded here than they have in other jurisdictions? I point these things up to show you that beds is not the answer. The admission rate or the need for beds depends entirely on what the philosophy of the times happens to be and what facilities are provided in the community. And this, sir, is society's responsibility.

This government set up—I think it is also two years ago through The Department of Public Welfare—grants for communities to establish residences for the retarded in connection with their schools. I am not positive what has come about under that programme, but it is my understanding that there is only one community which has availed itself of this opportunity. This is not in keeping with one of the things that the hon. member appeared to me to be pointing out; namely, that society wants to keep the children at home. I can only come to one conclusion and that is that society in general wants the children taken into care, and we do not believe this is a good idea. This again is why we are setting up the screening and assessment centres so that we can try to help parents and help families to look after the retarded in the community and within the circle of the home as long as possible.

Mr. J. F. Edwards takes the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if I may broaden this discussion from that of retarded children for a moment to the general mental health programme, I want to draw to the attention of the House a copy of a report that came into my possession recently and I think it is a most interesting document. I wonder if the hon. Minister is aware of it or even the existence of this organization. I raise it because I think it bears very directly on what I know is a major concern of the hon. Minister's, namely the development of community mental health programmes rather than an attempt to cope with this problem in big institutions, unrelated to the normal family, normal community environment that the person may have been living in.

This is an interim report submitted to the National Institute of Mental Health in the United States, by what is known as the National Institute of Labour Education. This National Institute of Labour Education is a non-profit organization of universities and unions specializing in labour education, and incidentally it is in receipt of grants under the mental health programme that was launched by the late President Kennedy.

The main point emerging from this, Mr. Chairman, that I want to draw to the attention of the hon. Minister is that I think one of our great tasks is to secure the voluntary co-operation of individuals and organizations in the community if we are going to succeed in the integration of mental health services back at the community level.

I want to suggest to the hon. Minister that one of the organizations in this country whose very significant resources have not been involved in this kind of integration at the community level, is the trade union movement. In fact, it was pointed out here that when this organization first got going, the trade union movement in the United States had no mental health programme, as such. It tended to support mental health programmes advanced by other organizations. What they have done, as they became involved in the community health services, is to develop their own programme and to involve, I repeat, the very considerable resources they have of literally millions of members in organizations across the country. I know from my own experience that there are few organizations which can be appealed to on an altruistic basis in terms of taking up a cause within the community as a whole beyond their own immediate selfish interests—if you want to describe them as such—than the trade union movement. In fact, I think I can best indicate briefly to the House, the kind of thing that in my view this opens up by just a few quotations from this interim report. On page 4, for example, it states that:

One of the primary objectives as stated by President Kennedy is to reduce the state mental hospital population by providing services which will make possible treatment in the community of a large number of people who are at present confined in these institutions. While in principle the state hospital is available to the community at large, in practice its population is overwhelmingly drawn from the lower income groups.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I just pause there—I am curious to know if the general conclusion that has emerged from a study of the situation in the United States, with regard to state mental hospitals, has application here in Canada or in the province of Ontario? They state that the overwhelming majority of people in the state mental hospitals are people drawn from the lower income groups. Now, let me proceed:

To bring about a reduction in state mental hospital population, therefore, requires that treatment and rehabilitation services be created in the community, which can effectively reach lower socio-economic groups. But this represents a new and a challenging task. While we cannot review the evidence here, it has been convincingly established in the last decade that workers and individuals in lower socio-economic groups are confined to state hospitals in the first place because of the failure of existing community services to meet their needs.

The reason for this failure has been explored from many theoretical points of view, but there is common agreement that the deficiencies have not merely been quantitative but qualitative as well. To a large extent the orientation and treatment—This is another significant point:

To a large extent the orientation and treatment methods of existing community facilities have been based on service to middle- and upper-class individuals. They have neither attracted blue-collar workers nor found them to be suitable clients when and if they presented themselves for help. Whether the new community centres will in fact function as an alternative to state mental hospitals, therefore, will be crucially determined by their ability to break away from the old pattern and to offer types of services and treatment methods which are appropriate to the blue collar and low income patients.

Now again, Mr. Chairman, if I just may pause and interject. On the surface I find it a little difficult to believe, to understand, how the conditions really could be fundamentally different in Ontario and Canada, but is it true that our community mental health services are, in fact, going primarily to middle and upper income groups rather than to the lower income groups?

Again, from page 6 of this report, and this maybe gets to the point as to why this is the case, as has been found in the United States:

Workers' attitudes toward mental illness and psychiatry are such that they militate against self-referral and early and effective treatment. Mental health personnel today generally have little contact with blue-collar or lower income individuals, except when they are already suffering from fully developed illness. For these and other reasons, whatever might be said about the prevalence of mental illness in a lower socio-economic group as compared to other groups in the community, there is no question that their unmet needs for mental health services are greatest.

The greatest needs demand high priority. This means that in many communities the strengthening in mental health programmes and treatment will call for emphasis in achieving more effective coverage of blue-collar and low income families.

And then, just one final comment:

The threat of the breadwinner being sent away for a long period of time adds to the catastrophic view which a working-class family holds of mental illness. Treatment in the community on a day basis, while it may result in loss of income for a period of time, does not entail a total disruption of family ways of life.

I might say, without quoting directly, that there is another interesting point in that they have made a study of groups that are poverty stricken and who are not in unions—in other words, the “forgotten fifth” that I referred to in some earlier comments of mine and those President Lyndon Johnson is now directing so much attention to. He has given it top legislative consideration. In his State of the Union speech to the nation early in January, the same kind of attitudes, and therefore the same consequences flowing from them, are to be found in that “forgotten fifth”—the generally and chronically poverty-stricken group—as you will find among those who are in the trade union movement.

When I opened, Mr. Chairman, I said to the hon. Minister that I was rising primarily to draw this to his attention, because two things struck me. One, that I am curious to know whether or not some of the conclusions that have emerged from this study in the United States do have application in Canada and in Ontario, and if so, whether the hon. Minister might not give some consideration to discovering whether this is not the case. And even more important, through the agencies of his own department, or perhaps through voluntary agencies, to explore the possibilities for securing the co-operation in Ontario of the trade union movement in this kind of a programme in a fashion similar to what apparently is being done in the United States.

I do this for overall and, it seems to me, compelling reasons. If half of the people in our hospitals are people who are afflicted with mental illness, and if the trade union movement, as I think is the case, is one of the most widespread organizations in terms of roots in many communities and with great resources which I am certain would be there to be used and to be integrated in this development of community mental health services, I am wondering whether there is not a great unexploited potential here that the hon. Minister or such other agencies as he has influence with might not consider and take some action on.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is a most interesting matter. I am sorry I have not read this report. I would like to read it. But may I say with some humility, and yet some pride, that the philosophy underlying it was enunciated in this House in February, 1959?

This is our thinking and, sir, if I recall my words at that time, it was outlined in the blueprint given to me by my advisers. If we could start all over again, we would start at exactly the opposite end from where we now are and from where we had apparently started a long time ago—at the community level. Here again the direction of our programming has been a challenge.

I am very proud of the accomplishments of the past five years—in fact of our accomplishment thus far in getting this back to the community. At that time—and again I have to conjure up the figures from memory, and I may well be wrong—but I think we had something in the order of 11 or 14 out-patient clinics in the province. I think we now have something like 23 or 24 serving 43 communities. Of those, as announced, and beginning last year, we have now gotten several of them back into the community. Five new services are proposed for this year, a carry-over of five from last year. We will transfer these services to the general hospitals, and they will be supported by grants. We are going to transfer these services, which are operated now by the province, back into the hands of the community.

In addition to that, of course, there are three community psychiatric hospitals. I believe that we are the only province in Canada that can boast of this. These hospitals were formerly used for the treatment of tuberculosis. They are no longer needed for that and now they are involved in an equally difficult and an equally challenging field.

They are treating the people from their own communities.

In addition to that, we have encouraged for some years now the establishment of psychiatric beds in general hospitals. And again, speaking very largely from memory, there are in excess of 1,000 such beds in the general hospitals of the province.

I said a short time ago, Mr. Chairman, that we proposed the establishment of two new mental hospitals. I am hoping that before we get into the building of them we will have changed this to one. Because, after we build both of them and those that are now in progress, I would hope that the province of Ontario would build no more hospitals for the mentally ill and that this would go back to the community where it belongs. The grant support given for the establishment of psychiatric beds is such that the community does not need to raise any money at all. If it is a unit of a general hospital, the total cost of construction is possible out of the grants provided by this government and the $2,000 added to that grant by the federal government.

There is an area in which, if I may digress and I meant to say this in answer to my hon. friend from Parkdale, there is an area in which they on their side of the House could probably use great influence with their colleagues and counterparts at the federal level. If the federal government would look upon mental illness, as upon any other illness, as we have been trying to look upon it and as we are trying to encourage society to look upon it, and include the mentally ill patient within the scope of the hospital insurance plan, then something of the order of $20 million extra would be available to me here in the province of Ontario to spend on areas in which we could use more and in which we could broaden our programmes. I just throw that out as an idea on which my hon. friends might work, because this would be a really worthwhile contribution.

The trade union movement and its potentialities is one that has had an intriguing interest for me. We have found in rather superficial discussions with labour spokesmen that they have been quite interested and quite helpful to us, particularly in the matter of rehabilitation. One of the great difficulties with a patient who has been mentally ill is one, as my hon. friend pointed out yesterday with respect to epileptics, of getting them back into occupations. Frankly we did anticipate as much difficulty from the labour movement as we anticipated from management and we were very pleasantly surprised to find that we were not getting any opposition; indeed we were getting help. We have found that the labour movement has been extremely helpful and co-operative in areas where we have tried to establish rehabilitation councils, co-ordinating bodies to help us bring some order and some routine into the whole rehabilitative process. It might well be, as the hon. member for York South has pointed out, that we could get into deeper discussions with them in this matter. Our thinking is in line with theirs, or maybe I should say theirs is in line with ours—because I think we enunciated this policy some years ago—to get the treatment of the mentally ill patient back into the community, so that no gap and no chasm will ever be established between the patient, and his home or his home community, when he becomes ill.

The findings relative to the economics of the problem in essence would, I think, be very much the same here as they are in the United States, although not quite as marked. For some reason or another, those who are in straitened economic circumstances tend to get into the state-supported institutions. It may be again harkening back to the old idea that mental illness was something of a disgrace, and if you had any means whatsoever, you tried to get treatment in a centre where as few people as possible would know about it. You would go to a private sanatorium, or private spa overseas, or something of that kind, and at least this would cloak your illness with an air of respectability. The poor man or the poor woman, of course, could not afford this and so he or she had to go into the state-supported institutions. I cannot say that we are finding this now with the community clinics, and I cannot say that we will find this. I do not expect we will find this as much now, since we have tried to strip admission to our hospitals of as much of the legal mumbo-jumbo as we possibly could.

My legal friends may not agree with me in this, but I am still not convinced of the reasons for the necessity of all the legal trappings before a patient can be admitted because he is mentally ill. We have gone a good long way in this connection and because of this, we are rather interested to see if we will still attract only the lower economic groups to hospitals as we have done in the past.

I want to thank the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, for the suggestions he has made with respect to trade unions because it has intriguing possibilities.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased to hear from the hon. Minister that in the future, smaller hospital schools would be built throughout this province. It has been my feeling for some time, and I have often visited the Smith's Falls hospital, that there was no need for large institutions like that hospital I just referred to. It tends to create many administrative problems and is a hardship for families who have to travel long distances to visit their children.

Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister through you, if he has any intention of establishing a hospital school in Ottawa or vicinity in the near future, and if so, is he planning to have the hospital staffed by bilingual people in view of the large number of French-speaking patients from several counties in the area?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the question is "no." We have no intention in our present planning to establish a hospital school in Ottawa, because of its proximity to Smith's Falls. There are other areas of the province where the need is much greater and where the distances are far greater and I could not foresee the possibility for a very long time to come of another hospital school being established in the vicinity of Ottawa.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I was glad to hear the statement the hon. Minister made a few minutes ago, which if I interpreted it correctly was to the effect that he can now see the end of the building of large mental institutions. I have listened to statements by the hon. Minister over the years in this House with regard to the policy for treatment of mental illness, and it has always seemed to me that there has been a strange ambivalence in his presentations. On one hand he has advised the House, or I have understood him to say, that the large mental institution is not the answer to the problem, and yet the government seems to go on building them. I take it that this is now coming to an end.

I suppose there is the problem of distribution that the hon. Minister mentioned in another connection, which may require some further construction, but I had understood it was the hon. Minister's view, and it seems to be the view of other authorities I have listened to in the field, that the large mental institution separated from the community at large is not the modern answer to the problem. This is not suggesting that there is not a place for treatment in hospitals, but this is a relic of the past that we should try to get away from.

The department, no doubt, has made considerable progress in the development of facilities at all levels for the treatment of mental illness, to ensure that there will be early diagnosis and that the patient will undergo a continuous process from the time of diagnosis until he is finally considered to be fully recovered. As I say, the department has been working on this but it seems to me that there still is a tremendous area that has not been touched yet, or where very little progress has been made. There seem to be particularly serious gaps with regard to aftercare.

This is a problem the hon. Minister has already discussed and has been discussing all afternoon, I suppose, but it still seems that there is a very serious shortage of facilities or failure to use facilities where they can be used, in making sure that patients, when they come out of the mental hospital, do not go back in again. I was interested to read an article in the January-February, 1964, issue of Canada's Mental Health, written by Dr. J. S. Pratten, whose salary for all I know may be covered by the estimate that we are now voting on. He stated in this article:

With active programmes of therapy and changed attitudes, the hospitals are now discharging about 75 per cent of new admissions in about three months. But this, it seems to me, is a disservice to our patients. Hospital out-patient, community, psychiatric, medical, social work and rehabilitation services are not sufficiently developed or sufficiently integrated with psychiatric hospitals to provide adequate aftercare which the patients need. These may be psychological support, vocational assistance, counselling, psychotherapy, medication, etc.

Readmission rates are rapidly reaching 35 to 50 per cent of returns of former patients within weeks or a few months of leaving hospital. The American five states study and other reports, for example, Carmichael, indicate that readmission rates may easily be reduced to 15 per cent or less, given adequate organization of services and facilities to provide continuing community care.

A little later in the same article, Dr. Pratten says:

Important as this close-working relationship between our hospital and the patient's community doctors may be—

he had been talking about close liaison between the personal physician of the patient and the hospital:

—we believe it can and should be extended even further. We see the need for more frequent contacts with public health staffs and with other community agencies as well. Only in this way can continuity of patient care be realized. As psychiatrists, social workers and psychologists are added to our hospital—he is talking now about his own hospital at Kingston:

—we plan an even greater out-patient and community focus. We hope to arrange meetings, seminars and short courses for community doctors, clergy, public health nurses, social workers, Victorian Order of Nurses and others.

I agree with McKerracher, who stated that steps to improve psychiatric care might be initiated by the psychiatrists, but the general practitioner can be his most effective ally. They will need help from others, including the social worker and public health nurse. Treating psychiatric patients in a hospital or community is truly a team job.

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, I am not trying in any way to detract from the work the department and the hon. Minister have done in trying to develop community facilities for the treatment of the mentally ill, but it would appear that there is still a long way to go, particularly in this matter of aftercare. And if it is true that readmission is now running at 35 to 50 per cent, when it could be reduced to 15 per cent, as has been indicated by such studies as the American five states study, I think this is an area where even greater effort of the government, or the specific department, might be directed.

As a matter of fact, I think in the long run it is a matter of economics, apart from anything else. If we can get patients out of a hospital in a few months, as is now the case for the majority of patients, and then if we can keep them out, there is no question the community is going to save itself a lot of money in the long run. It is also going to have a larger productive work force, and therefore it will have economic benefits on the other side of the scale as well.

One difficulty, as it seems to me as a layman in dealing with the whole problem of mental health, is that we never can get enough money for it. I am sure that the hon. Minister and his department would like to do a great many things that they are not doing now, if they had more money, and yet they are asking for a very sizeable amount of money, we will all agree. Yet there never seems to be enough available to provide all the services that are required.

I am wondering if part of the effort should not now be directed to much larger efforts at public education than have been undertaken in the past, to make the taxpayer conscious of the need for expenditure in the field of mental health; and also making him conscious of the fact that quite sizeable expenditures now may relieve the burden on him at a later time. I feel that if the problem were really put to the community fairly and squarely, and people fully understood everything that was involved, we could get even larger amounts of money spent on mental health than is now spent—and I think larger sums are required at this juncture. As I say, I hope that the larger expenditures now may save us money in the long run; I am satisfied that they will. But I believe there should be a greater effort to create public awareness of the need for expenditures in this field, even if that does mean increased taxation in some form or other. I think this is a necessary vital area of public education.

I think also that an area where larger expenditures are required is in the field of research. We had some discussions about research in general terms a little earlier in dealing with the hon. Minister's estimates. At that time he put forward a philosophy, relating to research, which I think was somewhat out of harmony with that of some of us on this side of the House. He almost excluded the public agencies from any area, other than simply making grants available when requests were made for grants and it appeared that the requests were well founded. He seemed to exclude the public agencies from giving leadership and co-ordination, and possibly organization, in the research field.

This does not seem to be entirely in harmony with the views of experts in the mental health field, or at any rate those experts who participated in the preparation of the submission of the Canadian Mental Health Association to the Royal Commission on Health Services for presentation in May of 1962. In that brief substantial emphasis was placed on research and on the need for planning research, co-ordinating it and integrating it. It was agreed that the major role of governments was to put up the money, but it was also agreed that they had a role to play in developing, organizing and co-ordinating research efforts. I may say that this brief was very critical of all levels of government in Canada for their failure to do anything very serious in the field of mental health research. One of the appendices to it was entitled: "A nickel for the mind", indicating that what we are ready to provide for mental illness in this country is about five cents.

As a matter of fact, Ontario and Saskatchewan are two jurisdictions where the mental health association at that time thought some serious efforts were being made in this field. They advocated a gradual expansion of funds from the federal government at the rate of about ten to 20 per cent per year for research in this field. However, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into that in detail.

I would like, however, to emphasize again the point I was trying to make earlier as to the vital need for aftercare in this field, and the apparent inadequacy, at the present time, of facilities to provide aftercare in the community.

Vote 713 agreed to.

On vote 714:

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to speak on this vote. This is the vote that gives us the opportunity, and places on us the responsibility as well, I think, of making some remarks to do with the increase in the premium for hospitalization insurance.

To put my remarks into focus as well as I can, I want to read the statement of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) in relation to this matter, on page 17 of the Budget submission. The hon. Provincial Treasurer was pleased to say this:

To accomplish this it has been decided to increase the monthly rate for a single person to $3.25 and for a family unit to $6.50, effective July 1, 1964.

Even with this increase in premium the province will still be required to provide $50 million toward the cost of the plan, as well as more than $75 million for the operation of mental hospitals and for grants to sanatoriums.

In other words, and this is the point I want to make with you, Mr. Chairman: The hon. Provincial Treasurer says the cost of the Ontario hospital insurance programme will again be shared approximately one-third by the province, one-third by the federal government and one-third by the insured persons themselves.

It will be noted, Mr. Chairman, I am sure, by yourself and others, that in order to place the government in a position where it could say it was giving one-third toward the cost of hospitalization, it has to bring in the $75 million that is presently being paid for the operation of mental hospitals and for sanatorium grants.

This is in keeping with, and is no moving away from, the original position of the government in this regard, because this is exactly the position that the government took in the days when the hospital insurance plan was coming into effect. These are the debates for 1958 and at page 929 in Hansard—I want these words to be heard by all hon. members of the House—hon. Mr. Frost is speaking in the debates on March 17, 1958, and he is answering Mr. Wintermeyer, and he says to the House:

Now what we are endeavouring to do frankly is this—

Mr. Frost was always frank, as the hon. members of the House will recall.

What we are doing frankly is this: We are not looking to find a great big hole in which to put money with a pitchfork. We are trying to take vast sums of money that this province has been paying [mind you] has been paying, and streamline them into a hospital insurance plan that will be for the benefit of everybody. I would say this to my hon. friends: If we can keep our expenditures close to what we are spending at the present time, it will please us all very, very much.

What Mr. Frost was saying, of course, was simply this, that he was prepared to move the government into participation in the hospital insurance plan but he was prepared only to move it in on the understanding that the government was not going to be called upon to pay additional sums to what it was already paying. He said in as plain words as you can read:

It is in our mind that we will pay what we are paying at the present time.

What we were paying at the present time, of course, was mental and TB costs and the plan in those early days was as it is today—to build up, to bolster the government's share so that it can say it is paying a third, by hauling in the $75 million that is paid for mental and TB patients.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, in all fairness, that that is a false and misleading premise upon which the government seeks to build its contribution toward hospital insurance. And the reason that it is false, and the reason it is not soundly based is because ever since the time in this province when we had mental cases and when we had TB cases, these cases were taken care of by the province of Ontario, and the status of those institutions and those patients was not changed one iota by the coming into effect of the Ontario hospital insurance. By no stretch of the imagination can my hon. friend say to this House that TB and mental payments have a proper place when you are building up your case toward the point where you can say, "We are paying a third of the cost of hospital insurance." They have not any place there at all.

The other point that I wanted to make was this. The government said in its Budget that it is paying $50 million toward the hospital scheme direct. The House will recall, I am sure, that prior to the introduction of hospital insurance the government of the day was paying substantial grants to the hospitals of this province. I think in the order of $200 per bed was paid to every hospital throughout the province of Ontario. That amounted, of course, to a sizeable sum. I think it will be found in the year from which I was quoting, 1958, that it amounted to some $10 million.

In all fairness, if you want to be fair you have to take that $10 million off the $50 million which my hon. friend has suggested in his speech as being the provincial contribution toward hospital insurance, because the government has been relieved of the payment of that amount of money. Therefore it should be properly deducted from the amount it says today that it is contributing toward hospital insurance. And more than that, Mr. Chairman, this was in 1958. We are now in 1964 and we know quite well that there has been a pyramiding of costs since that time. That $10 million in 1958, I suggest to the House this afternoon, might well have been $40 million today that the government would have to pay to the hospitals under the old system of operation.

An hon. member: It is sure to be.

Mr. Oliver: Now my hon. friend shakes his head. In this big book which is here, do you know what your former leader said? He said:

Every one of the 150 hospitals in this province is on the verge of insolvency.

That was in 1958. We have gone five or six years since that time. The hon. Minister tells me with the increased costs that there have been in connection with hospitals since 1958, that the $10 million you were paying to keep the hospitals going in 1958 would today have been about $40 million. Of course, it would. Anybody who has any idea of the growth of these cost factors will take that into consideration and will be persuaded by it.

The point I make, Mr. Chairman, and I am very serious about this, is: I believe in my heart if there was to be an increase in the hospital insurance premiums in this province then the one who should have borne that increase should have been the government of the province of Ontario and not the policyholders of the province. I suggest to you that never, never since its inception has this government taken its proper place in the cost factor in connection with hospital insurance. It has wiggled out of it in some way, shape or form. And actually, I suggest to you, I believe that one could prove—if he were as good as figures as the hon. Provincial Treasurer is, and if he were trying to prove on the other side of the ledger—that the coming into operation of hospital insurance in this province has up until this time saved the government of Ontario money. The government is not putting money into it at all when all factors are being considered; it is simply welching on its agreement and its understanding that it is to pay a part of the costs of hospital insurance. It is not doing it now, it never did it, and by its actions in this present session it has no intention of changing its ways.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend, the hon. leader of the Opposition is getting extremely exercised. May I read for him a letter which the former Prime Minister of Ontario addressed to the Rt. hon. Louis St. Laurent, then Prime Minister of Canada, dated January 24, 1957, and which appears on page 98 of Hansard, 1957. I quote this in part—

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): It did not go through.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course it went through. If the hon. member would just listen for a minute. He should not take financial lessons from his hon. leader (Mr. Oliver), he should take them from Walter Gordon.

The federal government's contribution to the proportion of Ontario's shareable costs would be about 48 per cent but in the terms of the whole plan that we propose it would be about 35 per cent.

We have all believed, right from the inception of the plan—and I am not quoting now—that the premium income would be in the neighbourhood of a third. Then where in the wide world was the other third going to come from?

As it turned out, the premium income was not a third; and, if Ottawa paid 35 per cent, where in the world would the rest come from if it did not come out of the Treasury of this province? This points up the provincial responsibility, and again I quote:

And the absolute necessity of care and administration if we are not to undermine the province's fiscal position.

Mr. Chairman, when the hon. leader of the Opposition spoke about wiggling out of payment, I was getting a little bit excited while he was waxing eloquent then; because I began to wonder or hope that, by his method of mathematics, we would very soon find that the plan was paying this province.

Mr. Oliver: Not very far from it right now.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, Mr. Chairman, the facts speak so eloquently. Look at the figures we have to find. How, by any stretch of the imagination, can we say that the cost of maintaining a mentally disturbed patient is not a proper cost against the plan?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It does not matter what we did before. Let me tell you what we did before. Before 1959, if the patients admitted to our hospitals had the wherewithal to pay their bills, they paid them; and, as I recall it, we used to take in quite a substantial sum of money. In one budget I can recall, I think it was a third of the total budget. And I have just finished telling you that, by and large, the poorer sections of our people were admitted to our hospitals—those who were indigent. Let me remind you at the same time that every general hospital was faced every year with an operating deficit, so they were experiencing the very same type of problems we were having.

Mr. Whicher: You paid it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course we paid it, and we helped to pay their deficits too. Nobody said from the start—and I was here when this plan came into being—nobody that I can ever recall on the government side of the House, ever stated or hinted that the care of the mentally ill was not rightly and properly a part of the plan. Of course it was a proper part of the plan. Nor was it ever suggested that all of our third was new money, money for projects that had not ordinarily been undertaken. It is here in a letter, in the official correspondence that passed between the leader of this government and the leader of the government of Canada. And not by any stretch of the imagination—and I hope that sooner or later this will sink into our minds—was it ever suggested that the care of the mentally disturbed and the tubercular was not part of the Ontario hospital care insurance plan—and rightly a part of it. Because the government traditionally had met the deficits in this area of mental illness it was proposed at the outset of the plan that government would take over responsibility for the whole of the cost of those suffering from mental illness who were insured.

Let me tell you, my hon. friends across the way, that if we admit a patient now to our hospitals, any of our Ontario hospitals, who is not insured under the Ontario hospital services insurance plan, that patient is billed for his care. I grant you we do not often collect, but the patient is billed for his care and it is a debt against the Crown. Therefore I would like to point out once and for all, to the end that this may be made pre-eminently clear, beginning with the annual statement of the hospital services commission this year, this matter will be put out in proper perspective so that there will be no doubt in anyone's mind that, in the thinking of the government from the inception of the plan, this is a right and proper charge against it.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): In order that the record, Mr. Chairman, may be complete, let us read into the record, for any who want to look at the records of these debates in this province, all of the remarks that are germane to what has been said very effectively by the hon. leader of the Opposition and with the reply of the hon. Minister of Health. I might say that he ought to be the last one in the House to talk about anybody else getting exercised. The same gentleman, the leader of the government in 1958, had this to say—and I invite the hon. Minister to listen carefully to what he did say at that time and I am going to put two excerpts from his remarks into the record:

If we can take what we are paying in this province—

he was referring—I do not have to expand on that—to the cost of mental institutions and sanatoria:

—and can combine that with the assistance we get from the federal government and can make a compact insurance plan that will give our people the coverage that we envisage without increasing general taxation and reducing, as a matter of fact, the premiums our people are paying and spread it out over the entire population, I would call that a workman-like job. Now I would say that is the objective.

There ends the quotation of the "old fox", when he was the head man around here.

Quite obviously the objective set out by Mr. Frost has not been reached by this government—

Mr. Whicher: Not nearly so.

Mr. Sopha: Not nearly so, indeed, when in one year they have to come here and, through the lips of the hon. Provincial Treasurer, increase the hospital insurance services premium by 54 per cent. So that objective—and Mr. Frost was always a man with a vision, who had objectives in mind, but since he has gone, this new government—it is not so new because most of them sat with him in the House when he was here—the faces do not change—and no new ideas that are remarkable by their emergence—

Mr. Whicher: Just new taxes.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, just new taxes.

I do not see how the hon. Minister of Health—because he listened, he appeared to listen intently to what the hon. leader of the Opposition was saying, every word—but I do not see how he can say that, when they had an obligation to pay before for the care of the mentally ill and those in sanatoria, they are entitled to take that obligation and transfer—shovel it, is the word—that burden over on to the taxpayers in general, and then say that this is our one-third that we are paying. He might be able to convince some people somewhere of the validity of that proposition, but I doubt it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The taxpayer pays it all anyway.

Mr. Whicher: The point is that the premium payer is paying too much and you are not paying enough; that is the point.

Mr. Sopha: Well, the whole point to the thing is—even the hon. member for York South could see this—that what the hon. Provincial Treasurer said in his address was misleading to the ultimate degree. It was misleading, and they are taking credit for something they are not entitled to take credit for; taking credit for the transference of an obligation that they had before the initiation of the plan.

Let us make the record complete by putting this other excerpt into it, from what Mr. Frost had this to say in 1958:

With the hospitals, we are dealing, really, with organizations which were, generally speaking, insolvent. The hospitals had been losing money for years and these grants were sort of deferred maintenance grants to enable them to get their plant and equipment into reasonably good shape. I think, by and large, they have done a very good job, but again remember they were really insolvent organizations, the whole 150 of them.

One hundred and fifty hospitals in the province, said the former Prime Minister, were insolvent; and this government had the obligation in their insolvency, and in their financial distress, to bolster and support them, and of course it did. The public would have expected it to do so.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: What are you kicking about? We did it.

Mr. Sopha: What if they expected you to do so? Then along comes the hospital plan, a great bequest for the social advancement of this country by the federal government at Ottawa—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I speak the truth, and I do not expect to be controverted except by the foolish.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: And the hospital plan is good for the whole of Canada. And at this stage for the advancement of human betterment in this province we merely want you people to do the same in respect to pensions. But, having had that obligation to bolster insolvency, then you come along, the hon. Minister of Health in his command of verbiage in the Scottish language that he uses, and he says—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I take exception to that. I speak English. The only place where English is really well spoken—

Mr. Sopha: Well, we take the opportunity to expose this fallacy, and to relieve you of the asset of saying to the people, transferring an obligation you had before: "This is our justification to you for increasing your premiums 54 per cent in a single year."

Let me just add this, in order to underscore and underline it: Had this plan not come into effect the way the hon. leader of the Opposition said, that hospital costs long ago would have doubled, you would have had to bear the burden of it. So please do not go to the people of Ontario and say, "This is the justification that we have in imposing upon you increased taxation this year," because we do not buy it and neither will they.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word or two, after the hon. member for Sudbury and my hon. leader, about this very important matter.

The fact that the hon. Minister of Health has said that, at the present time, under the hospital insurance plan, we are responsible for the mentally ill and for those who need tuberculin care, of course is true. But it is equally true that we were responsible for their care in the past. What the hon. Minister has forgotten is this: We were definitely paying for the services for many years before the plan was instituted in the province of Ontario. Now he has transported these costs over to the Ontario Hospital Insurance Commission, and tried to hide behind this bulwark of nonsense, financial nonsense, that they shove across to this side of the House.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to participate at any great length in discussing the point that has been raised by the hon. leader of the Opposition. I have already dealt with it on many occasions in this House, including not long ago when I was speaking in the Budget debate. I am glad to see that our Liberal friends are finally catching up with the government on this point.

Mr. Sopha: You are always so modest.

Mr. Bryden: I think attention was first called to it about six years ago by the hon. member for York South, sir, and other members of this group have referred to the matter every year since then. In dealing with it in the Budget debate, I pointed out that the last financial statement of the hospital services commission showed that 45 per cent of the cost of the plan was contributed by the federal government, 36 per cent by the premium payers, and 19 per cent by the provincial government. I think those facts speak for themselves, but I believe it is quite impossible to make any impression on the government on this matter. We have tried over the years.

I am glad to see the hon. leader of the Opposition making another attempt this afternoon, in his usual energetic way. I do not think that we will ever persuade the government to depart from its—

Mr. Sopha: No, but we can expose them.

Mr. Bryden: They were exposed long ago. The hon. member for Sudbury is taking great credit for having exposed them. This was exposed long ago, but they continue their financial sleight of hand, and I judge from the hon. Minister of Health that they are not only going to continue it but they are going to make it official in the next annual report of the hospital services commission.

However, Mr. Chairman, as I said, both I and other members in this group have spoken many times before on this issue and I see no point in pushing it any further.

I would, however, like to turn to another problem that arises under these estimates; this is the question of hospital administration. I have no doubt there are many hon. members who have comments to make about this. I, as you know, raised the matter at some length in the Budget debate and I dealt particularly, at that time, in some detail with a specific case where I thought there was inadequacy of care in a hospital. I raised that case to illustrate what I think is a larger point, and that is the apparent impossibility of a citizen, who feels he has received inadequate care in hospitals, to have any sort of recourse.

The hon. Minister of Health dismissed my comments rather quickly and patronizingly by suggesting I was a layman, and that experts in the medical field had different views than I had. Well, I would merely suggest to him, and more particularly to his profession, Mr. Chairman, that the laymen whom they refer to so contemptuously on occasion are the people who receive service in hospitals, receive service from the medical profession, and they, in my opinion, have important rights to be considered.

Furthermore, I believe that, by and large, they have intelligence. They do not necessarily have the technical knowledge in the specific fields in which the medical profession is trained, but they have a capacity, and just as great a capacity as the medical profession, to use their brains. And their brains lead them to the conclusion all too frequently that the care they have received is inadequate. Yet they have nowhere to go to get any redress; normally all they get is a runaround.

When I spoke in the Budget debate, Mr. Chairman, I stated, and it is true, that I have received a large number of letters and telephone calls from people complaining of inadequate care in hospitals. I stated also that I was not going to place any of those cases on record because I had not had an opportunity to check the facts alleged in letters or calls directed towards me; and under those circumstances I did not feel that I could take responsibility for the allegations made, even though they quite likely were true.

I have, however, a letter here—it is not directed to me, I will describe it more fully in a moment—for which I am willing to take responsibility, and which I therefore propose to read into the record. I will read it mainly to illustrate again the point I have tried to make, without too much impression on the hon. Minister of the kind of runaround people get when they want to complain about treatment in hospitals.

The reason I am going to read this letter is that the person who wrote it was perhaps a little more meticulous than most of us in that he made notes of events that occurred, as they occurred, or shortly after they occurred. I have seen his notes. I have checked them with his letter. There is no doubt in my mind that what he has said is entirely true, and I am personally prepared to take responsibility for it.

The letter concerned is dated April 30, 1963 and it was addressed to the board of directors at the Wellesley Hospital in Toronto, to the attention of Mr. H. M. Turner, the chairman of the board. What precipitated this letter was a questionnaire that the hospital, I take it, sends out as a routine matter to patients, or to the survivors of patients, after a patient has stayed in the hospital; and it would appear to be a useful sort of device. It, in effect, asks them for their opinions with regard to various matters relating to the hospital. There are five specific questions. The first asks for comments on accommodation; the second, on attention by hospital staff; the third, on food service; the fourth, is stated as follows:

In general how do you rate the hospital care and services you received?

And the fifth—I am again quoting from the form:

Any particular service on which you would like to comment?

And then in brackets:

(Please use this space for any remarks which you feel might assist us in providing the highest standard of hospital care which is our goal.)

This gentleman filled in the form with regard to items 1 to 4; and with regard to item 5, he wrote a letter to the chairman of the board.

I would also like to explain, before reading the letter, Mr. Chairman, that this related to the gentleman's mother who was a patient in Wellesley Hospital. She was suffering from cancer. She was a terminal case. There is nobody I know of who suggests she would have survived, regardless of what might have happened in the hospital. Unfortunately, she was beyond treatment as we know it today.

Her case was hopeless and that is not the matter at issue; but a matter that is of issue is the kind of care that she received, and also the kind of response that this gentleman got when he complained to the hospital about the care. The man's name, I may say, is Jack G. Miller and his address at the time he wrote the letter was Apartment 210, 8 Milepost Place, Toronto 17. That is in Thorncliffe Park—and he still lives in Thorncliffe Park at a different address. I will now quote from the letter that he sent to the board of directors of the hospital, to the attention of the chairman of the board.

I would like to take this opportunity of giving a full, frank answer to question 5 of your questionnaire.

My mother, the late Lillian E. Miller, entered Wellesley on February 12, 1963. From the time she entered until she died on March 1, 1963, she was unable to eat solid food. From about February 15 on, she was unable to serve the food to herself. From the day she entered until at least February 26, the Wellesley staff was constantly bringing in solid food and was constantly failing to feed her. The observations of these facts were made by my wife, my sister, my brother-in-law and myself. We have records of the dates and menus served. There was no possibility of mistaking the meal as intended for the other patient in the room. We observed also my mother's name on the tag under the plate.

We protested to the nursing staff several times. The objected-to practices continued. We finally appealed to Dr. Alexander Shaw, about whom I will say more later. On February 21, Dr. Shaw informed my brother-in-law that he had spoken to the fourth floor desk and that the failure of the hospital to feed my mother would not happen again. At dinner on February 22—that was the next day:

—the objected-to practices were resumed. Solid roast beef and mashed potatoes, with her name on it, were brought into my mother's room. The same thing happened at lunch on February 23.

I spoke to the desk on February 23 at about the noon hour. I asked the chief nurse there to examine the paper instructions throughout the hospital in respect to my mother's diet, to make sure in her own mind that all the instructions called for puree food for all subsequent meals. After looking into the matter she gave me an assurance that this was now so.

Almost since the beginning of my mother's stay, we had had difficulty obtaining information from, and conversing with, Dr. Shaw. For example, we never had, at least until Dr. Shaw was no longer on the case, a conversation in a seated position.

When we asked a question, we would be told not to ask such a question. When we would state an assumption as a basis for further discussion, we would be informed that the assumption was incorrect, but he would offer no clarifying statement.

This we bore until Dr. Shaw obviously lost the confidence of my mother. Among several allegations which Dr. Shaw apparently made was one that we had influenced my mother against him. None of the four of us ever spoke in that fashion to my mother prior to February 25. (We are giving Dr. Shaw an opportunity to confirm whether he made the allegations we were told he made.)

To summarize the details (of which we have a record) of the morning of February 25, Dr. Shaw reluctantly spoke to my mother. When my mother told him she would get even with him when she got out of there, he turned crimson and stalked out without a further word. My brother-in-law just managed to overtake him before he reached the elevator and was able to hold a conversation of only a few words with him due to his insistence that he had no time.

We were now fearful that the lack of communication between Dr. Shaw and ourselves might be dangerous to my mother. So my wife, on February 25, sought advice about changing doctors from a friend who is a doctor and an official of a medical organization. She also told him about our troubles with the hospital. In the course of his efforts he spoke to Mr. Thornton, administrator of Wellesley. The official discussed several alternatives with my wife and said he thought we would get further "help and advice" from Mr. Thornton who, through him, invited her to phone for an interview.

My wife phoned Mr. Thornton on February 25, who suggested a meeting time of about 6 p.m., February 26. He asked my wife if we had specific complaints involving times, places, people and facts. She gave him a general statement of the situation. He told my wife he had a copy of the diet order and it called for puree food.

My wife and I met Mr. Thornton. We gave him a good deal of specific information about our experiences and complaints. He listened, smiling and saying very little, except now and again asserting that some statement or other of ours was a matter of opinion.

I asked him if the diet order he had spoken of to my wife on the telephone the previous day was a permanent order. Mr. Thornton brought a copy of it (dated February 24) from his desk, and read it to us. He "presumed" it was permanent but refused to interpret it more definitely.

When I told him that on that very day, 24 hours after he had spoken on the telephone with my wife about the diet order, my mother had been sent in an order of sliced chicken and baked potato, he would not even admit that this was not in accordance with the diet order.

At no time did Mr. Thornton offer either excuse or explanation for any of the occurrences we referred to.

The conversation turned to the question of what could be done to dispense with the special night nurse and occasionally the special day nurse which we felt were necessary to keep surveillance over the oxygen equipment which had failed several times, and to make sure my mother was being fed. He said he would base his judgment on whether the night nurse could be dispensed with on the advice of the senior nurses in the hospital. Two days later Mr. Thornton was still claiming he could not give his judgment. He told my wife to phone Friday. My mother did not live that long.

The conversation then turned to the question of alternative doctors. We asked for the names and fields of practice of the doctors who are permitted to practice at Wellesley. He refused to give me the names. "I can't help you on that" were his exact words. He admitted that the names were on public record and even that the names were posted on a pillar somewhere in the hospital. When I asked him whether in the face of these facts he was going to continue to refuse me the information, he began to hem and haw, and ultimately gave me some names. Then he began to try to persuade me to talk the matter over with Dr. Shaw. I explained that it was so difficult to discuss such a non-controversial matter as the case with

Dr. Shaw that one could not hope to conduct a constructive conversation with him on a controversial subject such as this. I explained at some length the history of our relationship with Dr. Shaw, including the fact that he had lost the confidence of my mother. I said I did not want to talk to Dr. Shaw until my position was strengthened by having his replacement ready to take over. I elaborated on this point, which I indicated I considered important. My wife and I left Mr. Thornton's office at about 7 p.m.

Within one hour Mr. Thornton informed Dr. Shaw of our meeting in Mr. Thornton's office and the proceedings at it. This was the treachery, cynicism, trickery, and deceit, liberally augmented by evasiveness and callous procrastination affecting a dying woman, that we were treated to by the administrator of Wellesley Hospital. Mr. Thornton, who had invited us to meet him in order to offer "help and advice".

Later the same evening I phoned Dr. Shaw to ask him to invoke the hospital provisions for constant surveillance of my mother. I pointed out to him the several instances of failure of the oxygen equipment, one of which he himself had witnessed. On February 22 my sister successively informed two nurses and one orderly that the oxygen equipment was operating improperly. All three said it was all right. Shortly thereafter Dr. Shaw entered the room, ripped the tent out of the bed and threw open the window.

I also pointed out to Dr. Shaw that on some days the other patient's electric bell was not hooked up, making it doubtful that she could raise an alarm.

With no warning and without provocation he lost his temper, finally terminating the conversation by "hanging up". He said he was refusing and that I could get that through my "cotton-picking mind", etc. On two occasions he belligerently demanded to know if I wanted him off the case and said he would be glad to get off. I answered that we would discuss the matter subsequently.

My wife's friend, the doctor who is an official of a medical organization, attempted to make some contacts on our behalf. He was unable to get from Wellesley Hospital a list of its general practitioners. After some hesitation about retiring from the case, Dr. Shaw in the end agreed to go. Dr. Squires was to provide some information about a successor. He managed to stall by feigning ignorance long enough for my mother to have died.

I have informed you of the chief, but not all, of our experiences. Many of the nurses were grudging in manner and slow to attend to matters of some urgency. There were exceptions. I even said to Mr. Thornton that I would be glad to put in writing my appreciation of the kindness and attentiveness of one particular nurse. He did not even inquire what her name was. Knowing what I now know about Mr. Thornton's ethics and standard of values I believe that to give her name would be a disservice to the girl.

Point five on your questionnaire invites the respondent to state any remarks which he feels might assist the hospital in providing a high standard of hospital care. Before doing that I want to say that I appreciate you are busy men. But, it is also evident that the outside technical supervisory bodies are impotent. This leaves you as the only ones in a position to clean up the conditions I have spoken of. It is also worth remembering that these conditions are the ones evident to a lay person with eyes, ears, and common sense. These conditions may be merely symptomatic of far more unhealthy and dangerous conditions and practices in Wellesley Hospital that a lay person cannot easily detect.

I fear that it is questionable whether you, by yourself, can correct these conditions. I suspect that they will be corrected only by focusing public scrutiny on them. Thus, you might consider welcoming public and press scrutiny of conditions in Wellesley Hospital.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, which paid for the larger part of my late mother's bill. I am also sending him my cheque for my mother's part of the bill. If he thinks your hospital is entitled to it, he can turn it over to you.

As the gentleman stated, Mr. Chairman, a copy of the letter was sent to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. There were two letters received in reply from the commission. The first was dated May 12, 1963, as follows, and was signed by R. W. I. Urquhart, Dr. Urquhart, chairman of the commission at the time:

I have the copy of your letter to Mr. Turner, chairman of the board of Wellesley Hospital, with its attached cheque. I will have the letter reviewed by our hospital services branch.

I am also referring your letter to our medical-legal consultant, but it is my view that we have no alternative but to forward your cheque to the hospital. I will not do this until I have a report from this consultant.

Following investigation we will be in touch with you again.

And then there was a follow-up letter from Dr. Urquhart, dated May 17, 1963, as follows:

I have had our people carefully investigate the situation complained about in your letter of April 30, 1963. It is their opinion, after reviewing the documentation and interviewing the concerned hospital staff, that there was nothing which warrants action by this commission. I am sure that the hospital will try to correct any deficiency which may have developed.

Our legal consultant advised that we have no authority to withhold your cheque and it was therefore forwarded to the Wellesley Hospital.

Mr. Miller also got one letter of acknowledgment from Wellesley Hospital signed by H. M. Turner, chairman of the board, dated May 10, 1963:

I acknowledge your letter of April 30 relating to the hospitalization of your late mother, Mrs. Lillian Miller.

You may be assured that the conditions as you have described them will be thoroughly examined.

I thank you for bringing this matter to my attention.

And that is all he ever heard from Wellesley Hospital.

Mr. Chairman, it would appear from statements that have been made in this House and elsewhere that the hospital services commission is intensely interested in the operation of hospitals when it comes to approving the wages of the charwomen or any other staff. One may even venture to suggest that when it comes to activities to break a strike it will exercise the closest supervision over the hospitals to the point where one could say almost that the hospital boards and administrative staff have no jurisdiction at all. But when a complaint is placed before it with regard to the standards of operation in a hospital, the quality of care given, it seems to take little, if any, interest at all. Its position seems to be that this is a matter which is entirely beyond its jurisdiction.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, if the commissioners are concerned about the wages paid and other costs in the operation of the hospital, as I think they should be, they should also be concerned about the quality of care given, because the price that is paid for a product, after all, is relative to the quality of the product. If care is less than adequate, then, I think, the hospital services commission should be concerned and interested. In my experience it has showed no evidence of any real concern or interest in a specific case that I called to its attention, or more correctly I called to the attention of The Department of Health. It obviously had no interest or concern about the situation Mr. Miller called to its attention. The hospital itself brushed him off with what one could call almost a routine acknowledgment: Thank you for having written to us, we will look into the matter you complain of. I imagine all of us at various times in our lives have written letters of that kind, and what we mean is: please do not bother us with this sort of thing. It is a polite way of saying this.

The hospital invited comments from patients, or people representing patients, but when it got a comment which was, perhaps, not too pleasing to it, it simply brushed it aside. This is the problem I have dealt with before. I am not going to go into the suggested solutions that I made at another time, as they are on the record. They may not be the best solutions, it may be that I am lacking in knowledge of hospital administration, but then so are most people. Yet, most people at some time or other in their lives have to use the facilities of hospitals. I will say again, as I have said before, I am sure that the overwhelming majority receive good treatment in hospitals—certainly, in most of the hospitals. In the public hospitals of the province I have no doubt about that. But the problem as I see it, is that some people do not receive adequate care, and if they do not, there is nothing they can do about it except the delusive procedure of suing, which would be a total waste of time in most cases. I think that there should be somewhere, somebody, to whom people can turn when they have well-documented complaints of the nature of Mr. Miller's.

Mr. Cowling: You turn to your doctor.

Mr. Bryden: The doctor in this case was far from co-operative and this is one of the difficulties I referred to earlier. It provoked a certain response from the hon. Minister of Health, not a favourable response, one indicating he did not agree with me. But I will state it again because I believe it is true, and it is that when you get complaints there is a very strong tendency for the profession to pull together for mutual protection.

Mr. Cowling: Why should they not?

Mr. Bryden: That is all right. I am not objecting to it. They have a closed corporation. They have their own powers of discipline. It may be as the hon. Minister has said on previous occasions that they exercise their powers of discipline most rigidly.

Mr. Cowling: But you do, too.

Mr. Bryden: That is fine.

Mr. Cowling: It is often wise to be quiet.

Mr. Bryden: Complaints are made to the—

Mr. Cowling: I am getting sick of this. That is why I am talking.

Mr. MacDonald: We are sick of you.

Mr. Cowling: I am sure. You talk more than all the rest of us put together. You never stop talking.

Mr. MacDonald: You are like the doctor, you do not like what he is saying.

Mr. Cowling: No, I would like to say something about it, but he does not stop long enough to give anybody else a chance.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bryden: If that little tempest is over with, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can complete my remarks.

Mr. Cowling: Well, it is not over with. It really is not over with.

Mr. Bryden: I will be quite happy to sit and listen to anything that the hon. member for High Park may have to say about this, or other matters at a later occasion—

Mr. Cowling: No, you either talk or—

Mr. Bryden: I have listened to him very attentively on other occasions when he has spoken. I must say I have hardly found his remarks worth listening to, but I am willing to continue to listen to them nevertheless.

Mr. Chairman, any sort of complaints or suggestions of malpractice, so far as the profession is concerned, that are referred to the College of Physicians and Surgeons, the disciplinary body, are investigated in secret. The public never has a chance to find out anything that goes on. I am not saying that in most cases that is a bad practice, but the public never gets any opportunity ever to get satisfaction on these matters. However, I am not now talking with regard to medical malpractice particularly.

I am talking about a problem in hospitals. I do not think one can take that to the College of Physicians and Surgeons unless it involves medical malpractice. You cannot take it anywhere unless it is a matter that is so flagrant that it merits an investigation by a coroner's jury. Obviously in this case the death was due to natural causes. Obviously there was no basis whatever for establishing a coroner's jury.

But there was a basis, in my opinion, for some sort of an inquiry into the well-documented complaints of this man. I think he was entitled to some sort of an explanation. What is even more to the point, Mr. Chairman, I think he was entitled to get satisfaction while the practices complained of were taking place. He took the matter up with everybody he could think of who might have any jurisdiction, and it had no effect whatever. His mother was not being given the kind of food that she could eat. She was not being fed, although she required to be fed. The oxygen equipment that was provided for her, presumably under medical order, was not operating properly, and yet he could not get any satisfaction on that. There was a case he referred to where he complained to two nurses and a technician that the oxygen equipment was not operating.

Mr. Cowling: You have said all this three times.

Mr. Bryden: They paid no attention to him at all. Yet it happened by chance that the medical practitioner attending his mother came in and discovered that the situation was so serious that he had to whip the oxygen tent off the bed. Now, why is it that a person cannot get any satisfaction either at the time, or later, when he makes complaints of this kind?

I would like to know from the hon. Minister what the role of the hospital services commission is in relation to hospitals. Apparently it takes very little interest in the matter of standards, even though it takes great interest in the matter of costs. Perhaps this is an area where clarification is required. Above all, I would suggest to the hon. Minister that if he does not wish to accept the suggestions I made a week or so ago, then he should come up with some alternative of his own to which people with complaints can take them for proper investigation.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, may I say to the hon. member that his words have not fallen on deaf ears. This is receiving a very great deal of study from us, a very great deal of consideration from the department and from the hospital services commission.

These things do concern us very, very much. We have not got the policing powers that may apparently be needed, but the matter will be given very careful study, I can assure the House.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the hon. member for Downsview referred to the address by Dr. B. L. Brosseau, OBE, MC, who was speaking to the Ontario Hospital Association in regard to regional planning. I found, naturally, the part of the address in the Toronto Globe and Mail very interesting. It had to do with regional planning. But I think many of the thoughts there could be integrated into hospitals in the communities. I refer to my own area, the city of North Bay, where we have two hospitals, one known as the City Hospital and the other, St. Joseph's, both public hospitals.

In June, 1963, I think it was, the advisory board of St. Joseph's General Hospital and the North Bay Hospital Commission submitted a petition to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. As you very well know, Mr. Minister, the plan of the City Hospital is to enlarge its facilities. The two boards got together in an effort to reduce the costs for both hospitals and suggested that I will wait until the tête-à-tête is over. Oh, I know that you can discuss and do half a dozen things at once. It has to do with—

Mr. Chairman: Order. It is now six o'clock. I believe we should adjourn the debate at this time.

It being 6.00 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, February 25, 1964
Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1964

CONTENTS

Tuesday, February 25, 1964

Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, concluded	931
Estimates, Department of Municipal Affairs, Mr. Spooner	950
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Roberts, agreed to	957

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1964

The House resumed at 8.00 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

(continued)

On vote 714:

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, all the experts are coming in. Mr. Chairman, I want you to listen, and even though I have not feet of clay, I will not be on my feet much longer than Cassius will be tonight.

As I said in my brief remarks before dinner, there is a short paragraph in the speech of Dr. Brosseau which I called to your attention, in which he says:

I am sure that by now it must be obvious to you that the planning of hospitals must be given some direction that the needs of the community at large must take precedence over the local interest.

And that is why I advert, as the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) says, to the petition from the joint boards in the city of North Bay.

As I pointed out earlier, the hospital services commission has approved of additions to the Civic Hospital. Now these two boards thought it would be a very fine idea if they combined their services and provided a joint laundry for the two hospitals. Here is a fine sense of co-operation. It fits in with the policy as outlined by Dr. Brosseau. A petition was sent in to the hospital services commission which asked for permission to allow the formation of a separate entity, or corporation, for the control and operation of a joint laundry service. Now it happens that St. Joseph's Hospital, a public hospital, will require very shortly to augment and revitalize its laundry facilities. It will entail, possibly, an outlay of $150,000. The two boards got together and they made the suggestion that they would combine their services. They appealed to the commission for that purpose.

It is my understanding that the commission looked with favour on this. When I discussed this particular project with the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), he was quite interested; so also was Dr. Brosseau when I discussed it with him. And I believe it has gone from the hospital commission to the Cabinet. Unfortunately, not too many of the 19, I think, are here tonight and it is their problem; it has been put up to them. Here is an opportunity of cutting down hospital expenses, and it fits in with the policy of the commission in integrating services.

Unfortunately we have, in a number of cities in this province, hospitals like, in my own city, the St. Joseph's Hospital and the Civic Hospital. Unfortunately in the past, through the narrow-mindedness of all the people, we consider one as a religious hospital, the other as a civic hospital. Thank goodness we are getting out of that attitude, and now we must look upon them as public hospitals and, as far as possible, seek integrated services. In fact, it would be very good if, for example, one hospital in my city looked after, say, obstetrics, and the other, surgery. Unfortunately, too, if one gets some new piece of equipment, the other hospital wants to get one, and we have these heavy rivalries.

I suggest to the hon. Minister that he see if he can influence the Cabinet to agree with this forward-looking view. As he mentioned himself, the department has advanced in its policies to a great extent in the last few years and particularly—with the customary modesty of the hon. Minister—he said, since he has taken over this department. I hope then, too, sir, that he will induce the recalcitrant members of the Cabinet to agree with this particular suggestion.

It points out, too, that the North Bay Civic Hospital is presently preparing plans for expansion, and will require enlarged and better equipped laundry services. And St. Joseph's Hospital's are entirely inadequate, requiring complete renovation, including enlarging of the laundry building. Therefore, now the time is opportune and we should seize it, and I hope the hon. Minister will induce the Cabinet to agree with the recommendation of the hospital services commission in this regard.

Also, the position of the independent laundry contractor; we are not interfering with his service, in fact they are not open on Sundays and hospital laundries must go every day of the week. There is no competition since, again, they are either owned or controlled by one man—he controls all the laundries in the city, and it would not be affecting private enterprise.

The two hospitals are located—here is a very important thing—within two blocks of each other. By combining the services of the St. Joseph's General with that of the North Bay Civic, that large laundry could be located on the premises. There would be a separate accounting system for the corporation to determine accurate costs. I think they have made a very good presentation to the commission, so good in fact that the commission, from my information, has approved of it.

Since hospital costs are mounting, I suggest this is a very fine way it could be expanded. In fact, in discussing the project among other things with the deputy Minister, he seemed quite in favour; in fact he said: "We are finding this integration of services going on all over the country. The first thing you know we will be having integrated commissaries so that you can get the food and other things to various hospitals." And certainly, in areas like my own where there are two or three hospitals, I think this is one way of cutting down the expenses.

We find in my area, too, that there are three municipalities, the city of North Bay, the township of Widdifield and the township of West Ferris. The hospitals have a fairly heavy deficit just at the present time and the city of North Bay has agreed to assume their share, so has the township of Widdifield. Unfortunately the township of West Ferris refuses, because of certain conditions, to contribute. They claim one of the townships is getting away with some special assessment which reduces its share of the deficit. The reeve of West Ferris points out that the situation is caused by an act of government—he was referring to The Ontario Hospital Services Commission Act which fails to supply funds to cover interest on capital costs. Of course, no hospital can turn aside a sick person; you cannot refuse to admit them to the hospital just because it happens that a township does not pay its share or because they come from another area.

So I strongly urge the hon. Minister, who has the approval already of the hospital services commission, that this is just going on with the forward policy which he enunciated earlier this afternoon. It assists in cutting down expenses and I sincerely hope that an early reply will be made to the petition of the two hospital boards because pretty soon the final plans will be approved and the work will be started. I appeal to the hon. Minister and to the hon. members of the Cabinet who must also pass on that particular request.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden)—the long, dreary remarks of this afternoon—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Did you hear the hon. Minister?

Mr. Cowling: Yes, I did hear my hon. Minister, I heard him. I do not necessarily have to agree with him though. I would like to speak on this, if the hon. member does not mind. We have in the city of Toronto, Mr. Chairman, some of the finest hospitals on the North American continent and they are endeavouring to provide the kind of service to the public that I think the public wants. I think of additions that we have made to these hospitals in Toronto. I think of the great new addition to the Toronto General Hospital; the recent addition to the Wellesley Hospital; the addition to St. Joseph's Hospital; just completed, a large addition to the Western Hospital; the great new addition to the East General Hospital—I just mention those few to begin with. These hospitals are all operated by independent boards. In the main they are businessmen who give of their time and their energy without remuneration of any kind, and I think that we are lucky to have them doing this job on behalf of municipal governments and the provincial government. I think it is a great thing that they do.

It is so easy to criticize, Mr. Chairman, and this that we heard this afternoon was a great criticism from one individual. But think of the thousands and thousands of people who go to our Toronto hospitals—and I use Toronto because I am familiar with it, and I speak from personal experience of my own, and of relatives and friends who have been in our Toronto hospitals, and I speak specifically of the Wellesley Hospital, undoubtedly one of the finest institutions of the world, of its kind.

We heard one letter, and I will not repeat it, Mr. Chairman. I think all the hon. members absorbed what was in the letter and I am sympathetic to the individual who wrote the letter. But I like to think of the other side, of the hundreds and thousands of people who go into our hospitals, who go into Wellesley Hospital, and if it were not for the care and attention of the people in the hospital and the doctors who serve that hospital, many people would not even be here today to enjoy our great Canadian winter.

So I just do not want anybody, Mr. Chairman, to get the impression that our hospitals in this great city of Toronto are not doing their job and doing it thoroughly, and as far as I am personally concerned, I hope that the day never comes when the hospital services commission will be dictating on all matters to our Toronto hospital boards or any other boards in Ontario, for that matter, because I think they are quite capable of running their own show. They can advise, they can consult, they can assist and as far as anybody going with a complaint to a hospital board, it has been my experience, Mr. Chairman, that if I have anything wrong with me medically, that I go to my doctor and I take his advice—

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): What about political advice?

Mr. Cowling: What's that, Harry? Well, no, he comes to me on that occasion, but I go to him the other way. So we go to the hospital. If I have any complaints about the hospital attention, I see my doctor. That is what he is there for. I am not concerned with the hospital board or the hospital staff, I talk to my doctor. And, Mr. Chairman, as for any of the hon. members who have been in a hospital, and many of us have, I think that that is the procedure we follow. We do not make notes of what happens and then complain to the chairman of the hospital board. We have enough faith and confidence in our own doctor that he will do the right thing, and as far as I am personally concerned—and I have been in our Toronto hospitals—I have nothing but praise for their work. I speak of the Toronto General Hospital, I speak of the hospital for sick children—I see the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) looking there; we happened to be attending that hospital about the same time. Our boy was in and his daughter, and did we have anything but praise for the hospital? So, Mr. Chairman, let us just take this with a grain of salt.

We can be sympathetic to the problems of the individual who raised this question. I cannot imagine anybody writing such a long letter or anybody receiving it, but in any event, it was done and I hope they will come up with a satisfactory answer and help this individual. But as far as I am concerned I think the hospitals of Toronto and the staffs and the doctors are doing a great job and we should be proud of the work they do in our capital city.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister was going to answer my questions. I think the hon. member for High Park was pretty fast off the mark and I await the answers to my questions.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I thought it was a statement and I would say in commenting upon the statement that I intend and have already, in fact, put the case before the commission. I am quite certain that we will do the right thing and put it in the best interests of the whole hospital system.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Now we are going to get the testimonial.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Yours over there.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I listened, in the last few days, quite intently to the complaints about what we term unfair treatment in the hospitals, in the active hospitals in regard to the active hospital patients and to emergency treatment. Mr. Chairman, I was pleased with the answer the hon. Minister of Health gave tonight in regard to the report read into the record by the hon. member for Woodbine that these problems were not falling on deaf ears. That made me feel quite sincerely that consideration will be given to these problems and I am sure that it will. But when the hon. member for High Park had to belittle the efforts of the Opposition in trying to raise public opinion in regard to what we consider are problems, I am now forced to carry out a promise I made back in my riding to raise some of the problems.

The latest problem raised is the same as one we have in Hamilton. I was tempted to let the matter rest with the hon. Minister and his department at that point. Certainly, 150 years ago we built great, fine jails, but what happened inside of those jails 150 years ago is now history and has been documented to the point that it has been better year by year. I am not saying this to reflect that I, in my opinion, in any way at all think the hospital situation is the same. But the facetious example that is given, that we have fine big hospitals, I think does not justify the argument. Certainly we agree that we have fine big hospitals, but it is our job that when we find problems in any segment of our society relating to government administration, we should raise them.

In Hamilton, and the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) knows of this case, one Robert Vail complained about waiting an hour and 45 minutes for emergency treatment on behalf of his son, who was scalded, in the Hamilton General emergency ward. It generated a lot of questions in regard to treatment in the emergency wards, and in the Hamilton General Hospital. I have several letters and I am going to put two on record. I am not going to argue whether his problem was justified or not, but nevertheless it was justified in his mind enough that he took a week's vacation from work to bring the public's attention to the problem, even to the extent of coming down to meet the hon. Prime Minister.

From that the alderman on the board of governors of the Hamilton General Hospital also received many letters. He presented a brief, I understand, to the board in Hamilton and they took it under consideration. I have a lot of respect for the members of the board of the Hamilton hospital and they did not give any arguments. They said: "We will take the brief and give it full consideration". I am sure they will and we will have a report on conditions later on.

But coming out of the Vail complaint, in the hands of Alderman Powell, were several comments. One was that he said, and I would quote from the press release on it:

Since launching complaints against city hospitals last week, Mr. Vail said he received quite a few telephone calls and letters from citizens reporting similar incidents. Other men and women reported waiting for long periods, ranging from one to seven hours, for emergency treatment in Hamilton's hospitals. A north-end resident said his wife arrived at the hospital emergency ward at 8:15 one morning last summer, her arm torn by a washing machine wringer. A nurse stopped the bleeding immediately, but the woman waited until 2:45 p.m. without food or a doctor to treat the injury. The doctor looked at the wound and called in a specialist before treatment began. In another case, a workman rushed to the hospital with a broken hand last November reported waiting six hours for emergency care.

Those were just a few. I spoke to Alderman Powell about them and he said these were just a few. He would not even be bothered taking some of the letters I had received because he said he felt they had presented a good enough case to justify some consideration by the board at the Hamilton General Hospital.

But one letter I did receive I think deserves going on record to point out some of the complaints of the people who are paying their hospital insurance and expect somewhat of a fair treatment. I received this letter on January 29:

Dear Mr. Gisborn:

In regards to this controversy over delayed treatment at the Hamilton General Hospital, I hope you will take time to read an episode I had. I believe this happened in July of '63 or late June.

My daughter, Liza Joan, not yet two, swallowed a small amount of brake fluid. After phoning our doctor, we rushed her to the hospital. We were expected and shown to a small cubicle with a desk and chairs. After ten or fifteen minutes an intern asked us a few questions and how she was reacting. He mentioned she seemed quite alert and talkative and he explained this was the first reaction, they appear intoxicated. Ten or fifteen minutes later a nurse came in and took her to a room to have her stomach pumped.

For half an hour we sat listening to her scream, cry, and finally when her voice became weak and hoarse my husband went in to see how she was. When he didn't return I followed and was stunned to find her laying on a bed, one huge pillow lengthwise under her and one over her. Only her sweat-covered head was visible, tied down by two leather straps like they use on stretchers. We had seen the student that took her away from us leave the treatment room shortly after she had gone in with the baby, and there the baby had lain. The treatment of pumping her stomach had not even started.

Having worked in a children's ward, I know I would have taken at the most only a couple of minutes to have strapped the baby down before treatment began. So I feel this was an extremely cruel thing to do to a tiny child.

Then the intern came in and I mentioned her discomfort. He said they would start on it right away. At least ten minutes later they did. We left the hospital at approximately 10:20 p.m. We had arrived at 8:30. Most of this time she lay—and it was a very hot summer night—between two pillows awaiting treatment. While they may have known she wasn't in a dire strait, and if so I wouldn't mind waiting so long, I do feel it was unnecessary and cruel to subject her to such treatment before her real treatment even began.

Yours sincerely,

The second case I would like to put on record I think applies to a lot of people. This is an area that I think some consideration should be given to because it is that group that goes to the out-patient pavilion. This gentleman wrote this letter to Mr. Vail and told him he was glad that he was trying to get some of these problems cleared up. He gave him permission to use the letter in any way he wished.

You have no doubt been made aware of many conditions that are undesirable and need correcting in relation to your hospital.

I might explain first that this letter was sent to the superintendent of the Hamilton General Hospital.

You have no doubt been made aware of many conditions that are undesirable and need correcting in relation to your hospital. A good administrator welcomes such reports and acts according to his finding. However, if you were not made aware of conditions you would assume all was well and that the maximum efficiency was being enjoyed by all. I say enjoyed because I have experienced the pleasure of hard work with a team that achieved its objective under good leadership and sound administration. I have also been frustrated by bad teamwork and have watched my hard work bring disappointing results. Hence the reason for this letter.

I hold no malice or hard feeling for the personnel of your hospital. I think they are the finest material. I am, of course, speaking of all those with whom I have had dealings including the doctors, so please assure them from me that that is so.

However, I should like you to know that I did not enjoy sitting in the out-patient department from 8.45 a.m. until 5 p.m. on December 10 for treatment which could have been completed in a fraction of the time. Again from 8.45 a.m. until 12.55 p.m. on December 11, at which time I had to leave owing to the fact that I am diabetic and could not wait any longer without food as my last meal had been taken at 7.30 a.m. and I was feeling like I was going into reaction. There was no time to explain. I had to act. There is no diabetic clinic in Burlington and our health unit directed me to your hospital. And I acquired a letter of introduction from our welfare, who promised to foot the bill, so I see no problem there.

I presented myself on Monday about 2 p.m. and was told that I was too late for the clinic, but I should return the next morning at 8.45 a.m. when I should be taken care of. I now know what they meant by being taken care of. It would appear that there is only one active doctor on your staff to cover emergencies, ward duties and two clinics and I just happened to be his last patient on both days. Disregarding the promise of payment by Burlington welfare, I was directed to sign a form to obtain my insulin from Hamilton welfare, who naturally had no authority to supply same to a non-resident. More confusion and regrets. To continue in this matter would be fruitless as diet is a most important factor with a diabetic. Your Dr. Khan assures me he was doing his best and from my observations during my attendance I could not disagree. Your intercom system verified his great demand. You should make more use of the intercom yourself. Maybe this letter would not have been necessary, but after listening to complaints from other patients, I feel your inquiry into conditions is necessary. In closing I wish to point out that this letter is being written with one thought in mind, to avail you of an opportunity to give better service by eliminating a bottleneck which is wronging a great team of people who I am sure would be much happier that their team was complete. Thanking you in anticipation.

Mr. Chairman, at least the school children are now giving some attention to what is going on in the House. The last few days they have had a little bit of a party in quibbling among themselves and now that we are getting into a serious portion of the Legislature they are starting to pay a little attention.

I would only ask the hon. Minister to repeat in his mind, he does not have to answer my questions, what he said right after the hon. member for Woodbine finished his report, and give full consideration to looking into these problems.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could make a few remarks. I have had a very serious death in my own family within the last month and I watched for many days how my loved one was handled; the treatment and care was such, it makes my heart a bit sad to hear the criticism of our medical profession that has gone on in the last few days. True, it is anybody's privilege to criticize these matters of public interest but my own experience with the medical profession in my life has been that they have tried at all times to do everything humanly possible to cure suffering. True, mistakes are made, but certainly nobody who ever tried did not at some time make a mistake.

As I go about my riding, I frequently call on our old folks homes, our mental hospitals, our tubercular hospitals and the many hospitals throughout my riding, which is not an area similar to Toronto, Mr. Chairman. I mention Nipigon, Geraldton, Manitouwadge, Marathon, all these small towns, have very fine hospitals and very fine staffs, bringing kindness and good health to those who have been struck down by disease or accident. I want to put in a word of praise for The Department of Health of this province and its staff and also the hospital services commission, which I have heard criticized. I know the tremendous good they are all doing, sir, that is why I want to say a word about it. And I would just like to say this, to some of the criticism I have heard. I will recite a little couplet that I heard early in my life and that I have never forgotten. It went like this—and I would not laugh, gentlemen, I would not laugh—as you have said some things here that may have a very devastating effect on the future of our medical men and women.

Mr. Bryden: Nonsense. Just old women like you.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Do what you like—that is on your conscience—but this couplet went like this:

Don't look for the flaws as you go through life,

And even if you find them,

It is wise and kind to be somewhat blind,

And look for the virtues behind them.

That is what I would like to leave with some of you gentlemen here whom I have heard speak. I would like to tell you that as far as I am concerned, I am proud of our medical profession and the medical doctors and the medical nurses throughout this province. They are doing a wonderful job. I agree, some mistakes are made, but I think it ill-behooves most of us to get up and continually carp and criticize these people who are trying to carry on their occupation of mercy in this great province.

So, Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to make those remarks. I congratulate the hon. Minister and wish him to pass my congratulations to his staff and tell them what my thoughts are concerning them.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have two brief items in relation to the hospital services commission.

During recent months, my attention has been drawn to an incident that the hon. Minister is familiar with and there are some policy items growing out of it that I would like to raise with him now. This was the case of a person who was discharged from a hospital, a very elderly person whose husband was also very elderly. A very sharp difference of opinion arose between doctors—between her family doctor and the doctor who was looking after her in the hospital.

The thing that puzzled me, Mr. Chairman, was that there seemed to be no automatic machinery for resolving this difference of medical opinion. I would agree with the hon. Minister and everybody else that a layman, or even a government administrator or even somebody in the hospital services commission, has got to be rather careful if he attempts to impose his decision over the decision of a medical person who is an expert and therefore whose job it is to make this decision. But doctors are human beings and there are going to be differences of opinion on occasion. It seems to me that there is need for some prescribed machinery for resolving differences of opinion, where you have one doctor saying a person should be discharged, and another doctor saying that he should not be discharged.

Mr. Chairman, my information was some weeks ago, that the government was giving some consideration conceivably to an amendment to one of our Acts or to a regulation which would prescribe some machinery. I was wondering if the hon. Minister might elaborate on that point.

In relation to that, there is another point I would like the hon. Minister to comment on. One of the features of this incident that disturbed me was the fact that this elderly woman was going to be put out of the hospital in what appeared to me to be a rather callous manner. The decision had been taken that she was going out and when I discussed it with certain of the hospital officials, they in effect said it was not their responsibility as to where she went. I repeat, I said a moment ago that she could not go back home because her husband was himself in his late seventies and not in good health. As I understand it, there are certain grants given to hospitals, grants for social workers whose responsibility is to find an alternative place for a patient if he is discharged from a hospital.

The thing that puzzles me is that as I understand it this hospital was receiving these grants. If they are receiving the grants, what obligation is there to have that type of social worker on their staff and to make certain that if a patient is going to be discharged that an alternative place for that patient is found commensurate with his health requirements? Those two aspects of that same question—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member discussed this case with me at some length some time ago and I could readily understand his confusion at the time, and realized, too, that even I had some difficulty, and the commission had some difficulty resolving the problem. Here was a matter of a difference of professional opinion. The doctor in active charge of the case, looking at the patient and interpreting the regulations under which she was admitted to hospital, said this patient had no longer any right to be in hospital using the criterion of medical necessity. This was questioned by the family physician who knew something of his former patient's condition and also took the broader view and knew something of the social implications in the home. As the hon. member has pointed out, if this lady had gone home, herself almost helpless, she would have gone home to a husband who was chronically and quite seriously ill himself. The matter certainly deserved further investigation, at least from what I gleaned of it when the hon. member spoke to me about it.

With that in view, the commission did look into the matter and found that there was a difference of opinion on the basis of the staff. But the superintendent, himself a physician, chose to accept the word of his staff doctor who was the attending physician and felt that he had no other recourse than to discharge the patient, albeit the commission had advised him that in its opinion there were compassionate grounds, at least, for holding this patient for a period of time until satisfactory arrangements could be made. However, the superintendent did stand on his rights.

In a hospital of this kind where there is not a large attending staff, this does pose problems and we now have an arrangement with the Ontario Medical Association that, in cases of this kind, they will supply a board of referees so that we cannot be accused of bureaucracy or of interfering with the operation of a hospital; but they will be taking it upon themselves to judge the opinion of their peers.

In a hospital where there is an attending staff, there is such a committee now; and if there is any question about the admission or discharge of a patient, or indeed about the treatment of a patient, it can be referred either to the chief of the service, to the chief of staff, or to what we look upon as the admission and discharge committee, for their opinion. And their opinion is usually binding upon the hospital.

For the hospital to say that they had no recourse but to discharge this patient is, of course, quite wrong, because patients are only admitted and discharged on the recommendation of a doctor, and that doctor is the attending physician. For admission, it is usually the family physician or, in the case of a referral, the specialist to whom the patient has been referred, sir. If the patient goes out of the hands of the family physician on admission to hospital, then it is the attending physician, while the patient is in hospital, who says when the patient shall be discharged.

This is an excuse. Let us face it. I know that many boards, and many doctors, say to their patients, "Now, I have no choice. The hospital services commission says I have to discharge you." Well, the hospital services commission says nothing about it at all. They stop paying the bill when the doctor says the patient no longer needs to be in hospital for medical reasons. The whole responsibility, for admission and discharge of the patient, rests with the doctor and not with the commission. I think the sooner we disabuse our minds of this misconception, which is so widely held and is so frequently used, the sooner we will understand what the function of the commission is in this regard.

This is a matter with which, I believe, we have neither found nor developed mechanism to deal. Fortunately, it does not happen often, but it happens often enough.

About the social service nurse: I have not been able to find out if they have such a nurse on their staff; but the commission does accept this as an approved cost of operation; and, of course, in my opinion, this is one of the important functions of the social service nurse. She would have some idea, in the case of a patient who is chronically ill, when that patient was likely to be discharged, and surely could put into motion, early enough, machinery to get the patient placed.

As I recall it, we did not have very much difficulty, and the commission went quite beyond its terms of reference—at my request again and at the request of the hon. member—by trying to find some solution to this problem, and it did not take the commission very long to find a nursing home to which the patient could be transferred. This, I believe, is the function of the social service nurse. If they had such a nurse on their staff, then I think it was a matter of poor organization on the hospital's part, in this case, that the transfer was not arranged.

The commission just points out to me that the commission allows 21 days after notification of the date that benefits should end. So, if the doctor says that this patient will be ready to be discharged on March 1, we will say for the sake of argument, the commission would continue to pay up until March 21, if the patient was still in hospital. They have three weeks in which to make arrangements for the patient's transfer.

Mr. D. W. Ewen (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question, in regard to the three letters that the hon. member for Wentworth East read, mentioning patients waiting three to six hours. If I took a child to the Hamilton General Hospital and it had a bad scald, of course there is, naturally, the question, "Who is your physician or your GPP?" If I said I did not have one, how long would I have to wait for that child to have service rendered? First aid. Could you answer that, sir?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I have no idea. This would depend entirely upon the organization of the hospital.

Mr. Ewen: Well, what I am getting at is that apparently a lot of the cause is blamed on the hospital, and what holds the patient up is the fact that they cannot locate the doctor of that particular child.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Being a doctor myself, I would have to disagree with the hon. member, Mr. Chairman. If a case is brought into the emergency department of the hospital, and the patient is evidently in difficulty, you do not wait for the patient's own doctor. You render first aid immediately.

This was the way I was taught, anyway, as an intern; this was part of our work, to render first aid immediately. Then, when the patient was as comfortable as possible under the circumstances, or while you were doing that, somebody in the hospital organization would be trying to locate the family physician to advise him that his patient had been admitted to emergency. That is the organization I was taught; and this, I think, is the soundest organization generally used in emergency departments.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston): Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a word to these thoughts expressed by the hon. member for High Park and also the hon. Minister of Mines. During previous employment, I had the opportunity of spending a fair amount of time in the Wellesley Hospital, at a time when they were not quite as crowded as they might be today. Apparently there was an adequate number of nurses, and I might say that I was looked after very well.

Recently I had an emergency appendectomy at the Scarborough General Hospital. The hospital was crowded. I arrived there at seven o'clock and my appendix was out at 11 o'clock. I spent the balance of the night and the morning on a bed in one of the hallways and, mind you, I did not mind that. I was very happy to have had the appendix out and to have a bed to be in.

The hospital was crowded, and yet I must say that the service I received from the nurses in the Scarborough General Hospital was just as good, just as thoughtful, as the service I had received in the Wellesley Hospital several years ago when they were not nearly as busy.

I would like certainly to commend the nurses in the Scarborough General Hospital for the way they looked after me under rather trying conditions. I know now that something is being done to alleviate the crowded conditions in the hospitals in Scarborough.

I wanted to point out the fact that there was no deterioration in service, regardless of the fact that one hospital was not very crowded and the other was very crowded.

In another example, and I think the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) would agree with me, when I say that the Paris General Hospital is a very fine hospital. They have recently completed a nice new addition, and I think he would also agree with me that the board of governors of that hospital have done an outstanding job over the years to make that one of the finest hospitals of its size in western Ontario.

I recall an occasion where an elderly lady went to that hospital, having suffered a broken arm. She was looked after carefully, promptly and well, and she was let out of the hospital approximately four days afterwards, and the total bill that she paid, I think, was around $9.36. That hospital, too, did an excellent job in that particular case.

The Hotel Dieu Hospital in Kingston is now in the process of building a $5 million addition, and I think I mentioned in my Throne debate speech that when that is completed, it will go, to a great extent, a long way toward alleviating any hospital overcrowding in the city of Kingston.

The Kingston General Hospital has just completed, and will open this spring, a new nursing school which I am sure will alleviate a great deal of the nursing shortage in eastern Ontario.

One further comment: I also had the opportunity of bringing a young patient into the outpatient ward of the Kingston General Hospital, where she was looked after capably, quickly and well.

I would like to congratulate the hon. Minister of Health for the work that he and his department are doing, and I am sure that if there is the odd case where some people may feel that they have not had the service that they should have received, I feel certain that he and his department are doing, and will continue to do, their best to make certain that these cases are few and far between.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, the hallelujah chorus is in fine voice tonight, with the hon. member for Kingston, the hon. Minister of Mines and the hon. member for High Park, extolling the praises and the wonders of the hon. Minister of Health. He is a fine man, so say we all, and amen.

There is no doubt, Mr. Chairman, and there is no point in documenting this all over again—we have been doing this for the past four days—but there is a hospital shortage in the province of Ontario. And no amount of fine praises from these hon. gentlemen is going to change that. There is no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that there is a nursing shortage in the province of Ontario, and no amount of fine speech is going to change it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can stand here just as long as the back benchers can shout, and when they keep quiet I will go on with my remarks.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, one of the very fascinating matters that has been debated in connection with hospital administration is a matter that was raised in connection with the estimates of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree). I tried to make some points at that time in connection with that matter and I was ruled out of order.

I presume I am in order tonight and I am going to proceed with the remarks that I started at that time. The hon. Minister tonight continued with his theme and he said, as I wrote down his words, "We cannot be charged with interference with the operation of a hospital."

Mr. Chairman, I suggest to you that the facts are quite, quite different from that and I suggest to you that the hon. Minister in his opening remarks on the general office portion of his estimates, attempted to drag a red herring across the trail in connection with this very important facet of hospital administration.

I do not think that the hon. Minister need apologize for the control that the hospital services commission exercises over hospitals. I do not think that necessarily there is anything wrong with it. But I think that when that control is exercised, Mr. Chairman, that The Department of Health and its responsible Minister should have the courage to say, "Yes, this is being done, and we accept the responsibility."

I do not see in the face of these letters I have—and I read some of them before and I am going to lead up to the ones that I was not allowed to read the other morning—I do not think that in face of these letters that emanated from the hospital services commission that anyone can deny that the hospital services commission rules very strongly and controls very carefully the affairs of the various hospitals in the province of Ontario.

In saying this, Mr. Chairman, I do not detract for a moment from the abilities and the generous service given by the ladies and gentlemen who sit on hospital boards, nor do I condemn all doctors or all nurses or all hospitals, nor do I apologize for those hon. members of the Opposition who bring forward on the floor of this House, as they should, instances where proper treatment has not been given. I agree with the hon. Minister and with others who have said that in the vast majority of cases our hospitals render good treatment and our doctors are responsible people and our nurses are careful in giving good attention to their patients. But surely this is one of the main purposes of this Legislature—to bring before the bar of public opinion criticisms and suggestions with a view to having these bad situations remedied.

I would think, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister of Health and all the hon. members in this House would welcome the fact that these things are brought forward and would not condemn the hon. members of the Opposition in the manner that has been done this evening.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Would the hon. member be doing it with the legal profession?

Mr. Singer: Yes, if the hon. member would be patient I plan to have a few remarks to make in connection with legal aid and, Mr. Chairman, I am going to say things of a similar fashion.

Mr. White: Saying similar things about lawyers and telling about their misdeeds?

Mr. Singer: If the hon. member will be patient and be sure he is in attendance when I deliver the speech, he will hear what I have to say at that time.

Mr. Chairman, I was reading some of these letters and to get back into the theme of the control exercised by the hospital services commission, I refer to a letter dated March 6, 1961, signed by W. E. Noonan, MD, acting director of the hospital services branch. A few lines from that letter read this way, and it is addressed to hospitals engaged in or contemplating plans for expansion:

In certain cases work has been proceeded with by hospitals without prior approval of the commission required under The Public Hospitals Act. We would make clear the necessity for a hospital to obtain commission approval. The project must be outlined to the commission, plans must be produced, inspections must be made—and so on. This extends to the point, Mr. Chairman, that even in the case of one hospital where they wanted to move their offices from one section of the main floor of the hospital to another, until all of these plans were approved, inspections were made and so on, they just were not allowed to do that. Yet the hon. Minister says—

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Is there anything wrong with that?

Mr. Singer: No, I did not say there was anything wrong with that. The hon. member for Eglinton should listen. I said I do not find anything wrong in the hospital services commission exercising certain substantial control over hospitals, but I do say that since it is done, that the hon. Minister of Health should have the courage to stand up in this House and admit it is done and accept responsibility in regard to it. He has been denying it all the way through and I am trying to prove that this is, in fact, so.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, I have not been denying that we take responsibility.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor and if the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon. member has been putting words in my mouth that were not uttered. On a point of order, sir.

I have never denied that the commission exercises responsibility. Indeed, in my opening remarks I pointed out quite clearly that the commission was exercising the authority laid upon it by the Act, and as long as that Act was as it is and until it was changed by this Legislature I would insist that the commission exercise that responsibility. I did state that the commission does not dictate labour policies.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, it is hard to keep up with all the ways of explaining these matters that the hon. Minister has.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Read what I said,

Mr. Singer: He just said now—we will come to this in a few minutes—he said the commission does not dictate labour policies. Earlier this evening—and I copied down these remarks—he said this: “We cannot be charged with interference with the operation of a hospital.” Now I say that is wrong too. Mr. Chairman, if I am going to be allowed to complete this, I will prove through these letters that the commission does those things, and I say again to the hon. Minister that he should say this happens and not apologize for it. I do not think it is a wrong thing.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am not apologizing.

Mr. Singer: But I say he should accept it, he should admit it and accept the responsibility that goes with this control. It is a very substantial point. When we discussed the Trenton dispute, this was the whole issue. I think the hon. Minister made a very serious mistake in sloughing off the responsibility insofar as labour at Trenton is concerned in saying: “It isn’t my responsibility, it is the responsibility of a bunch of people down in Trenton.” It was the hon. Minister of Labour and the hon. Minister of Health who should have been able to work this thing out.

Here is another letter, dated August 31, 1962, signed by D. W. Ogilvie, general manager of the commission. It is addressed to hospitals engaged in or contemplating plans for expansion or changes in utilization of space and refers to an earlier letter dealing with the necessity for obtaining commission approval. It talks about the required commission approval. The project must be outlined to the commission and approval in principle established. There must be a formal letter giving final approval and so on.

Mr. A. E. Dunlop (Forest Hill): That is not related to labour.

Mr. Singer: I am sorry, I missed that.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): He said it was not related to labour.

Mr. Singer: We will get a little closer to labour just in a moment. Here is a letter over the signature of R. W. I. Urquhart, MA, MD, LL.D, chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. Dr. Urquhart says this:

I have had a report in the matter of the delay and the final reply to your letter of August 3. I know just how it happened but a delay of this nature is inexcusable and I hope it will not occur again.

He is very unhappy with the hospital to which he has written this letter.

On the other hand your letter began, "We wish to announce the appointment, etc." Nothing could be more indicative of finality than that and my letter of August 3 gave you fair warning that you might well find yourself in trouble, not having had prior consultation with us. I do not like it any more than you do but you are involved in a situation where "he who pays the piper calls the tune."

Neither this commission nor government is prepared to find money necessary to carry out all the ambitions of a hospital without prior consultation and agreement. Some superintendents and some boards for that matter will have to find this out the hard way, sooner or later. You have a right to appeal to the commission and you should arrange an appointment with the commission secretary Mr. Bryce.

Mr. Chairman, how can anyone hearing that letter believe that the commission does not exercise the most thoroughgoing control that one could possibly imagine? Here is a letter that does not pull any punches. He who pays the piper calls the tune. Some superintendents and some boards for that matter will have to find this out the hard way sooner or later. Can there be any doubt in the mind of any hon. member as to what Dr. Urquhart was saying? Put that sentiment together with the views expressed by the hon. Minister of Health and how do you correlate the two? I just cannot quite follow the hon. Minister's logic in this at all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me read you one more letter, or a portion of another letter. This is a letter addressed to a hospital re the 1964 budget. I presume it is a form letter that went out to most hospitals. It is dated January 2, 1964, and it is signed by John B. Neilson, MBE, MD, chairman, and a paragraph on page two of that letter says this:

The salary rates and the salary ranges shown in the approved budget for 1964 must not be exceeded without prior consultation with the commission. Likewise, the total number of persons to be employed in 1964, as reflected in the approved overall hours of work, must not be exceeded without approval. To exceed these approvals without consultation can mean that the payment go unapproved. Additional costs will not be made in the 1964 year-end settlement.

Now, Mr. Chairman, surely if this paragraph in this letter means anything, it means that the commission has approved and insists on the right to approve—and I do not say they should not—of the number of employees, of the salary scale and the number of hours to be worked. There is a warning here. It is an obvious warning. It is not hidden. I do not blame the commission for sending the warning that if these conditions are changed without the approval of the hospital commission that the monies are not going to be forthcoming at the end of the year.

Mr. Chairman, you can put it in whatever language you want, but the control is there and the commission says it is exercising that control. When we translate this back to the situation in Trenton, there could be no settlement in Trenton without the approval of the commission. I think everybody here who understands the Trenton situation must recognize this. If the salary schedules were going to be changed, then the commission had to give its approval in regard to those changes. So that really, the bargaining insofar as any labour dispute taking place in regard to a hospital properly belongs with the commission and The Department of Health.

It is my submission, Mr. Chairman, that these letters speak for themselves, and it is my submission that we would get along a lot further and a lot better if we whipped away this veil of apparent standoffishness and stopped trying to fool the people about what is going on. I do not think there is anything to be embarrassed about. I do not think that the hon. Minister should apologize or say that this is not happening. The hospital commission is exercising firm control and I think they should. They are dealing with a lot of public money, and there are situations that demand their very serious attention.

Certainly the situation in Trenton demanded their very serious attention. It demanded not only the attention of the hospital commission, it commanded eventually the attention of the hon. Minister of Labour and his department. It had some very serious ramifications. I am not going to repeat those charges. I do not think the hon. Minister should apologize. I think he should be very happy to say, yes, this is our responsibility and yes, we are going to do something about it.

Anyone who deals with hospitals recognizes that these are the facts of life and I would urge, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister be bold enough to say: this is the way we operate and we are going to operate in this way. Fairly, yes, but we are looking after the money of the people of Ontario and we are going to do it properly.

If we get this far, Mr. Chairman, I think we are going to be able to run our hospitals in a lot better fashion and to serve the people of Ontario in a more satisfactory manner.

Mr. A. A. Wishart (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here for sometime wondering if I should hang my head in shame or not. I happen to be a director of a hospital, having been such for some 22 years without a break. For the last two years I have been chairman of the board of the Plummer Memorial Public Hospital at Sault Ste. Marie.

Perhaps I should point my remarks at the hon. member for Downsview. I do not know what he is trying to prove. Certainly there is control exercised by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. I think the control is exercised in a very proper way, with consultation, discussion and the most thorough investigation of all hospital matters in conjunction with your hospital board. As I say, I have had 22 years steady experience as a trustee and, since 1960, working with the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

It is a curious fact—which I had no intention of relating until I listened to this debate go on to this extent—that last year the collective agreement with our employees, which had been in existence, I believe, for some three years, came up for renewal and renegotiation. Negotiations went on with our administrator for several weeks in the spring of 1963. During all that time we had no correspondence, no direction of any kind—by telegram, by telephone, by letter, or any other way, or by a visit—from the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

We felt we were able to work that matter out ourselves. The matter went to arbitration. A board sat. The gentleman who was dealing with us was Mr. Hearn. I believe he was the same gentleman who was in the Trenton affair and we had numerous discussions with him. The board made its report. The report was unanimous. However, it was not entirely accepted by the hospital. Still, up to this point, we had no direction, we had no interference and we had no instruction by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. I think this was proper.

Now I will agree with my hon. friend that within certain limits we knew, from our own common sense, we must remain within limits that could be sustained in relation to wage and salary levels. But we tried to work that out ourselves, Mr. Chairman. The matter went so far that the hon. Minister of Labour saw fit to ask me to come down and consult with him, which I did. We went back and we settled the matter. From the beginning to the end, there was no interference. There was not a line, not a word from the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

I do not know what this proves, except that I think it does disprove the point which my hon. friend is trying to make. I welcome, and I think my board of trustees welcomes, a certain amount of direction as we set up our budget. We had a letter similar to the one my hon. friend cited. We work out our budget after discussions with the commission, trying to relate it to the wage levels in our community. We try to relate our staff to the hospital so that proper service may be given and all these things are taken into account. I think the advent of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission undoubtedly, in my experience, resulted in a far better type of hospital administration than we had before its coming into existence—far better.

The only thing I have to complain about is that they are perhaps a little stingy, sometimes, in granting us some of the monies we would like to receive. We feel we could do a little more if we had a little more money. But I suppose that is a common complaint that anybody might have.

I would like to hark back, for just a moment, to some of the remarks of my hon. friend from Downsview. He mentioned a few days ago, I believe it was earlier in this debate or perhaps it was the hon. member for York South, or perhaps it was the hon. member for Woodbine—

Mr. MacDonald: Somebody in the Opposition.

Mr. Bryden: Somebody somewhere.

Mr. Wishart: But there was a suggestion that hospital boards—I believe it was from the hon. member for Woodbine—were run by people who—I think the suggestion was—are out of touch with reality, who are big shots. I know those words were not used—

An hon. member: Mr. Chairman, that has very little relationship with what I said.

Mr. Wishart: Well, it was very close to what you said, in my opinion. It was in this debate. It was after the estimates came in that these remarks were made. I would just like to tell my hon. friend from Woodbine that the chairman of my board for some years past, and for quite a number of years in a row, was a railway engineer. He carried his union card. Now this man was a mighty good chairman.

A hospital board is charged not only with finding funds but with management, the control of the nursing school, obtaining staff; the building programme; the control of the medical staff; the records; the dietary needs; all the supplies that go into a hospital. I think this is an important point. They are close to the municipality, to the people they serve, to the area they serve, and this is good and I would regret the day, if it should come about, where that control and that closeness, that being in touch with the local area ever passed away.

I rise, therefore, to the defence of hospital boards, not because I happen to be a trustee, but because I have seen the work they do and how valuable their work is to the community. I am sure this House does not need to be told the tremendous amount of money which is raised by those very eminent, capable gentlemen who serve on hospital boards. There is a word that is used a great deal today—fabulous—fabulous sums of money have been raised through the efforts of hospital trustees, particularly in the larger centres.

If I might just take a moment to relate to this House that in my community where there are two hospitals—one run by the Grey Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, and the public hospital, which happens to be the one of which I am chairman—there was recently a building fund campaign. The city and the two surrounding townships held a united campaign and allotted 50 per cent to each of those hospitals from the $1.8 million raised by a debenture. In addition to that, at the same time, the public, by subscription, raised another $900,000, and then with the government grant we went forward. Those two building campaigns are now being completed all under the direction of the advisory board of the sisters' hospital, the general hospital and the local board of trustees of the Plummer Hospital, and quite properly so, the plans being first approved and related and allocated and checked by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

I echo the sentiments of some of my hon. friends who have said that it is all very well to criticize. I know there are many things to be criticized; there are many things to strive for and improve in the administration and operation of hospitals. But let us in our criticism, to be fair, say this. Local boards of trustees, I think, are doing a very excellent, a very valuable job and one which, I think, should never pass away under the direction and under those measures of control which are exercised by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Health. What is the per patient day allowance for food given to the hospitals by the hospital services commission?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Up to 95 cents per day per patient in the southern part of Ontario.

Mr. Newman: Is it 95 cents a day?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Up to that. They may not necessarily get that. If they budget wisely and manage wisely, the budget for food costs may be less than that. We do allow up to 95 cents.

Mr. Newman: That is all it costs to feed a patient in the hospital—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We feed our patients in the Ontario Hospitals for less than 75 cents per day—

Mr. Newman: I wish they would give me the formula.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: When food is being provided for many hundreds of patients, providing many hundreds of thousands of meals, it is a much different matter from providing meals for a family.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, apparently, according to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, the hospitals are asking for an increased allotment because they figure that the amount allotted does not give them a sufficient amount to be able to supply the dietary needs of the patients.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It has been increased this year but, again, no reasonable budget for food or any other matter is turned down. If the hospital brings forward a reasonable budget, backed by logical business-like arguments, it will not be turned down.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, from all I have been able to learn, hospital budgets are very tight.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course they are, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacDonald: There is very little slack. That being the case, I want to ask the hon. Minister a general question to see if I cannot get clear in my mind this point that we have been discussing now for quite a number of days, both back in the labour estimates and in his own estimates.

If negotiations take place in the middle of the year, say, a three-year contract, as was the case up in Sault Ste. Marie, and there is an increase given which is going to be an increase for the next three years, I would assume, Mr. Chairman, from the last letter that the hon. member for Downsview read that there would be no alternative but for the hospital to get authorization for an increase through a supplementary budget to pay for the rest of the year. Now, do they or do they not?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They have the right in those cases to bring down a supplementary budget. If their contract is changed in the middle of the operating year they do just as is done in The Department of Highways when a municipality passes a supplementary bylaw. They present a supplementary budget. Here, again, if we have evidence that they negotiated in good faith and that this is the sort of contract they must accept, there is no argument.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Sault St. Marie has put it far more graphically than I could because he has been involved in these matters, but the Hamilton hospital just within recent weeks, I think within the last two weeks, has completed a new contract and it did not consult the commission, it did not ask any questions of the commission—I mean about the general terms of the contract. It did ask the commission to change its policy with respect to a certain fringe benefit and the commission in its wisdom refused to change the policy in respect of that. But this does not mean to say that it will not be—in fact I think the contract has been signed giving this additional fringe benefit because the hospital has certain preferred income.

In that regard, I think it is only right that this House should know that in the year 1962—and again this is the total figure for all of the hospitals in Ontario, it does not mean to say that a great sum of money is centralized in any one hospital—the surplus in operating budgets in all hospitals in Ontario was $16.7 million. If I may lapse into the language of the farmyard, “that ain’t hay.” And when we talk about our being so brutally tight on hospital boards and about hospital boards bleating to people about it, may I remind you that when this plan came into operation in 1958 all of the hospitals then existent in Ontario had a capital debt of $68 million. In spite of all the hard-hearted policy and tight niggardliness of the commission, in 1962, the last year for which we have complete figures, this capital debt burden was down to $46 million. At the end of 1962, they had cut their capital debt $22 million in four years. In 1958, they had an operating deficit all over the province of $2.9 million, but, after these four years under this tight, niggardly commission, they end up with a $16.7 million surplus in operating account. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that by any stretch of the imagination I can believe that this commission is so brutally hard on our hospitals. I am looking at this $16.7 million, and I am going to have a few words with the commission to see if we might reduce that a little bit and thereby save the taxpayers of the province a little bit of money.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. Minister for telling us that the procedure now is that they ask for a supplementary budget to cover any increase in wages. I would say, with all respect to the hon. Minister, if he had said this about one week ago we could have reduced the debate by about an hour. We have been trying to find out. However, let me apply the principle.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: At last the hon. member calls a spade a spade.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is really being coy. We have been trying to find out what the relationship was between the hospital services commission and a hospital in the process of negotiation.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I told the hon. member earlier; they submit their budget, and the commission passes it.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister said nothing of—he said nothing about supplementary budgets. This is the first time it has been mentioned. And let the Presbyterian conscience of the hon. Minister be his guide now; he said nothing about supplementary budgets.

However, let me come down to a specific case because I want to come back to this one. When the Trenton hospital board made its representation to the Bennett commission—their second representation—what they said was this: "The hospital, despite the strike, and despite the allegations of the union is still operating within its budget though it has received assurances that it may go beyond its budget should it be necessary." I would assume that what that really means is that the hospital services commission has said to them that, "If your increased rates are going to get you beyond the budget, you can submit a supplementary budget and we will look upon it with favour." Am I accurate?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In essence, I would hesitate to say that the hon. member is accurate in stating as a logical conclusion that we would look upon it with favour. We would look upon it with careful scrutiny; but this, in essence, is what would happen.

Mr. MacDonald: After that image of generosity that the hon. Minister just created—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, do not get me wrong. There is no generosity. We are handling taxpayers' money.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is acting like a Scotsman.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Right, you bet.

Mr. MacDonald: All right, Mr. Chairman. Now let me come down to a final aspect in the Trenton incident. If I may just quote one paragraph from the statement of the hon. Minister in reply to the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) as reported in Hansard at page 514. This is what he said:

In conversation with the hospital there is no accurate or easily accessible information available about the costs which were entailed in hiring this additional staff, but it is the opinion of the administrator, with which I concur—and I underline that. The hon. Minister said, "with which I concur":

—that very little, if any, additional salaries and wages were paid to those who were engaged to work in the hospital, over the salaries and wages that would have been paid to the employees who went out on strike.

I have a question I want to ask the hon. Minister a little bit later, but just let me preface the question by saying this: First, before the first strike deadline in the latter part of September, there had been virtually a duplicate staff hired by the hospital.

Second, that when they hired the staff after the strike actually began, as the hon. Minister himself conceded, they brought many of them on, not at the lowest price in the range, $130 a month, but at the highest, $170. That surely would represent a fair amount of expenditure.

Third, by the hon. Minister's own confession in that same statement, they could not get nurses' aides whatever be the wages that they paid nurses' aides, instead they hired nurses at $1.75 an hour. There was a third major expenditure.

Finally, when they settled it, again by the hon. Minister's own testimony, he said it was done with great generosity, namely, they gave them severance pay equivalent to two weeks' salary, plus two days' vacation pay for each month worked.

In other words, after a three-month strike, you have a severance pay of two weeks' pay plus two days' vacation pay for each month worked. As has been pointed out, this is far more generous than some people get if they have been working for years for the hospital. And that involves some money.

So you had a duplicate staff, you had started at the top of the range rather than the bottom of the range, you had nurses hired rather than nurses' aids, and when you reached the end of the thing you had all these people being given their severance pay.

My question to the hon. Minister is: (a) how could that be done within the budget of the hospital without it having an incredible amount of slack to begin with? And (b) in specific terms, how much more did the hospital have to spend as a result of that strike in Trenton?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand how there was virtually a duplication of staff, because I have the salary and wage bill for September, October, November, December—we have not got it for January yet. In September it was $52,945, for 33,429 paid hours of work; in October it was $50,635, for 35,984 paid hours of work; November it was $49,514, for 32,869 paid hours of work; and in December it was $48,858, for 33,126 paid hours of work.

Mr. MacDonald: What was it in August?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have not that figure.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that is the figure we need. That takes you back to the normal amount because they built up their additional staff in September.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The strike did not start until October.

Mr. MacDonald: My information from the union involved is that they had a duplicate staff by the first strike deadline, the deadline on which the hon. Minister of Labour gave a commitment that they were later double-crossed on, to use the union's own terminology. That strike deadline was, if I recall correctly, September 30—thereabouts anyway, within a day or so—and they had built up their duplicate staff in September. So, if you want to get a wage figure which would be accurate, to find out what the increase has been, you have to go back to August.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The replacement, where the hon. member points up an error in my statement that they replaced certified nursing assistants with registered nurses, was not a one-for-one replacement. It was considered that a registered nurse would be capable of doing more than one certified nursing assistant, and, therefore, that was not a one-for-one replacement.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): May I ask the hon. Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Humber (Mr. W. B. Lewis) is still a member of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, he is, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sopha: May I ask the hon. Minister through you, Mr. Chairman, how much he is paid by way of honorarium for occupying that position?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: $6,000 per year.

Mr. Sopha: $6,000, the hon. Minister says?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Sopha: My! Is there any good reason why the honorarium that he is paid should not be published in the public accounts?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am not just sure how the public accounts are published. I have not looked at public accounts yet. If the other commissioners' salaries are listed, there is no reason why his would not be.

Mr. Sopha: I am not sure that they are, because I have been through this thing fully half a dozen times. If anybody wants to ascertain how much I get paid, as one who does not come here for financial reward, all they need do is look in The Legislative Assembly Act as amended from time to time.

However, I have been one of those who has appointed to myself something of being a supervisory watchdog on the back row over there. I want to point out to the House that, when the affairs of this important commission are being discussed in this House, the hon. member for Humber is not here. It is quite incredible.

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. Sopha: What is the point of order?

Mr. Cowling: The point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that the hon. member for Humber reported to me that he would be unavoidably absent tonight, due to sickness in the family, and that he expected that this debate would continue on until tomorrow, and he expects to speak in the debate tomorrow. That is the hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Bryden: Do you want us to accommodate him?

Mr. Sopha: Well, the hon. Prime Minister has been very accommodating to this side. However, I am going to make this point: I cannot recall any occasion, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Humber has ever uttered a syllable in this House about the affairs of the hospital services commission.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I said I cannot recall a day I have sat here and not watched him in the depths of silence when these affairs have been discussed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: And I cannot get a contribution. However, as a result of the very articulate and very learned, incisive contribution that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie made this night about hospital affairs, which is typical of the people we send from the north usually, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. Prime Minister would consider replacing the hon. member for Humber with my hon. friend from Sault Ste. Marie on that important commission.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 714 carried? This completes the estimates—

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I had one more question to ask. I wanted to ask the hon. Minister this—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: Much has been said that planning must be on a regional basis, the region being large enough to support the variety and quality of hospitals required. I am quoting from one of the commissioners, I believe. But one of the reasons I have read in the paper why this must take place is the fact that larger hospital units are more economical. Is this correct?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Within limits. A great deal of controversy rages around this question and it is difficult to reach a sure decision on it. I am of the opinion, from what I have read and from what I have been told by the authorities, that a hospital of more than 600 or 650 beds is no longer an economical operation. Up to 600 or 650 beds it is; beyond that it is not.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I have one further point. I believe that in my own area, Bruce, it is something of a special case having no large hospital. I believe that the reason that has been given, in the local papers anyway, is the fact that generally speaking the larger the unit the more economical it is to run.

Now, I just give these figures to you. In 1963 the largest hospital in our area was the Owen Sound Hospital and the per diem rate there is $21.55 a day. That, Mr. Chairman, is the most expensive hospital in the area, and for the simple reason, in my opinion, that it is the largest. I would imagine that if the hospital commission went down the list of all the numerous hospitals in the province of Ontario that, generally speaking, the larger they are the more expensive they are.

You can go over the hospitals in Toronto. Maybe there is some reason for this, that they should be more expensive. I can give you some figures. For example, in 1963 in Chesley it was $13.80 per day. In Durham it was $16.75. In Walkerton $15.75. In Hanover, $17.85, and in Owen Sound, $21.55. In the Toronto General Hospital it is perhaps $40 per day. I have forgotten exactly what it is, but in any event it is much more expensive there than it is in the smaller units.

Now, if there is some justification to make these units larger, then I am all for it. But I do not think that the commission can give as an excuse the reason that the larger the units the less expensive it is because this just is not so. There is more economy practised in the smaller units across this province than there is in the larger ones. There is no question about it whatsoever. Therefore I hope that the commission, in their wisdom, will get some better excuse than the fact that they say that the larger they are the more economical they are.

I have just one more question, Mr. Chairman. Would the hon. Minister please tell me what is the salary of the chairman of the hospital insurance commission for Ontario? We cannot find it in the public accounts and I think it should be public knowledge.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The first question of the hon. member, Mr. Chairman: Hospitals are divided into three groups. Like Gaul, they are divided into three parts, the community hospital, the district hospital and the regional hospital.

The hospitals the hon. member cited with per diem rates of $15, $17 and $18 are the community hospitals. The hospitals such as Owen Sound are district hospitals, to which the community refers certain cases that are beyond the scope, facilities and staffing of the community hospital. This immediately adds to the cost. In addition to that, of course, Owen Sound is a general hospital. It operates a school for nurses and this, too, adds to the cost. Then we speak of Toronto General Hospital, which is a regional hospital where cases calling for a great deal of diagnostic procedure, expensive treatment and a usually longer stay are sent. This, too, puts up the cost. The artificial kidney, the cardiovascular—

Mr. Whicher: May I ask the hon. Minister why that adds to cost? Because the hospitals are fuller—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It does not matter whether they involve a long stay or a short stay because they are full anyway. The long stay has no real difference. They admit fewer patients, but the cost of operating the hospital is greater for the simple reason that the type of work done is far more intricate, far more costly.

The second question the hon. member asked, and before I leave the first question the idea of regional organization is not necessarily to build bigger hospitals but to include larger areas. If one hospital will serve a larger area then we believe, or at least there is some body of opinion which believes, it can operate better and more efficiently in this regard. I cannot say that I am altogether in favour of this myself. Again I have an open mind and I am willing to be shown.

The second question, the salary of the executive chairman of the commission, is $27,000 per year. Remember, of course, that this is a full-time position.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the hon. Minister a question? On the 1st of July this staggering increase in hospital insurance comes into effect. Some of the co-operatives, and perhaps some other organizations I am not sure, but certainly some of the co-operatives, have been collecting from local people on a yearly basis. I know, for instance, our own is paid once a year. I believe they remit to the hospital insurance on a quarterly basis. Now, what would the situation be beyond July 1? I mean, if the local club were holding back say, six months' premiums that had not been forwarded to the hospital commission but the premium holder himself had paid for a whole year of hospitalization, what would happen in a case like that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am advised that in the cases of those who have paid in advance, they cannot go back and collect the increase. That does not mean to say there can be a rush now to pay in advance for the rest of the year, but for those who have already paid in advance, this will be accepted as their full coverage.

Mr. Oliver: Even though it has not been sent in from the local to the hospital commission?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is right. This is an arrangement that the co-operatives have with us.

They are not paid for the collections, but, by collecting a year in advance, I think they end up with something like a two per cent income which gives them continued interest in their people and enough to operate their collection.

Mr. Oliver: I just have one more question. We talked tonight about the control that the hospital commission has over per diem rates in the hospitals. Does it work the other way? Are there instances where the hospital commission suggests to a hospital that they should charge more than they are presently charging?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The chief commissioner assures me that there have been such occasions because—

Mr. Oliver: What would generate a case like that, may I ask? I have in mind a hospital that apparently was quite content to go along, and were able to go along, on what they had been charging per day. They received, as I understand it, from the hospital commission an intimation that they should charge more. I could not see why that should come.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: If the quality of the care being offered; particularly in the matter of nursing, were not up to the minimum standards considered acceptable by the commission, then administration of the hospital would be so advised and their budget would be affected immediately. But this would be about the only reason for which the commission would recommend, or would urge, an increased per diem rate.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, just one more question. Do I understand this correctly, that anybody who had paid their hospital insurance premium for one year in advance previous to the statement of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) and that a married man—a family man, we would say—would only have to pay on the old rate providing that cheque had gone into a co-operative before the statement was made? Is this correct? Because there is going to be some trouble over this.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is correct.

Mr. Whicher: That is correct?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would be interested to know what kind of trouble we—

Mr. Whicher: The trouble is this. For example, I happened to pay and saved $25 or $26 or whatever it is. But if I had sent a cheque maybe a week following, it would have cost me that extra money. There are going to be some people in Ontario who will not understand this and I have heard that the hon. Minister has made a clear-cut, concrete statement here tonight that anybody who pays in advance previous to the hon. Provincial Treasurer's statement will pay on the old rate.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, if the cheque were paid in before the hon. Provincial Treasurer's statement was made it would be accepted as full payment for this year.

Mr. Whicher: Paid to the co-operative involved.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Paid to the co-operative. They still have the right to submit it to us a quarter at a time.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise a question with the hon. Minister. In the early days of the hospital insurance plan we had the problem of employees leaving an employer under the compulsory premium payment situation and going to work for an employer who had less than 15 employees and therefore where enrolment was not compulsory. Through forgetfulness or lack of knowing just what they should do, many of them ran out of benefits. What is the situation at the present time in this regard? What would be the average number of members running out of benefits through transferring from employment on a mandatory basis or being laid off, or for any reason running out of benefits?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: All that the staff can tell me at the present time is that they are very low in numbers. May I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that to answer these questions relative to the detail of operations I am arranging once again, as in the past, that the commission will be present at the health committee. They will be there this year, particularly to answer any questions or points of interest that you may wish to bring up. They will try to have answers to these questions more definite than I have been able to give them tonight.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, an item that has come to my attention in the past is the fact that in some cases the women of the household are the breadwinners due to the husband's sickness. How is it that the woman cannot continue to have the premiums deducted and she pay the hospitalization? What is wrong with this, rather than transfer it back to the husband?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This, too, is something that I still find difficult to understand. However, it has been worked out over the years that the man is always considered to be the head of the family. Again, Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the House not to answer this question in detail because it would have to be a long-winded answer. Will the hon. members be satisfied to have the commission answer this because it actually has no bearing on my budget? They will be prepared to answer this question and any questions arising out of the topic in full detail.

Vote 714 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of The Department of Health.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, before I leave this, may I be permitted to answer a question which the hon. member for York South posed while we were on the estimates relative to the division of industrial hygiene? The reason that I had forgotten about this matter relative to mercury poisoning was that this document was not a brief. There was no address on it other than Sarnia, Ontario, and it was anonymous. In spite of my usual custom of throwing anonymous missives in the waste basket, I was interested enough in it to ask my people to look into it and to give me a report upon it. The facts are not quite in keeping with what is outlined in this unsigned document. The inspections in this plant through my department have been far more frequent than was made out and my branch has consistently worked with The Department of Labour in seeking to find control methods in this plant. Apart from ventilation, major control methods are periodic medical examinations, special personal protective programmes, work clothes, respirators, and so on, special washing facilities and clothing storage for workers.

In spite of what is stated in this submission, I have here an undertaking that there has been no case in which a worker has shown consistently high values for mercury in the urine, which is the test used very widely to detect the measure of mercury being absorbed by the worker, and no case of mercury intoxication has been reported by any physician in workers from this company.

However, out of our examinations, and out of our inspections, have come certain recommendations to the plant and these recommendations have been adopted. I am assured that medical supervision, which was previously given on a voluntary basis, has now been made an official requirement. We have asked for a stepping up of the controls and more frequent submission of urine samples for our testing, and for air samplings, particularly during the warm weather when the mercury vapour is at its maximum amount. An increased degree of sampling will be carried out at that time.

I also want to reiterate that I am assured, and again, I must repeat that I have no other proof except this assurance, that no compensable case of mercury poisoning from this plant has ever been reported.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Chairman, it is again my privilege to present the estimates for The Department of Municipal Affairs to the House for consideration and I would like to make a few remarks.

During last year the expansion of my department has been made necessary to meet the ever-growing demand for advice and services to the municipalities. I would say that this reorganization and expansion of the department is well under way and I will attempt in my few remarks to give the House details of this expanding programme.

The magnitude of the department's responsibility will be better understood by pointing out that the estimated gross revenue of the municipalities of Ontario and the local boards for the year 1962 was $1,800 million, which exceeds the gross revenue of the province by $200 million.

During the past year the assessment branch implemented a programme to improve the assessment functions throughout the province. The programme, which is designed to provide more competent municipal assessors and a high standard of methods and procedures, is composed of three distinct steps. The first one is to complete the manual of assessment values; the second is the training of municipal assessors, and the third part of the programme is to provide for larger assessment jurisdictions.

In dealing with the assessment manual—which is now in the hands of the printers and I am sorry that it has not yet come from the printers and that it might have been available by this time—it is designed to be one of the most comprehensive guides to municipal assessors in use anywhere in North America. The manual is written in two main sections: the first, or procedural section, outlines the appraisal process, and the second, or cost section, provides cost data for a large number of structures. During the time that we were working on the preparation of this manual, draft copies were made available to a number of organizations interested in this field for their comment and criticism. These were the Association of Assessing Officers of Ontario, the Institute of Municipal Assessors, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the National Home Builders Association, the Institute of Local Government, Queen's University, and there were some other individuals and other interested groups.

Each group that I have mentioned was given ample opportunity to discuss its findings with the appropriate branch officials. As a result of this, a number of changes were incorporated in the manual.

I am firmly convinced—and I base this on some knowledge of this field of municipal administration and on the advice of my departmental people—that we have developed the most modern and up-to-date appraisal system possible. Any system, of course, is only as good as those who use it, so I therefore ask the assessment branch to provide a complete programme for the education and the training of municipal assessors.

During the past year the assessment branch reached agreement with the Institute of Municipal Assessors and the Institute of Local Government at Queen's University to rewrite the course of study offered through the extension department of Queen's for the training of municipal assessors. The board of governors of the Institute of Municipal Assessors has established an education committee comprised of two members representing the Institute of Municipal Assessors, two members representing Queen's University, and one member representing the assessment branch of the department.

This committee was charged with preparing the new course of instruction which has been rewritten, and which will include some new subjects not available in the old course, such as history of local government, economics, land economics, and administration, and appraisal theory and practice.

The new course will be available to students in the current year and The Department of Municipal Affairs will pay the production costs. I have also agreed that the department, on my recommendation, will refund to successful students 60 per cent of the cost of the course. And I am in the hope that the municipalities where these assessors are employed will give consideration to perhaps refunding the other portion, the balance of the cost of the course.

I might say, in my experience, that I tried this while I was mayor in Timmins some ten years ago or more and found it very advantageous. It gave support to the members of the staff who felt that they were being supported by their council in taking these courses, in order to improve their knowledge of the particular work in which they were engaged, whether it was those people who worked in the assessment department or in the clerk's and treasurer's office.

Insofar as additional training is concerned, the assessment branch has implemented a comprehensive in-service training programme to complement the correspondence course offered by Queen's.

The third point I mentioned in my opening remarks about assessment practices dealt with the county assessment system, or the programme to enlarge the assessment jurisdictions.

There are now two counties operating under the provisions of the section of The Assessment Act which provides that when a county assessment commissioner may be appointed he shall have all the powers and duties and privileges of an assessor. The adoption of this system has a number of advantages and benefits: First, the assessment commissioner in charge of one assessment office will be responsible for making all assessments within the county and will work towards more equitable assessment on a county-wide basis. Second, the assessment commissioner will be in a position to employ competent appraisers who will make valuations of real property for assessment purposes throughout the county.

In this way, smaller municipalities will enjoy many benefits accruing from a sound assessment basis which they otherwise, I suggest, could not afford. And by sharing costs, the county can afford to adopt modern up-to-date procedures and techniques, including the latest—that of mechanical processing equipment.

This allows, Mr. Chairman, for not only more soundly based local assessments, but also a higher degree of equalization and a more realistic apportionment of county costs.

In order to encourage the establishment of the office of county assessment commissioner, regulations have been issued under The Assessment Act whereby the department makes substantial financial assistance available to those counties adopting the system.

